CHAPTER V. THE HEALING OF NAAMAN

1. but he was a leper. A famous general, great and honoured in the land, but a leper; the but's of life can be even more grim and heart-breaking than its if's.

2. in bands. In marauding bands, raiding the territory of Israel even when no formal war existed between the two peoples. Since the death of Solomon, Syria had become a persistent and implacable foe to Israel.

3. recover. Cure; lit. 'receive him back'—as the cured leper was received back into the camp and city life from which he had been excluded (Kimchi).

5. took with him. As a gift to the Prophet, who, as we learn later, would receive nothing at his hands.

ten talents of silver. A very large sum.

6. recover him of his leprosy. By using his influence with the Prophet. Only the main point of the letter is quoted. The king of Israel is addressed as a vassal.

7. rent his clothes. As at the receipt of bad news. The king trembles at the Syrian's demand, and thinks he is seeking a pretext for war.

times, and thy flesh shall come back to thee, and thou shalt be clean.' 11. But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said: 'Behold, I thought: He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and wave his hand over the place, and recover the leper. 12. Are not Amanah and Pharpar, the rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean?' So he turned, and went away in a rage. 13. And his servants came near, and spoke unto him, and said: 'My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee: Wash, and be clean?' 14. Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in the Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God; and his flesh came back like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean. ¶ 15. And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him; and he said: 'Behold now, I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel; now therefore, I pray thee, take a present of thy servant.' 16. But he said: 'As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none.' And he urged him to take it; but he refused. 17. And Naaman said: 'If not, yet I pray thee let there be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth; for thy servant will

v. 12. אסנה ק'

11. Naaman was wroth. Elisha did not come out to him, and Naaman was enraged that the Prophet was no respecter of persons—in his case. He was especially annoyed at the simplicity of the remedy: he expected the Prophet to come out and play the wonder-worker.

12. Amanah and Pharpar. His patriotic pride is wounded: why was he bidden to wash in that wretched, turbid, tortuous stream—the Jordan—rather than in the pure and flowing waters of his own native Amanah and Pharpar?

The Prophet's bidding has a wider meaning than the ephemeral counsel to the ancient Syrian general. Whenever mankind seeks to be cured of moral leprosy, it can gain that cure only in Jordan, only in rivers of Jewish inspiration and teaching. The waters of India and Greece, of Italy and Germany, may be far greater, stronger, clearer; but they cannot restore moral health to the ailing soul of man. In the crises of life, whether of the individual or of humanity, we turn not to the Vedas or Homer, nor to Dante or Goethe, but to the Book of Psalms.

15. he returned. Naaman was grateful. 'It is difficult to conceive the transport of a man cured of this most loathsome and humiliating of all earthly afflictions' (Farrar).

take a present. Accustomed to the ways of heathen priests, he could not imagine that so great a service would be rendered to a wealthy applicant without monetary reward.

16. I will receive none. Like Abraham, who would not take even a 'shoe-latchet' from the people he befriended (Gen. xiv, 23).

17. two mules' burden of earth. i.e. of the Holy Land, for constructing an altar to the God of Israel in Syria. Naaman held the heathen view that a deity was only powerful in the country which recognized him; and therefore that outside Palestine, God could only be worshipped on soil from Israel's land!

henceforth offer neither burnt-offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD. 18. In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant: when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I prostrate myself in the house of Rimmon, when I prostrate myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.' 19. And he said unto him: 'Go in peace.' So he departed from him some way.

18. v. כתיב ולא ק'

18. prostrate myself. Or, 'bow myself.' Though he knows that the Lord God of Israel is the only living God, he must accompany his master on state occasions to the temple of his god Rimmon. The phrase, to bow in the house of Rimmon, has thus become proverbial to indicate unwilling and perfunctory homage, or dangerous and dishonest compromise.

19. go in peace. Elisha neither approves nor disapproves. Probably he did not wish to place too great a strain upon the devotion of the new convert. The phrase, 'go in peace' means lit. 'go towards peace.' In the ideology of our Sages the whole of life is a journey towards Peace; only when life is completed has man reached life's goal and entered into real peace. Hence the formula when the mortal remains are committed to the grave: 'May he come to his place in peace.'

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying:
 ¶ 2. This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing: he shall be brought unto the priest. 3. And the priest shall go forth out of the camp; and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper; 4. then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two living clean birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop. 5. And the priest shall command to kill one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water. 6. As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water. 7. And he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let go the living bird into the open field. 8. And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and bathe himself in water, and he shall

CHAPTER XIV, 1–32. PURIFICATION OF A LEPER

2. day. The Rabbis took this phrase literally, and ruled that the purification could not take place at night.

he shall be brought. To an appointed place outside the camp. Or, 'it (the news of the leper's recovery) shall be brought (i.e. reported) to the priest' (Ehrlich); see on XIII, 2.

3. out of the camp. To the leper.

shall look. The priest had to satisfy himself that the disease had completely passed away, before commencing the ceremony of purification.

4. command to take. The birds and articles required for the ceremony were not necessarily provided by the leper himself. This fact disposes of the idea that the birds were intended as a sacrifice. And further, no portion of the birds was placed on the Altar. The first part of the ceremony must be interpreted as a symbolic representation of the leper's restoration to life and his re-admission to the camp of Israel.

cedar-wood. The most durable of woods, with the strongest resisting power to decay; and therefore symbolical of the cured leper who had overcome the putrefying effects of his disease. Maimonides, however, declares, 'I do not know at present the reason of any of these things'; viz., the cedarwood, hyssop and scarlet.

scarlet. According to Rabbinic tradition, a band of wool, dipped in scarlet, was used.

hyssop. See on Exod. xii, 22; it was a convenient instrument for sprinkling, as its leaves readily absorb the liquid and freely give it out when shaken. It was used in ceremonies of purification where sprinkling was included (Num. xix, 6, 18), and therefore became later associated with the idea of cleanliness (Ps. li, 9).

5. kill one of the birds. For the blood required in the ceremony; as a contrast to the other bird, which was allowed to live, thus representing the state of death from which the leper has escaped and the new life to which he can now look forward.

running water. lit. 'living water'; i.e. water fresh from a spring, or a stream; the natural symbol for life, freshness, and purity. The blood flowed into the vessel which contained the water.

7. pronounce him clean. He could now rejoin his brethren, although a further ceremony was necessary before he was permitted to approach the Sanctuary.

let go the living bird. In like manner, the leper had been spared from death, and was free to enter the camp.

8. shave. This is part of the rites of purification, since the disease specially attacked the hair; see next v.

be clean; and after that he may come into the camp, but shall dwell outside his tent seven days. 9. And it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall shave all his hair off his head and his beard and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off; and he shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and he shall be clean. 10. And on the eighth day he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish, and three tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour for a meal-offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. 11. And the priest that cleanseth him shall set the man that is to be cleansed, and those things, before the LORD, at the door of the tent of meeting. 12. And the priest shall take one of the he-lambs, and offer him for a guilt-offering, and the log of oil, and wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.* 11. 13. And he shall kill the he-lamb in the place where they kill the sin-offering and the burnt-offering, in the place of the sanctuary; for as the sin-offering is the priest's, so is the guilt-offering; it is most holy. 14. And the priest shall take of the blood of the guilt-offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot. 15. And the priest shall take of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand. 16. And the priest shall dip his right finger in

12. guilt-offering. This was the first of the three offerings sacrificed on behalf of the cleansed leper. He had been completely cut off from his people, and therefore his first act was to renew his covenant, as an Israelite, with God. It was explained on vii, 1 that the guilt-offering was not an expiatory sacrifice, but a forfeit which was offered when a man had made restitution. By his severance from the life of the community, the leper had failed to bring his dues to the Sanctuary, and so took the earliest opportunity to place his forfeit on the Altar.

wave-offering. See on vii, 30; and Num. viii, 11. The act of waving had the additional significance of dedicating the bringer of the sacrifice to the service of the Most High.

13. is the priest's. See vii, 6 f.

15. of the log of oil. i.e. some of the additional log, mentioned in v. 10. This was different from the anointing of the High Priest, upon whose head the oil was poured (viii, 12). Here the priest only 'put' it on the person's head.

And of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the guilt-offering. 18. And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed; and the priest shall make atonement for him before the LORD. 19. And the priest shall offer the sin-offering, and make atonement for him that is to be cleansed because of his uncleanness; and afterward he shall kill the burnt-offering. 20. And the priest shall offer the burnt-offering and the meal-offering upon the altar; and the priest shall make atonement for him, and he shall be clean.* 111 ( v). ¶ 21. And if he be poor, and his means suffice not, then he shall take one he-lamb for a guilt-offering to be waved, to make atonement for him, and one tenth part of an ephah of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal-offering, and a log of oil; 22. and two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, such as his means suffice for; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering. 23. And on the eighth day he shall bring them for his cleansing unto the priest, unto the door of the tent of meeting, before the LORD. 24. And the priest shall take the lamb of the guilt-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD. 25. I put. This form of speech is used, because all phenomena are ultimately the consequence of the Divine will.

36. empty the house. Until the priest formally pronounced the house infected, its contents were not unclean. Similarly, a man was not leprous until the priest passed the verdict upon him. All the furniture was removed before the inspection, to save it from being defiled, should the house be condemned.

37. streaks. i.e. the plague had eaten into the material of the wall.

40. take out the stones. This is analogous to cutting out the infected part of a garment (XIII, 56).

they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house. 43. And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that the stones have been taken out, and after the house hath been scraped, and after it is plastered; 44. then the priest shall come in and look; and, behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a malignant leprosy in the house: it is unclean. 45. And he shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house; and he shall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place. 46. Moreover he that goeth into the house all the while that it is shut up shall be unclean until the even. 47. And he that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes; and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes. 48. And if the priest shall come in, and look, and, behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered; then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed. 49. And he shall take to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop. 50. And he shall kill one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water. 51. And he shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times. 52. And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet. 53. But he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open field; so shall he make atonement for the house; and it shall be clean.*v. ¶ 54. This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy, and for a scall; 55. and for the leprosy of a garment, and for a house; 56. and for a rising, and for a scab, and for a bright spot; 57. to teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean; this is the law of leprosy.

43-45. The reappearance of the plague in the house was analogous to the recurrence of the malady in a leper (XIII, 7 f) and demanded measures of the utmost stringency.

47. lieth in the house. This presupposes a longer stay in the house, and therefore the garments are likewise defiled.

48. shall come in. After the house had been in quarantine for a week, or at the end of the second week.

53. make atonement for the house. Only purification is implied; cf. Exod. xxix, 36, where the priests are told to make atonement for the Altar.

54. this is the law. These four concluding verses summarize the contents of the section, chaps. XIII-XIV.

57. to teach. The word is to be connected with, 'This is the law' (v. 54) and properly signifies 'to give a decision'. The meaning is: 'This is instruction concerning all manner . . . to decide when it is unclean.'

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses and to Aaron, saying: 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ When any man hath an issue out of his flesh, his issue is unclean. 3. And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness. 4. Every bed whereon he that hath the issue lieth shall be unclean; and every thing whereon he sitteth shall be unclean. 5. And whosoever toucheth his bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 6. And he that sitteth on any thing whereon he that hath the issue sat shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 7. And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 8. And if he that hath the issue spit upon him that is clean, then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 9. And what saddle soever he that hath the issue rideth upon shall be unclean. 10. And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him shall be unclean until the even; and he that beareth those things shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 11. And whomsoever he that hath the issue toucheth, without having rinsed his hands in water, he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 12. And the earthen vessel, which he that hath the issue toucheth, shall be broken; and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water. 13. And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue, then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes; and he shall bathe his flesh in running water, and shall be clean. 14. CHAPTER XV, 1-30. IMPURITY OF ISSUES

This chapter treats of physical secretions which render a person unclean, precluding him from coming into contact with anything appertaining to the Sanctuary. The gentile was excluded from these regulations, since he was exempt from all obligations in respect to the Holy Place. In v. 2 the reference is to a chronic discharge. The person thus is regarded as a source of ritual, no less than physical, infection. The uncleanness described in v. 16-18 did not apply to laymen. It involved merely absence from the 'camp', which in Rabbinic exegesis was taken to mean the Sanctuary proper and the Levite encampment around the Sanctuary. It also involved abstention from sacrificial food (terumah and maaser). If the prescribed priestly ablutions had been taken, the prohibition ceased in regard to the Levite encampment and maaser.

A provision, ascribed to Ezra, to make v. 16-18 apply also outside the Sanctuary in the case of laymen reading in the Law, was in time disregarded; see Maimonides, Yad II, 1, 4.

v. 19-30 deal with menstruation; on which see xviii, 19.

day he shall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the LORD unto the door of the tent of meeting, and give them unto the priest. 15. And the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make atonement for him before the LORD for his issue. *v1 (v11). ¶16. And if the flow of seed go out from a man, then he shall bathe all his flesh in water, and be unclean until the even. 17. And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the flow of seed, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the even. 18. The woman also with whom a man shall lie carnally, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even. ¶19. And if a woman have an issue, and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be in her impurity seven days; and whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the even. 20. And every thing that she lieth upon in her impurity shall be unclean; every thing also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean. 21. And whosoever toucheth her bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 22. And whosoever toucheth any thing that she sitteth upon shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 23. And if he be on the bed, or on any thing whereon she sitteth, when he toucheth it, he shall be unclean until the even. 24. And if any man lie with her, and her impurity be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days; and every bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean. ¶25. And if a woman have an issue of her blood many days not in the time of her impurity, or if she have an issue beyond the time of her impurity; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness she shall be as in the days of her impurity: she is unclean. 26. Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her impurity; and every thing whereon she sitteth shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her impurity. 27. And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 28. But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean. *v11. 29. And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tent of meeting. 30. And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and

CAP. VII. 1

3. Now there were four leprous men at the entrance of the gate; and they said one to another: 'Why sit we here until we die? 4. If we say: We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there; and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Arameans; if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die.' 5. And they rose up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the

The theme of this Haftorah is again an incident in the life of Elisha during the siege of Samaria by the Syrians. It tells of four lepers who were facing death in that time of horror. All available food had been consumed, and even the refuse of the streets was sold at famine prices. The inhabitants were in the last stages of despair, and the king learns of women who had arranged to use their children for food! He blames the Prophet Elisha for all these calamities, as the Prophet no doubt encouraged the people to continue the resistance, and the king is determined to put him to death. However, when faced by the Prophet, he is overawed. Elisha then makes the astonishing announcement that the very next day God would send relief, and the famine would be at an end. A courtier standing by breaks out in mockery at the prediction. Signal punishment is announced to overtake him for this act of unbelief.

CHAPTER VII

3. at the entrance of the gate. Lepers were not permitted to live in the city. In the circumstances, they would naturally keep as near the entrance as possible.

4. fall unto. Desert to.
if they save us alive. If the Syrians killed them they would be no worse off; but the Syrians might spare their lives.

6. the noise of a great host. Thinking that mighty hosts were advancing against them. 'It was the result of one of those sudden unaccountable panics to which huge, unwieldy, heterogeneous Eastern armies, which have no organized system of sentries and no trained discipline, are constantly liable' (Farrar). The cradle of the Hittite power was in N. Syria, and Egypt was in the South. Accordingly the Syrians thought they were entrapped, and fled in confusion.

Arameans; and when they were come to the outermost part of the camp of the Arameans, behold, there was no man there. 6. For the LORD had made the host of the Arameans to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host; and they said one to another: 'Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us the kings of the Hittites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.' 7. Wherefore they arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life. 8. And when these lepers came to the outermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and they came back, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it. ¶ 9. Then they said one to another: 'We do not well; this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace; if we tarry till the morning light, punishment will overtake us; now therefore come, let us go and tell the king's household.' 10. So they came and called unto the porters of the city; and they told them, saying: 'We came to the camp of the Arameans, and, behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but the horses tied, and the asses tied, and the tents as they were.' 11. And the porters called, and they told it to the king's household within. 12. And the king arose in the night, and said unto his servants: 'I will now tell you what the Arameans have done to us. They know that we are hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp to hide themselves in the field, saying: When they come out of the city, we shall take them alive, and get into the city.' 13. And one of his servants answered and said: 'Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in the city—behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it; behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are consumed—and let us send and see.' 14. They took therefore two chariots with horses; and the king sent after the host of the Arameans, saying: 'Go and see.' 15. And they went after

And the people went out, and spoiled the camp of the Arameans. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, according to the word of the LORD. 17. And the king appointed the captain on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate; and the people trod upon him in the gate, and he died as the man of God had said, who spoke when the king came down to him. 18. And it came to pass, as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying: 'Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria'; 19. and that captain answered the man of God, and said: 'Now, behold, if the LORD should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be?' and he said: 'Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof'; 20. it came to pass even so unto him; for the people trod upon him in the gate, and he died.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT

CHAPTER XVI, 1-28. THE RITUAL OF THE ANNUAL CEREMONY OF PURIFICATION IN THE SANCTUARY

1. after the death. The unfortunate incident narrated in x, 1-3 gave occasion for instructions as to the time and manner in which the High Priest might enter the Holy Place. The death of Aaron's sons was a solemn warning addressed to the High Priest, that any desecration, whether it be on the part of the High Priest, or an ordinary priest, or the laity (see xv, 31), would be severely punished. See comment on x, 1 as to the reasons for the death of Aaron's sons—intoxication, unholy ambition, arbitrary tampering with the service, and introducing 'strange fire' into the Sanctuary. The story of Nadab and Abihu is a parable for Young Israel in every generation. 'He who is affected to tears while reading this portion of the Torah, taking its teaching to heart, will win forgiveness for his own sins and the blessing of old age for his children' (Zohar).

2. that he come not at all times. Only once a year, on the Day of Atonement, and with a due observance of prescribed rites.

3-10. HOW AARON IS TO COME INTO THE HOLY PLACE, HIS ATTIRE, AND THE OFFERING HE IS TO BRING

3. herewith. With the offerings and ceremonies set forth in the following verses. In later times the High Priest began to prepare himself for his functions seven days before the Sacred Day. During that time, he lived apart in a special portion of the Temple, and the elders read and expounded to him the ordinances of this chapter. The night prior to the Sacred Day he would pass sleepless, and be kept awake by readings from Job, Ezra, Chronicles and Daniel.

holy place. Not that he is to take the animals into the Holy Place, but their sacrifice is part of the prerequisite ceremony for entering there.

bullock . . . ram. These offerings are personal to the High Priest, and must be his own property. The atonement for his own sins was his first act on the Great Day. Only when purged of his own sin, was he fitted to secure forgiveness for the sins of others.

4. holy garments. In the Holy of Holies, he was not to be attired in his golden vestments, which on all other occasions he was to wear for 'splendour and distinction', but in simple garments of white linen—emblems of the lowliness and purity of thought demanded by the Sacred Day. For the same reason, white linen garments were for many centuries worn, and in some communities are still worn, by worshippers on the Day of Atonement. The Rabbis gave an additional reason for this custom. 'When men are summoned before an earthly ruler to defend themselves against some charge, they appear downcast and dressed in black like mourners. Israel appears before God arrayed in white, as if going to a feast, confident that all who return penitently to their Maker will receive not condemnation but pardon at His hands.'

the linen mitre shall he be attired; they are the holy garments; and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and put them on. 5. And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two he-goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering. 6. And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and make atonement for himself, and for his house. 7. And he shall take the two goats, and set them before the LORD at the door of the tent of meeting. 8. And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats: one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for Azazel. 9. And Aaron shall present the goat upon which the lot fell for the LORD, and offer him for a sin-offering. 10. But the goat, on which the lot fell for Azazel, shall be set alive before the LORD, to make atonement over him, to send him

5. of the congregation. Rites of purification were to be performed for the community as a body, and each individual was to regard himself as essentially a unit in the Brotherhood of Israel. The Confession on the Atonement Day is in the plural: 'We have transgressed, we have dealt treacherously, etc.'; see on xxiii, 27.

6. shall present. The presentation is that alluded to in i, 3 f—at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.

his house. The order of priests, who were sons of Aaron. The Rabbis, however, understood 'his house' to mean his wife; and the High Priest was not allowed to officiate on the Day of Atonement unless his wife was living at the time. In the traditional account of the rites of the Day of Atonement, preserved in the Mishnah, the High Priest made this confession: 'O God, I have sinned, I have committed iniquity, I have transgressed against Thee, I and my household. I beseech Thee by Thy Name, grant Thou atonement for the sins, and for the iniquities, and for the transgressions wherein I have sinned, and committed iniquity and transgressed against Thee, I and my household.' In his confession, the High Priest used the ineffable Name of God, the Tetragrammaton, in its true pronunciation; whereupon the assembled priests and people in the Court prostrated themselves to the ground, and exclaimed, 'Blessed be His Name, Whose glorious kingdom is for ever and ever.'

8. lots. By taking from an urn tablets, alike in size and shape, describing the destination of each animal (Mishnah).

Azazel. Better, dismissal. In the Septuagint this mysterious Hebrew word is rendered, 'the one to be sent away'; which agrees with the term used in the Mishnah. The Authorised Version, following the Vulgate, has 'scapegoat'; i.e. the goat driven, or escaping, into the wilderness. The Heb. Azazel, however, is not a proper name, but a rare Hebrew noun (עֲזָאזֶל contracted to עֲזָאזֶל) meaning, 'dismissal' or, 'entire removal' (RV Margin, Gesenius, Hoffmann, and the Oxford Hebrew Dictionary). It is the ancient technical term for the entire removal of the sin and guilt of the community, that was symbolized by the sending away of the goat into the wilderness.

In the Talmud, Azazel was translated by 'steep mountain', and was applied to the rock in the wilderness from which in later times the animal was hurled.

At an early period, however, the word עֲזָאזֶל became personified, just as were the Hebrew words for the Underworld (Sheol) and Destruction (Abaddon). Thereupon, the strangest theories and legends grew up in connection with 'Azazel'. In certain Jewish traditions, for example, Azazel, or Azalzel, is foremost among the Fallen Angels who taught unrighteousness to the children of men (Book of Enoch). This view that the word Azazel is the name of a demon in the wilderness was shared by Ibn Ezra and Nachmanides, and is to-day adopted by most Bible critics. But it is quite untenable. The offering of sacrifices to 'satyrs' is spoken of as a heinous crime in the very next chapter, xvii, 7; homage to a demon of the wilderness cannot, therefore, be associated with the holiest of the Temple-rites in the chapter immediately preceding.

9. offer him. lit. 'make it,' i.e. appoint it. The offering of this goat is not mentioned until v. 15. The High Priest exclaimed over it, 'for the LORD, a sin offering' (Sifra).

10. over him. Refers to the confession of sins over the head of the animal.

away for Azazel into the wilderness. 11. And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and shall make atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself. 12. And he shall take a censer full of coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the veil. 13. And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the LORD, that the cloud of the incense may cover the ark-cover that is upon the testimony, that he die not. 14. And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the ark-cover on the east; and before the ark-cover shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times. 15. Then shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering, that is for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and do with his blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the ark-cover, and before the ark-cover. 16. And he shall make atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleannesses of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions, even all their sins; and so shall he do for the tent of meeting, that dwelleth with them in the midst of their uncleanness. 17. And there shall be no man in the tent of meeting when he goeth in to make atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made and for his house. According to the Rabbis, 'house' here refers to the order of priests; and the High Priest repeated his confession (as in v. 6), adding after 'my household' the words, 'and the sons of Aaron, Thy holy people.'

11. present. lit. 'bring it near,' to the Altar to be slain.

12. a censer. Heb. 'the censer'; a censer made of gold was, according to the Mishnah, used on this day.

the altar. The brazen Altar in the Fore-court. before the LORD. See on i, 5.

within the veil. This is the first entrance of the High Priest into the innermost part of the Holy of Holies.

13. cloud of the incense. The purpose of the incense-smoke was to create a screen which would prevent the High Priest from gazing upon the Holy Presence.

On returning from the Holy of Holies, the High Priest in later times offered the following prayer: 'May it please Thee, O LORD our God, that this year may be a year of rain. Let there not be wanting a ruler belonging to the House of Judah. Let not Thy people Israel be in want, so that one Israelite may not be forced to beg his sustenance from another or from strangers; and hearken not to the prayer of travellers'—since they pray for rainless weather, which is a calamity in the Holy Land (Talmud).

14. sprinkle . . . upon the ark-cover. This act constituted the rite of expiation for the High Priest and the priestly order.

15. then shall he kill. The goat which had been designated by lot 'for the LORD' (v. 9).

16. uncleannesses. Besides the annual rite of atonement for the Community, there was also once a year a ceremonial cleansing of the Sanctuary from defilement through the presence of Israelites who were ritually unclean.

transgressions. This is defined by the Rabbis as alluding to the wilful entering of the holy precincts by a person who knew himself to be defiled. By 'sins' is meant those who entered without the knowledge that they were unclean.

17. no man. Not even the priests were to remain in the Tent while the ceremony of atonement was being performed. The awe of the occasion would be increased by the High Priest being quite alone in the Sanctuary.

And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the LORD, and make atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. 19. And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleannesses of the children of Israel. 20. And when he hath made an end of atoning for the holy place, and the tent of meeting, and the altar, he shall present the live goat. 21. And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, even all their sins; and he shall put them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of an appointed man into the wilderness. 22. And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land which is cut off; and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness. 23. And Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and shall put off the linen garments, which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there. 24. And he shall bathe his flesh in water in a holy place, and put on

18. shall go out. i.e. he shall go in the direction of the exit, towards the golden Altar of Incense.

19. cleanse it. From the defilement of the past year.

hallow it. Reconsecrate it for sacred use in the coming year.

20. and the altar. The golden Altar.

he shall present. Better, he brings near to himself. The ceremony of the 'scapegoat' took place in the Court.

21. confess. The High Priest placed his two hands on the goat to be sent away, and thereby, having confessed, symbolically transferred the people's sins to the head of the animal. The form of confession, as given in the Mishnah, was: 'O God, Thy people, the House of Israel, have sinned, they have committed iniquity, and they have transgressed against Thee.'

iniquities. The Heb. עָוֹן lit. means 'crookedness' and denotes a wilful departure from the law of God. Unlike the ordinary sacrifices, which were limited in their expiatory power to involuntary transgressions, the Day of Atonement and its sacrifices purged away wilful iniquities as well as errors and involuntary sins.

transgressions. The Heb. פָּשַׁע is stronger than 'transgression'; its lit. translation is 'rebellion'.

sins. The Heb. חטא denotes an unintentional deviation from the right path.

appointed. Or, 'in readiness' for that purpose.

22. a land which is cut off. A district effectually cut off from the encampment of Israel, so that the animal could not wander back. In later times the animal was cast down a precipice (see on v. 8), as it was no longer possible to send the goat to a place whence it would not return to inhabited parts. This chapter narrates the primitive custom in accordance with conditions in the Mosaic age, and is evidence of the antiquity of what is here described.

he shall let go. With this symbolic carrying away of the people's sins, cf. Micah vii, 19, 'Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.' These Prophetic words led to the institution of a similar rite—Tashlich—in connection with the New Year.

23. Aaron shall come. According to the Talmud, this verse refers to what happened after the sacrifice of the burnt-offerings described in v. 24 f.

24. in a holy place. A special chamber in the Court for the purpose.

his burnt-offering. The ram of the High Priest (v. 3) and the ram of the people (v. 5).

his other vestments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of the people, and make atonement for himself and for the people. *III(II). 25. And the fat of the sin-offering shall he make smoke upon the altar. 26. And he that letteth go the goat for Azazel shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he may come into the camp. 27. And the bullock of the sin-offering, and the goat of the sin-offering, whose blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, shall be carried forth without the camp; and they shall burn in the fire their skins, and their flesh, and their dung. 28. And he that burneth them shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he may come into the camp. ¶ 29. And it shall be a statute for ever unto you: in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and shall do no manner of work, the home-born, or the stranger that sojourneth among you. 30. afflict your souls. This Heb. phrase well indicated the spiritual aim of fasting. As the principal source of sin is the gratification of bodily appetites, the Fast is to demonstrate to the sinner that man can conquer all physical cravings, that the spirit can always master the body. The abstention from all food and from gratification of other bodily desires, however, must be accompanied by deep remorse at having fallen short of what it was in our power to be and to do as members of the House of Israel. Without such contrite confession, accompanied by the solemn resolve to abandon the way of evil, fasting in itself is not the fulfilment of the Divine command and purpose of the Day of Atonement. חשובה תפלה וצדקה—Repentance, Prayer and Beneficence—these can change the whole current of a man's life and destiny, and lead to perfect atonement. 'Let the wicked forsake his way, and the man of iniquity his thoughts; and let him return unto the LORD, and He will have shall atonement be made for you. Heb. יכפר עליכם. As the preceding and following verses describe the duties of the people on the Day, the subject of יכפר עליכם cannot be the High Priest; otherwise, he would have been specially mentioned. Rabbi Akiba held the subject to be God. 'Happy Israel—he exclaimed—before Whom do ye purify yourselves, and Who is it that purifieth you? Your Father Who is in Heaven; as it is said (Ezek. xxxvi, 25) "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean".' Note that the initiative in atonement is with the sinner. He cleanses himself on the Day of Atonement by fearless self-examination, open confession, and the resolve not to repeat the transgressions of the past year. When our Heavenly Father sees the abasement of the penitent sinner, He—and not the High Priest or any other Mediator—sprinkles, as it were, the clean waters of pardon and forgiveness upon him. 'The whole philosophy of monotheism is contained in this rallying-cry of Rabbi Akiba' (Hermann Cohen).

And he shall make atonement for the most holy place, and he shall make atonement for the tent of meeting and for the altar; and he shall make atonement for the priests and for all the people of the assembly. 34. Book, p. 258b and 259. Repentance can give rebellious sins the character of 'errors'; i.e. by his penitence, the sinner shows that his wilful sins were largely due to ignorance, and hence are treated by God as if they were 'errors'. גדולה תשובה שזדונות נעשות כשגגות. A modern philosopher of religion finds the keynote of the Day in Num. xv, 26 ('And all the congregation of the children of Israel shall be forgiven, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; for in respect of all the people it was done in error')—the verse recited before the opening of the evening service on Kol Nidré night.

before the LORD. From Whom alone, and not from the priest or the Altar, man is to seek atonement.

The order of the Heb. words is: 'from all your sins before the LORD shall ye be clean.' Thereon Rabbi Eleazar ben Azaryah founded the sublime teaching: 'For transgressions of man against God, the Day of Atonement atones (given repentance on the part of the sinner); but for transgressions against a fellow-man the Day of Atonement does not atone, unless and until he has conciliated his fellow-man and redressed the wrong he had done him.' The Confession (וידוי) deals almost exclusively with moral trespasses against our fellowmen. Especially numerous are the terms denoting sins committed with the tongue—falsehood, slander, frivolous and unclean speech. The Rabbis, who certainly did not underrate ritual offences, deemed moral shortcomings to be infinitely graver, and hence confined the Confession to them.

31–34. These verses explain that the ceremonies of the Day of Atonement are for all time. Although the Torah has been naming 'Aaron' as the atoning priest, whoever had been duly consecrated after him to the High Priest's office was eligible to perform the sacred functions prescribed in this chapter.

31. sabbath of solemn rest. The repetition is to impress the fact that cessation from labour and fasting must continue even when there are no longer priestly ceremonies (Wessely).

34. everlasting statute. The Day of Atonement survived the High Priesthood; nay, it gained in inwardness and spiritual power with the passing of the sacrificial system. 'The fasting and humiliation before God, the confession of sins and contrition for them, and fervent prayer for forgiveness, were even before the destruction of the Temple the reality in regard to the Day of Atonement, of which the rites in the Temple were but a dramatic symbol' (Moore). The Rabbis had stressed the Prophetic teaching that without repentance no sacrificial rites were of any avail. With the cessation of sacrifices, therefore, repentance was left as the sole condition of the remission of sins. 'In our time when there is no Temple and no Altar for atonement, there is repentance. Repentance atones for all iniquities' (Maimonides). The Day of Atonement, the Rabbis further declare, will never pass away, even if all other Festivals should pass away. And indeed as long as Israel does not lose its soul, so long shall the Day of Atonement remain. See also on xxiii, 27–32.

CHAPTER XVII. HOLINESS IN MEAT FOODS

This chapter may be looked upon as supplementary to the first part of Leviticus. It ordains that meat-foods must be free from idolatrous taint. This taint assumed two forms: sacrificing to 'satyrs' (v. 7), and eating the blood (10–14).

and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them: This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, saying: ¶ 3. What man soever there be of the house of Israel, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat, in the camp, or that killeth it without the camp, 4. and hath not brought it unto the door of the tent of meeting, to present it as an offering unto the LORD before the tabernacle of the LORD, blood shall be imputed unto that man; he hath shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from among his people. 5. To the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices, which they sacrifice in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the LORD, unto the door of the tent of meeting, unto the priest, and sacrifice them for sacrifices of peace-offerings unto the LORD. 6. And the priest shall dash the blood against the altar of the LORD at the door of the tent of meeting, and make the fat smoke for a sweet savour unto the LORD. 7. And they shall no more sacrifice their sacrifices unto the satyrs, after whom they go astray. This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations.*v(1111). ¶ 8. 3-7. ON SLAYING ANIMALS FOR FOOD

3. killeth an ox. Evidently refers to a time when the slaughtering of animals for food was rare, and only at a family festivity or other formal gathering was meat consumed. During the wandering in the Wilderness the people lived on manna; and only exceptionally would it happen that an animal was slaughtered for consumption. Every such slaughtering had to be a sacrificial act; it had to take place at the Sanctuary; and it was deemed a peace-offering. In Deut. xii, 20 f, the law is modified in anticipation of the fact that Israel would soon be spread over a large area; for the requirement that every animal killed for food should be brought to the Sanctuary could apply only when the entire Community lived in the closest proximity to it.

According to the Rabbis this section refers only to animals intended as sacrifices—that they must not be offered except at the door of the Tabernacle.

4. an offering. A peace-offering is meant; see next v.

7. satyrs. lit. 'goats.' They were deemed to be sylvan gods or demons who inhabited waste places (Isa. xiii, 21; xxxiv, 14). The worship of the goat, accompanied by the foulest rites, prevailed in Lower Egypt. This was familiar to the Israelites, and God desired to wean them from it (cf. Josh. xxiv, 14; Ezek. xx, 7).

Some commentators point to this verse as giving a main purpose of the sacrificial system in the Torah; viz. gradually to wean Israel away from primitive ideas and idolatrous practices. The manner of worship in use among the peoples of antiquity was retained, but that worship was now directed towards the One and Holy God. 'By this Divine plan, idolatry was eradicated, and the vital principle of our Faith, the existence and unity of God, was firmly established—without confusing the minds of the people by the abolition of sacrificial worship, to which they were accustomed' (Maimonides).

10-14. BLOOD NOT TO BE EATEN

10. eateth any manner of blood. The prohibition, which included the eating of flesh containing blood, has been stated in general terms in Lev. III, 17; VII, 26 f.

The reason for these repeated solemn injunctions is not given. The purpose may be to tame man's instincts of violence by weaning him from blood, and implanting within him a horror of all bloodshed. The slaying of animals for food was in time taken away altogether from the ordinary Israelite, and was relegated to a body of pious and specially trained men, Shochetim. These injunctions have undoubtedly contributed to render the Israelites a humane people. 'Consider the one circumstance that no Jewish mother ever killed a chicken with her own hand, and you will understand why homicide is rarer among Jews than among any other human group' (A. Leroy Beaulieu).

The Jewish method of slaughter (Shechitah) causes the maximum effusion of blood in the animal; and the remaining blood is extracted by means of the washing and salting of the meat. For the prescribed regulations, see Dayan Lazarus, The Ways of Her Household, Part I.

In regard to the terms nevelah and terefah in v. 15, the flesh of an animal that died of itself (nevelah), or was torn by beasts (terefah), is emphatically forbidden. The latter term (terefah) includes flesh of all animals ritually slaughtered but found to contain injuries or organic diseases, whether patent or determined by inspection of the animal after Shechitah. Animals not killed strictly in the prescribed Jewish manner are technically also termed nevelah. The flesh of animals which are not found on Rabbinic inspection to be sound is forbidden food.

11. life of the flesh. The vital principle of the animal was in the blood. While life and blood are not quite identical, the blood is the principal carrier of life. With heavy loss of blood, vital powers dwindle; and if the loss continues, they cease altogether. Blood is therefore something sacred. It is withdrawn from ordinary use as an article of food, and reserved for a sacred symbolic purpose.

I have given it to you. i.e. I have appointed it to be placed on the Altar on your behalf. These words effectually dispose of any idea that the life of the animal presented to God was intended as a bribe. The blood on the Altar was for the spiritual welfare of the worshipper, not for the gratification of God.

maketh atonement by reason of the life. Which it contains. The use of blood, representing life, in the rites of atonement symbolized the complete yielding up of the worshipper's life to God, and conveyed the thought that the surrender of a man to the will of God carried with it the assurance of Divine pardon.

12. therefore I said. i.e. because the life resides in the blood, for that reason is its consumption prohibited.

13. cover it with dust. The blood being the symbol of life, it had to be treated in a reverent manner, in the same way that a corpse must not be left exposed. The covering with dust was the equivalent of burial in the case of a dead body. According to Hoffmann, the exhortation to act reverently in regard to the blood of an animal was not liable to be forgotten in connection with animals that were admitted as sacrifices, but some reminder was necessary in the case of those other animals that could not be brought as sacrifices; hence the command to cover the blood.

among them, that taketh in hunting any beast or fowl that may be eaten, he shall pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust. 14. For as to the life of all flesh, the blood thereof is all one with the life thereof; therefore I said unto the children of Israel: Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh; for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof; whosoever eateth it shall be cut off. 15. And every soul that eateth that which dieth of itself, or that which is torn of beasts, whether he be home-born or a stranger, he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even; then shall he be clean. 16. But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh, then he shall bear his iniquity.

CHAPTER XVIII

PROHIBITION OF UNLAWFUL MARRIAGES, UNCHASTITY AND MOLECH WORSHIP

Chapters xi-xvii, the subject of which is ritual uncleanness and its purification, are now followed by chapters xviii-xx, dealing with moral uncleanness and its punishment. The laws and precepts contained in xviii-xx lie at the very root of the life of purity and righteousness, and form the foundation principles of social morality. The first place among these is given to the institution of marriage (xviii). Marriage, the cornerstone of all human society, is here conceived in a purely ethical spirit; and any violation of the sacred character of marriage is deemed a heinous offence, calling down the punishment of Heaven upon both the offender and the society that condones the offence. Impurity in marriage, incestuous promiscuity among near relations, and other abominations are unpardonable sins, blighting the land and its inhabitants with defilement. 'In graphic brevity and comeliness, Lev. xviii surpasses all other passages of similar import; more delicately and at the same time more seriously, such matters cannot be spoken about' (Ewald).

If the cultural condition of any people can be measured by the purity of its home life, then Israel's is the primacy in moral culture among the peoples. In Israel, marriage is regarded as a Divine institution, under whose shadow alone there can be true reverence for the mystery, dignity, and sacredness of life. Marriage is a primary religious duty. He who has no wife—say the Rabbis—lives without comfort, help, joy, blessing, atonement (i.e. true religious communion with God). The Jewish husband—they declare—loves his wife as himself, and honours her more than himself. 'I will work for thee, I will honour thee, I will support thee, even as it beseemeth a Jewish husband to do,' is to this day the husband's vow in the Jewish marriage-contract. The affectionate consideration shown to the Jewish wife, however, as well as the domestic purity and devotion that are the glory of Jewish womanhood, are both largely the fruit of the laws and warnings in these chapters of Leviticus. They effectively prevented the submergence of Israel in the sea of heathen impurity that covered the whole ancient world. These laws proved the ramparts for a new human ideal—that of the Holiness of Home—an ideal that became one of the distinguishing features of the Jewish people throughout the ages.

Chapter xviii forms one of the Readings of the Day of Atonement. 'The selection was no doubt prompted by the desire to inculcate on the most solemn day in the Calendar the paramount duty of purity and self-control. And there is but little doubt that obedience to these behests has been, by Divine Providence, one of the most potent factors in the preservation of Israel' (Hermann Adler).

statutes. lit. 'laws engraven,' denotes the ordinances which control the life of the nation. The vicious practices of paganism, especially of Egypt and Canaan, were sanctioned by their national laws. 'Both the practices and the laws were contrary to Reason, Conscience, and the Divine Will' (Wogue).

4. ordinances. Israel was receiving a new code of laws that was to take the place of what they had seen in force in Egypt and would find in Canaan. Judgments are laws dictated by the moral sense, like the prohibition of theft: statutes are distinctive precepts addressed to the Israelite, like the prohibition of swine's flesh; see on Gen. xxvi, 5.

do . . . keep. The two verbs are complementary. Do is the mechanical performance; keep includes the idea of study and understanding of the principle underlying the command. Only where there is intelligent conformity to the letter of the Torah, does its spirit become a transforming power in the lives of men.

to walk therein. This phrase occurs only in two other places in the Torah (xx, 23; xxvi, 3). It means not merely to obey the behests of Religion once or twice, but to walk in them, to order life in accordance with them.

I am the LORD. i.e. I who command these precepts am the LORD your God. The refrain—'I am the LORD' gives peculiar solemnity to the demands which it accompanies in these chapters. Man must obey, because it is God who commands. 'The Divine imperative is its own self-sufficient motive' (Moore).

5. if a man do. The Rabbis emphasize the word man. Rabbi Meir used to say, 'Whence do we know that even a heathen, if he obeys the law of God, will thereby attain to the same spiritual communion with God as the High Priest? Scripture says, "which if a man do, he shall live by them"—not priest, Levite, or Israelite, but man' (Talmud).

he shall live by them. He will gain the life eternal in the world to come (Onkelos, Targum Jonathan, Rashi); yea, through it alone can he gain true life in this world, as the life of the wicked is not really Life (Hoffmann). The plain meaning is, that by adhering to the precepts of God, a man will enjoy well-being and length of days; cf. 'that your days may be multiplied, (Deut. xi, 21). 'No country was ever prosperous and strong in which the sanctity of family life and the value of personal purity were not upheld and practised' (W. R. Inge).

The Rabbis take the words 'he shall live by them' to mean that God's commandments are to be a means of life and not of destruction to His children, וחי בהם ולא שימות בהם. With the exception of three prohibitions, all commandments of the Law are, therefore, in abeyance whenever life is endangered. No man, however, is to save his life at the price of public idolatry, murder, or adultery. This was the decision of the Rabbis in the war of extermination which the Roman Emperor Hadrian waged against Judaism; see on xxii, 32.

6-18. FORBIDDEN MARRIAGES

All unions between the sexes that are repellent to the finer feelings of man, or would taint the natural affection between near relations, are sternly prohibited. Primary prohibited marriages are:— (a) blood - relations — mother, sister, daughter, grand-daughter, father's sister and mother's sister; and (b) cases of affinity—the wives of blood-relations and of the wife's blood-relations. All unions—whether temporary or permanent—between persons belonging to these groups are classed as 'incestuous' (ערויות). They have no binding force whatsoever in Jewish Law and can in no circumstance be deemed a 'marriage'; hence, no divorce (Get) is required for their dissolution. The issue are illegitimate (mamzerim).

The Rabbis have expanded the primary Prohibited Degrees in the ascending and descending line. These expansions are known as 'secondary Prohibited Marriages, שנייות'; e.g. as the mother is forbidden, so is the grandmother and greatness: I am the LORD. ¶ 7 The nakedness of thy father, and the nakedness of thy mother, shalt thou not uncover: she is thy mother; thou shalt not uncover her nakedness. ¶ 8. The nakedness of thy father's wife shalt thou not uncover: it is thy father's nakedness. ¶ 9. The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother, whether born at home, or born abroad, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover. ¶ 10. The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover; for theirs is thine own naked-grandmother; as the step-mother so is the grandfather's wife; as the daughter-in-law, so is the grandson's wife. Marriages of the secondary Prohibited Degrees must be dissolved by a divorce, and the children are legitimate.

The above Prohibited Degrees of marriage, whether Biblical or Rabbinical, are based on instinctive abhorrence and natural decorum. Jewish sectaries, however, as well as various Christian Churches, largely under the influence of Roman Law, greatly extended these prohibitions, until even an alliance between the great-grandchildren of two brothers and sisters was by them deemed forbidden. The Church introduced further prohibitions in connection with 'spiritual kinship'; e.g. a godfather could not marry the child at whose baptism he was sponsor. The hardship resulting from such unbounded extension of Prohibited Degrees by the Roman Law and Church, was to some extent mitigated by dispensation, which the Church granted in certain circumstances; but this led to great abuses. Both dispensation and 'spiritual kinship' are, of course, unknown in Judaism.

The Rabbis explain that prior to the Revelation at Sinai, only the following marriages were prohibited: viz. mother, father's wife, married woman, and sister on mother's side. Hence Abraham was permitted to marry his half-sister; and Jacob, two sisters.

6. none of you . . . nakedness. No one shall contract a marriage with a blood-relation. The broad principle (כלל) is here stated, and then particulars are given in v. 7-18.

There was dire need for the legislation in this chapter. Many of the incestuous marriages herein mentioned were common among contemporary peoples, and were recognized in parts of the Roman world as late as the early Middle Ages. In Egypt, marriage with a sister was quite usual, especially in royal families. The Greeks countenanced marriage with a half-sister. Among the Persians, marriages with mother, sisters, and daughters were expressly recommended as meritorious and as most pleasing to the gods. Such were the usages, not of barbarous and reckless tribes unused to moral restrictions, but of the cultured nations of antiquity. 'It is evident that Mosaism brought the world a new message in the matter of marriage' (Dillmann). When we think of the influence of this Chapter on the Western and Near Eastern peoples, we realise that Judaism is indeed a religious civilization!

near of kin. lit. 'flesh of his flesh'; his flesh and blood. Within a certain degree of consanguinity two relatives are regarded as one flesh, and one person.

uncover their nakedness. Used for, 'to take to wife' in alliances which can never be regarded as 'marriage'. It is employed here, instead of the usual phrase, in order to bring out more strikingly the moral hideousness and animality of the transgression (S. R. Hirsch).

7. of thy father. Forbids a union between mother and son, as a dishonour both to father and mother.

8. father's wife. Forbids union with a step-mother. As marriage makes man and wife one (Gen. ii, 24), a step-mother was regarded as a blood-relation of the nearest kind.

It was a practice among Eastern heirs-apparent to take possession of the father's wives, as an assertion of their right to the throne, that action identifying them with the late ruler's personality in the eyes of the people. This explains Reuben's conduct in Gen. xxxv, 22, and Absalom's in II Sam. xvi, 20-22.

9. born at home. A half-sister born of a legal marriage; see xx, 17.

born abroad. A half-sister born either of an illegal marriage or out of wedlock (Ibn Ezra).

10. thy son's daughter. As marriage with a step-grand-daughter is forbidden in v. 17, this verse seems superfluous. The Rabbis, however, understood it as referring to the daughter of an illegitimate son or daughter.

Marriage with a daughter is not expressly forbidden; because, in view of this prohibition of the grand-daughter, it is self-evident.

14. v. קמ"ז ב"ק

11. thy father's wife's daughter. Descent from the same mother was long deemed a closer degree of relationship than descent from the same father (Gen. xx, 12). Consequently, v. 9 might have been misunderstood to apply to either 'thy sister (viz. of the same mother) who is the daughter of thy father,' i.e. a full sister; or, to 'the daughter of thy mother', i.e. a half-sister from the same mother but different father. Union with a half-sister from the same father but different mother might thus have been thought permissible. Hence the need of a clear prohibition of the daughter from the same father by another mother, as is here given (Hoffmann).

12. thy father's sister. This prohibition, too, was new to Israelites and contrary to their former usage (Exod. vi, 20).

14. thy father's brother. Union with the wife of a father's brother is an offence against two persons whom marriage had made 'one flesh' (see v. 8). For that reason, her nephew could not marry her after his uncle's death. The Rabbis declare marriage with the wife of a mother's brother equally illegal.

15-18. Cases of affinity by marriage.

15. daughter-in-law. Forbids marriage between a man and his daughter-in-law after divorce or the husband's death. It was deemed a foul offence, almost on a plane with 'marriage' with a daughter.

16. brother's wife. An exception to this rule is given in Deut. xxv, 5 f, where the obligation is placed upon a man to marry his brother's widow, should his brother have died without issue.

17. lewdness. lit. 'harlotry'. The union of a man with both a woman and her daughter or grand-daughter, whether at the same time or after the death of one, is considered an execrable action, an 'enormity' (RV Margin).

18. to be a rival to her. Better, as a fellow-wife. Sisterly love would thereby turn to rivalry and hatred.

in her life-time. During the first wife's life-time, even if he had divorced her, he could not marry her sister. After her death it was permitted, and was even deemed by the Rabbis a praiseworthy thing to do, as no other woman would show the same affection to the orphaned children of the deceased sister.

19-23. IMMORAL PRACTICES FORBIDDEN

19. impure. In xv, 24, the same matter had been dealt with from the point of view of the ritual defilement that is thereby incurred. Here the practice is denounced as contrary to the principles of moral purity; see also xx, 18.

While recognizing the sacred nature of the estate of wedlock, Judaism prescribes continence even in marriage. 'The Jewish ideal of holiness is not confined to the avoidance of the illicit; its ideal includes the hallowing of the licit' (Moore). It categorically demands reserve, self-control, and moral freedom in the most intimate relations of life. It ordains the utmost consideration for the wife not only throughout the monthly period of separation (niddah), but also during the seven following days of convalescence and recovery (taharah), which are terminated by ritual purification through total immersion either in a fountain,

Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind; it is abomination. 23. And thou shalt not lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith; neither shall any woman stand before a beast, to lie down thereto; it is perversion. ¶ 24. Defile not ye yourselves or a 'gathering of living water' (mikweh, in later Hebrew, mikvah; see on xi, 36). By the reverent guidance in these vital matters which these laws afford, Jewish men have been taught respect for womanhood, moral discipline, and ethical culture. As for Jewish women, they were, on the one hand, given protection from uncurbed passion; and, on the other hand, taught to view marital life under the aspect of holiness (קדושה).

Even apart from their purely religious side, the importance of these regulations, scrupulously observed throughout the generations in Israel, cannot be over-estimated. They have fostered racial sanity and well-being, and have proved as favourable to hygiene as to morals. The overwhelming majority of Jewish women still live, thank God, under the 'yoke' of these laws—to their own good and the biologic good of the Jewish people. Striking testimony has been given by scientists to the fact that, though health is not put forward as the primary purpose of these regulations, yet such is their indubitable result. These laws of marital continence are now held by some scientists to accord with the fundamental rhythm in woman's nature. While medical opinion is not unanimous on this difficult subject, there can be no doubt as to the significance of statistics like the following: an investigation, conducted over a number of years at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, in connection with 80,000 Jewish women who observe niddah and taharah laws, showed that the proportion of those suffering from uterine cancer was one to fifteen of non-Jewish women of corresponding social and economic status. Even more noteworthy is the difference in the proportion of a certain form of cancer among Jewish and non-Jewish men respectively (Sorsby, Cancer and Race, 1931). 'The Mosaic Code again stands out as an astonishing example of inspired wisdom and foresight which should appeal with redoubled force to the enlightened minds of to-day. Discipline and self-restraint are perhaps the lessons most needed for the present times' (Lieut.-Col. F. E. Freemantle, Chairman, International Cancer Conference, London, July, 1928).

For a brief account of the traditional laws of niddah and taharah, see Dayan Lazarus, The Ways of Her Household, Part II (Myers and Co., 1923). See also Rabbi David Miller, The Secret of the Jew; his Life—his Family (Oakland, Calif.).

20. thy neighbour's wife. This prohibition is so vital to human society that it is included in the Ten Commandments, immediately after the protection of life, as being of equal importance with it (Ewald); see also note on xx, 10.

21. set them apart. Or pass through the fire. We have here the first mention in the Bible of the dreadful practice of child-sacrifice to a deity of the surrounding heathen Semites. Israel's Teachers shudder at this hideous aberration of man's sense of worship, and they do not rest till all Israel shares their horror of it.

Sexual impurity, especially when it is allied with, or elevated into, a form of worship, as it was in the cults of Baal and Astarte, dehumanizes, and leads to the deadening of the holiest human instincts.

neither shalt thou profane. Better, that thou profane not; such savage idolatry being an infamous travesty of all religion or adoration of God.

22. with mankind. Discloses the abyss of depravity from which the Torah saved the Israelite. This unnatural vice was also prevalent in Greece and Rome.

23. perversion. 'A violation of nature and of the Divine order' (Dillmann); cf. Exod. xxii, 18; Lev. xx, 15 f.

The almost incredible bestialities, revealing the hideous possibilities of corrupt human nature, enumerated in v. 21–23, are but too well attested in laws, customs, and legends of the ancient and medieval world. They are not unknown in modern societies. Nowhere in literature is there such an uncompromising condemnation of these offences as in xviii and xx. It led to their extirpation in the midst of Israel, and eventually to their moral outlawry among all peoples that came under the sway of the Hebrew Scriptures.

24–30. An exhortation to lay to heart the fate of the Canaanites, whose loathsome customs, disruptive of social morality, would bring about their annihilation.

For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off from among their people. 30. Therefore shall ye keep My charge, that ye do not any of these abominable customs, which were done before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I am the LORD your God.

24. defile not ye yourselves. Whenever sex is withdrawn from its place in marriage and separated from its function as the expression of reverent and lawful wedded love (whereby its quality is completely changed), the person concerned is defiled. The Rabbis deem sexual immorality the strongest of defilements (טומאה), cutting man off from God.

any of these things. The words refer to all the foregoing—the forbidden marriages, the neglect of marital restrictions, as well as unnatural abominations.

25. the land was defiled. Only moral offences, and not ceremonial transgressions, are said to defile the land. Every 'enormity' first defiles the person who commits it, be he a Canaanite or an Israelite, and he in turn defiles the land (Büchler).

I did visit the iniquity thereof. The land (i.e. its inhabitants) is punished. Through pestilence and drought, its inhabitants are vomited out in the same manner as the human system rejects food which is disagreeable to it. The verbs in this verse visualize the future as though it had actually come into being.

29. shall be cut off. In most of the offences mentioned, the penalty prescribed is death. With the remainder, the culprits were expelled from the Community and presumably from the country, since their presence contaminated the land.

30. keep My charge. The Rabbis understood this phrase in the sense of 'guard My charge'; i.e. it is the duty of the Religious Authorities to make a 'fence round the Law', in order to keep men far from sin, and to warn and instruct the people as to the seriousness and sacredness of these prohibitions.

I am the LORD your God. The former inhabitants indulged in unnatural vices because the worship of their gods was demoralizing. It is otherwise with Israel. The Lord is their God, and His service is elevating and spiritualizing. Hence there is here a natural transition to the next chapter with its opening command, 'Ye shall be holy; for I the LORD your God am holy.'

For Ezekiel's life and message, see pp. 178, 244, and 350; and the introductions to Haftorahs Parah and Hachodesh at the end of this volume.

The Sedrah ordains strict regulations for assuring the religious and moral purity of Israel; while the Haftorah is a terrible indictment of Jerusalem for callous violation of these regulations and prohibitions. 'The sins mentioned in Lev. xviii were those which disgraced the heathen inhabitants of Canaan whom the Israelites were to cast out. The commission of like sins would ensure like judgment' (Speaker's Bible). This Haftorah forms part of a prophecy delivered in 590 B.C.E. Four years later, the Jewish State fell, Jerusalem was captured, the Temple burnt, and the larger portion of the People carried into Babylonian exile.

Ezekiel's role in those times that tried men's souls was a manifold one. He began as the denouncer of Israel, and ended as Israel's comforter. It was his task to utter a cry of doom, unrelenting and fierce, against Jerusalem and its inhabitants. With the destruction of the Temple, however, he opens wide the gates of hope, and prophesies an outpouring of the Divine Spirit that would lead to contrition and penitence, and the consequent resurrection of Israel in the Holy Land.

The Fall of Jerusalem and the Destruction of the Temple had left Israel spiritually stunned. Were the Israelites of that generation so morally degenerate—they asked—so especially godless as to have deserved nothing less than national annihilation and all the horrors of siege and exile? 'The way of the LORD is not equal,' many were saying to themselves (Ezek. xviii, 25). Israel was overwhelmed by doubt as to the existence of a Righteous Ruler of the Universe.

First of all, therefore, Ezekiel deemed it necessary to vindicate the ways of God with Israel. He passes in review the entire past of Israel; and, unlike the other Prophets, he declares it to have been one long chain of ingratitude and sin. The reason for the Prophet's pitiless vehemence is plain: it is only when Israel is sincerely repentant of its apostasies and abominations, it is only when Israel sees that its sufferings are the just chastisement of a holy God, that its redemption and resurrection can begin.

A great danger faces the Prophet; he may succeed too well in his denunciation of his people and condemnation of its entire past (Cornill). He may end in planting despair in the hearts of the exiles, and make them exclaim, 'If such has been Israel's past, Israel never deserved to live; and now that it is a valley of dry bones, Israel's story is at an end (Ezek. xxxvii, 11). "Our hope is lost, we are clean cut off".' He meets that danger by striking two notes; one is that God desires not the destruction, but the repentance, of Israel. 'Say unto them, As I live, saith the LORD God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?' And the other note is, that God's glory is bound up with the resurrection of Israel. God will restore them, not because Israel deserves restoration, but because God's glory demands it; see Haftorah Parah at the end of this volume.

The terrible earnestness of this great Preacher of Repentance wrought a wondrous change in Israel. The result of his ministry is, as C. G. Montefiore rightly says, unique in the history of humanity. A fragment of a small people, forcibly transplanted to an enemy's land, remains there for half-a-century without disintegrating or coalescing with its environment, and returns unimpaired to its own soil and resumes its own life, with national and religious identity heightened and strengthened!

to shed blood. By form of law; see 1 Kings xxi. These crimes were the order of the day among other ancient peoples, and were looked upon as part of the normal course of human events. In Israel alone did there arise teachers of religion who were dumbfounded at human ferocity, as at something against nature and reason; and whose cry of indignation at these inhumanities re-echoed the wrath of the Deity. 'Greece and Rome had their rich and poor, just as Israel had, and the various classes continued to slaughter one another for centuries; but no voice of justice and pity arose from the fierce tumult. Therefore, the words of the Prophets have more vitality at the present time, and answer better to the needs

13-19. THE PUNISHMENT

13. I have smitten My hand. In grief.

14. can thy heart endure. The suffering that will result from thy transgressions.

15. consume thy filthiness out of thee. The chastisements of God are not vindictive, but intended to purge the nation of its sin.

16. thou shalt be profaned in thyself. Or, 'thou shalt take thine inheritance' (AV; Kimchi), i.e. of punishment and shame.

and thou shalt know that I am the LORD. Punishment will purify you, and lead you to acknowledge Him as the God of Justice and Holiness.

18. dross. The people are to be tried in the furnace of affliction. Jerusalem, and all that it contains, will be subject to the fire of God's wrath. Only the dross will be burnt away. The purified remnant shall survive the fire.

19. I will gather you. The certainty of the siege approaches, and the people from the surrounding country take refuge within the walls of Jerusalem (Lofthouse). In brief, the end is at hand.

VII. KEDOSHIM

(CHAPTERS XIX-XX)

CHAPTER XIX. A MANUAL OF MORAL INSTRUCTION

This remarkable chapter occupies the central position in Leviticus, and therefore in the Pentateuch. The Rabbis rightly regarded it as the kernel of the Law and declared that 'the essentials of the Torah (רוב גופי תורה) are summarized therein' (Sifra). This chapter has in fact been looked upon as a counterpart of the Decalogue itself, the Ten Commandments being in essence repeated in its verses (I and II in v. 4; III in v. 12; IV and V in v. 3; VI in v. 16; VII in v. 29; VIII and IX in v. 11-16; and X in v. 18). The precepts contained in the chapter may, at first sight, appear a medley of the spiritual and ceremonial—fundamental maxims and principles of justice and morality alongside of ritual laws and observances. The Torah, however, regards human life as an indivisible whole, and declines to exclude any phase thereof from its purview; see introductory note to chapters XI-XVI.

2. HOLINESS AND THE IMITATION OF GOD

As the command, 'ye shall be holy, for I the LORD your God am holy,' dominates not only this chapter but the whole ethical legislation in Leviticus, it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the word holy (קדוש) in its ethical, as distinct from its ritual, signification. First, it denotes the sublime exaltedness and overpowering majesty of God: in the presence of that Divine holiness, mortal man feels 'but dust and ashes' and is crushed by the sense of his unworthiness (Isa. vi, 5). Secondly, holy expresses God's complete freedom from everything that makes men imperfect, and His recoil from everything impure and unrighteous; in the words of the Prophet, 'Thou art of eyes too pure to behold evil, and canst not look on mischief' (Hab. i, 13). Thirdly, holy stands for the fullness of God's ethical qualities—for more than goodness (טוב), more than purity (טהור), more than righteousness (צדיק); it embraces all these in their ideal completeness. 'The Holy One, blessed be He!' (הקדוש ברוך הוא) is the most common name for God in Rabbinical literature, as well as on the lips of the Jewish masses. In its ritual usage, the word 'holy' is applied to persons and things connected with the Sanctuary, or consecrated for religious purposes.

2. all the congregation. The Torah and its message of holiness is the heritage of the congregation of Israel. There was not to be a small class of 'specialists' in religion who dwelt apart, while the people were sunk in ignorance and superstition. Israel was to form a spiritual democracy; Deut. xxxiv; see note on Exod. xxii, 30.

ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy. Man is not only to worship God, but to imitate Him. By his deeds he must reveal the Divine that is implanted in him; and make manifest, by the purity and righteousness of his actions, that he is of God. Mortal man cannot imitate God's infinite majesty or His eternity; but he can strive towards a purity that is Divine, by keeping aloof from everything loathsome and defiling (xi, 44); and especially can he imitate God's merciful qualities. This 'imitation of God' is held forth by the Rabbis as the highest human ideal. 'Be like God; as He is merciful and gracious, so be thou merciful and gracious. Scripture commands, Walk ye after the LORD your God. But the LORD is a consuming fire; how can men walk after Him? But the meaning is, by being as He is—merciful, loving, long-suffering. Mark how, on the first page of the Torah, God clothed the naked—Adam; and on the last, He buried the dead—Moses. He heals the sick, frees the captives, does good even to His enemies, and is merciful both to the living and the dead' (Talmud). These merciful qualities, therefore, are real links between God and man; and man is never nearer the Divine than in his compassionate moments. Dr. Schechter has pointed out that the Imitation of God is confined by the Rabbis to His attributes of mercy and graciousness. 'The whole Rabbinic literature might be searched in vain for a single instance of the sterner Biblical attributes of God being set up as a model for a man to copy' (Abrahams).

Holiness is thus not so much an abstract or a mystic idea, as a regulative principle in the everyday lives of men and women. The words, 'ye shall be holy,' are the keynote of the whole chapter, and must be read in connection with its various precepts; reverence for parents, consideration for the needy, prompt wages for reasonable hours, honourable dealing, no tale-bearing or malice, love of one's neighbour and holy. 3. Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father, and ye shall keep My sabbaths: I am the LORD your God. 4. Turn ye not unto the idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the LORD your God. ¶ 5. And when ye offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, ye shall offer it that ye may be accepted. 6. It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow; and if aught remain until the third day, it shall be burnt with cordiality to the alien, equal justice to rich and poor, just measures and balances—together with abhorrence of everything unclean, irrational, or heathen. Holiness is thus attained not by flight from the world, nor by monk-like renunciation of human relationships of family or station, but by the spirit in which we fulfil the obligations of life in its simplest and commonest details: in this way—by doing justly, loving mercy, and walking humbly with our God—is everyday life transfigured. See also p. 315.

3-4. FUNDAMENTAL MORAL LAWS

3. ye shall fear . . . his father. The first precept stressed is reverence for parents. Neglect of filial duty vitiates a man's whole attitude to life, and places the ideal of holiness out of his reach; see p. 298. 'If we have failed in our duty towards our parents, we are not likely to succeed in our relations towards others' (Foerster).

fear . . . his mother. lit 'stand in awe of . . . his mother'. In the Decalogue the father is mentioned before the mother, and the word used is honour instead of fear. The Rabbis suggest the following reason for the difference: the father is the parent who disciplines the child; the mother is richer in manifestations of affection and kindness. The child would consequently have 'love' for the mother, but 'stand in awe' before the father. Therefore, the Torah insists on the child showing love and reverence to both. The term 'fear' in this verse is that used in reference to God. 'Dear to God is the honouring of father and mother, for Scripture employs the same expressions about honouring and revering parents as about honouring and revering Himself' (Talmud). For the child, his father and mother are more than ordinary mortals; and, in fact, the Fifth Commandment is in the Decalogue the connecting link between our duties towards God and our fellowmen. Many are the beautiful sayings in Rabbinical literature in regard to this Commandment, but none more beautiful than the story of Dama. Dama, a heathen dealer in jewels in Ascalon, had a stone such as was required to replace one of the precious stones in the High Priest's breastplate. A deputation from Jerusalem came to him to negotiate for its purchase; and he agreed to sell it for one hundred dinars, but when he went into an inner room to fetch the stone, he found that his father was asleep in that room. Dama came back, and said he could not after all sell the stone. The deputation offered two hundred dinars, three hundred, a thousand dinars—but in vain. Soon after, his father having waked, Dama ran after the Temple emissaries with the jewel; but he refused to take more than the original one hundred dinars of the first offer. 'I will not make any profit from the honour which I paid to my father,' he said. Filial reverence, the Rabbis held, was a dictate of Natural Religion, and therefore of universal application; and it is characteristic of their broad humanity that they selected the action of a contemporary heathen as a perfect example of filial piety.

ye shall keep My sabbaths. The connection of these two precepts is significant. Even as honouring of parents stands foremost among human duties, the sanctification of the Sabbath is the first step towards holiness in man's spiritual life. For the Sabbath is not only a day of cessation from work, but the weekly opportunity for communal worship and spiritual growth; see p. 297. These two commands are placed side by side in order to teach that the fear of parents must not exceed the fear of God. Should they demand anything that contravenes God's law, then the child must place his duty to God before that to his parents (Talmud).

I am the LORD your God. This phrase (often in the shorter form, I am the LORD) occurs sixteen times in this Chapter. It is the Divine seal set to the enactments of the law. It 'points to God at once as the Holy One and as the Judge; it is meant both to encourage and to awe; both to exhort to vigilance and to menace with punishment' (Kalisch).

4. idols. lit 'things of nought, non-entities'; i.e. things that have no real existence; see Jer. xiv, 14.

5-8. RITUAL LAWS

5. when ye offer. Or 'if ye offer'. See III, 1 and VII, 15-20. Note that the form used is not the imperative—'ye shall offer'; sacrifices are voluntary (Kimchi). The main concern of Scripture seems to be not so much that a sacrifice shall be brought, as, if brought, how it shall be brought; i.e. that it be offered in strict accordance with the regulations prescribed for avoiding heathen associations.

fire. 7. And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is a vile thing; it shall not be accepted. 8. But every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the holy thing of the LORD; and that soul shall be cut off from his people. ¶ 9. And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corner of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleaning of thy harvest. 10. And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and for the

9-10. CONSIDERATION FOR THE POOR

9. corner of thy field. What is here commanded is a statutory charge on one's harvest, to which the English poor rate is analogous. It does not exclude private and voluntary assistance, according to the generous impulse of the giver.

Consideration for the poor distinguishes the Mosaic Law from all other ancient legislations, such as the Roman Law. The object of the latter seems to be primarily to safeguard the rights of the possessing classes. In the Torah, the poor man is a brother, and when in need he is to be relieved ungrudgingly not only with an open hand but with an open heart. In his noble self-defence, Job (xxx, 17-20) protests:

Never have I eaten my morsel alone,
Without sharing it with the fatherless;
Never saw I any perish for want of clothing
But I warmed him with fleece from my lambs,
And his loins gave me their blessing.

The Rabbis continued this doctrine, and declared pity to be a distinguishing trait of the Jewish character. If a Jew—they held—shows himself lacking in consideration for a fellowman in distress or suffering, we may well doubt the purity of his Jewish descent. 'There is no ethical quality more characteristic of Rabbinic Judaism than Rachmonuth—pity. The beggar whose point of view is that you are to thank him for allowing him to give you the opportunity for showing Rachmonuth, is a characteristically Jewish figure' (Montefiore).

gleaning. The ears of corn which fall to the ground at the time of reaping.

11-16. DUTIES TOWARDS OUR FELLOWMEN

These precepts restate the fundamental rules of life in human society that are contained in the Second Table of the Decalogue. These moral principles were expanded by the Rabbis and applied to every phase of civil and criminal law.

11. ye shall not steal. 'Even as a practical joke; or, in order to enable another to profit by the four- or five-fold restitution which thou shalt have to make; or, to reclaim by stealth thine own stolen property, lest thou seem a thief' (Sifra). Everything that has the appearance of stealing is strictly forbidden, lest a man become habituated to the act of stealing (Shulchan Aruch). Especially reprehensible is 'stealing the good opinion of others' (גיבת דעת)—by any manner of misrepresentation, 'publicity,' or flattery deceiving others into having a better opinion of him or his doings than he deserves. ראשון שבגנבים גונב דעת (Mechilta, Mishpatim). 'Let a man earn the good opinion of his fellowmen, but let him not steal it' (S. R. Hirsch). A classical example is afforded by Absalom's manner of ingratiating himself with all who felt discontent at 'the law's delay', suggesting that if he were king, things would be very different. 'And Absalom used to rise up early, and stand beside the way of the gate: and it was so, that when any man had a suit which should come to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him and said, . . . See, thy matters are good and right; but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee. Absalom said moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice! . . . So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel' (II Sam. xv, 2-6).

nor lie. 'Let your Yes be righteous, and your No be righteous. He who exacted retribution from the generation of the Flood will exact it of the man who does not stand by his word. Truth is one of the pillars of the Universe; it is God's own seal. The liar is an outcast from the Divine fellowship. Men too punish him, for he is not believed even when he speaks the truth. The good man is he who is what he seems' (Talmud). The truth, however, must be spoken in love. Truthfulness must be moral: it ceases to be truthfulness and becomes an abominable form of lying when it is used as a tool of revenge or malice in order to ruin another or for putting him to open shame.

'A truth that's told with bad intent Beats all the lies you can invent' (Blake).

Thou shalt not oppress thy neighbour, nor rob him; the wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee all night until the morning. 14. 12. and ye shall not swear. And indicates that the verse is to be closely associated with the preceding one. 'If thou hast stolen, thou wilt end by falsely denying, lying, and swearing by My Name to a falsehood' (Sifra)—profaning the Name of God for the purpose of deceit and fraud.

13. oppress. 'Defraud' (Moffatt). In Deut. xxiv, 14, 'a hired servant' is substituted for 'thy neighbour'. 'Oppressing' a hired servant means taking advantage of his helplessness and paying him less than his due for his work.

14. curse the deaf. Defame the deaf, or anyone who cannot hear, and so cannot vindicate his own character.

nor put a stumbling-block before the blind. 'Trip up a blind man' (Moffatt), either in sport or malice. Alas for the prevalence of human callousness and cruelty that render the formulation of such a precept necessary.

'Deaf' and 'blind' are typical figures of all misfortune, inexperience, and moral weakness. This verse is a warning against leading the young and morally weak into sin, or provoking them to commit irretrievable mistakes. The following are typical violations of this ethical precept: he who gives disingenuous advice to the inexperienced; he who tempts the Nazirite to break his oath not to drink wine; he who sells lethal weapons to weak or dangerous characters—all these transgress the command 'Thou shalt not put a stumbling-block before the blind'. Equally so does the man who administers corporal punishment to a grown-up son: it may make that son forgetful of filial duty, and in blind anger commit an unpardonable offence (Talmud).

fear thy God. Who is the avenger of the helpless; of the deaf or absent man who cannot protect himself from the reviling which he has not heard; of the 'blind' man who cannot avoid the stumbling-block of which he is not aware.

Furthermore, the man who deliberately gives harmful advice may allege the noblest of intentions. But Scripture exhorts him to 'fear God', who searches the innermost recesses of the human heart and knows its secret thoughts. See the note on Exod. i, 17, showing that fearing God means natural piety and fundamental humanity.

15. respect the person of the poor. 'You shall not be partial to a poor man' (Moffatt). With all its sympathy for the poor and helpless, the Torah fears that justice might be outraged in favour of the poor man when he is in the wrong. Even sympathy and compassion must be silenced in the presence of Justice. In this Scriptural command, as in Exod. xxiii, 3 (Thou shalt not favour a poor man in his cause) 'there is a sublimity of moral view, which compels the reverence of all' (Geiger).

nor favour. The judge must not say, 'This man is rich and well connected; how can I put him to shame by deciding against him?' (Sifra).

in righteousness. There is to be neither prejudice in favour of the poor, nor dread of offending the great, but justice; see on Exod. xxiii, 3. Thus, one of the litigants is not to be permitted to state his case at length, and the other bidden 'to cut it short'. One litigant must not be allowed to be seated in court, and the other kept standing (Sifra). 'The judge should feel as though a sword were suspended above his head throughout the time he sits in judgment' (Talmud).

Another authoritative explanation of in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour is, 'Judge every man in the scale of merit (לכף זכות); refuse to condemn by appearances, but put the best construction on the deeds of your fellowmen' (Talmud).

The teaching of this and the preceding verses is thus restated by the Prophet: 'Speak ye every man the truth with his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you devise evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath; for all these are things that I hate, saith the LORD' (Zech. viii, 16, 17).

nor favour the person of the mighty; but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour. 16. Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people; neither shalt thou stand idly by the blood of thy neighbour: I am the LORD. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart; thou shalt surely rebuke thy neighbour, and not bear sin because of him. 18.

16 בְּצֶדֶק תִּשְׁפֹּט עַמִּיִּתְּךָ: לֹא תֵעָמֵד לֹא תִעָמֵד

תִּקַּח וְלֹא־תִטַּח אֶת־בִּגְדְּךָ עָלָיו וְאַחֲרָיֶיךָ לִרְעוּתָהּ בְּמִתָּךְ אֲנִי

16. go up and down as a talebearer. lit. 'go up and down as a pedlar'. This expressive idiom is here applied to a person who travels about dealing in scandal and malicious hearsay, getting the secrets of people and retailing them wherever he goes (Rashi). A mischievous business, even if the report is true and told without malice (Maimonides). 'A more despicable character exists not; such a person is a pest to society, and should be exiled from the habitation of men' (Adam Clarke). Injurious gossip may often do as much harm as slanderous defamation. Hence the prayer, three times daily, 'O my God, guard my tongue from evil and my lips from speaking guile' (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 54). The slanderer, the man of the evil tongue (לשון הרע), the calumniator, is worse than a murderer, since he destroys a man's reputation, which is more precious than his life (Talmud). Hence the informer (moser) was deemed the most abandoned creature among all evil-doers to their kind.

Stand idly by the blood of thy neighbour. i.e. when his life is in danger. Do not stand idly by, watching with indifference thy fellowman in mortal danger through drowning, or attacked by wild animals, or robbers, without hastening to his rescue (Talmud). In protecting the life of another, it is permitted to take the life of the assailant, even as in self-defence. The Sifra gives a further application to this verse: if thy fellowman is accused of a crime, and evidence that would clear him of it is in thy possession, thou art not at liberty to keep silent.

17-18. PROHIBITION OF HATRED AND VENGEANCE: LOVE OF NEIGHBOUR

17. hate thy brother in thine heart. Nursing your grievance against your fellowman. Most of the hating in the world is quite unjustified, groundless hating for its own sake (שנאת חנם). 'Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart. Our Rabbis taught that if Scripture had merely said, "Thou shalt not hate thy brother," this precept might be explained to mean only that you must not injure him, nor insult him, nor vex him; and so the words "in thine heart" are added to forbid us even to feel hatred in our heart without giving it outward expression. Causeless hatred ranks with the three cardinal sins: Idolatry, Immorality, and Murder. The Second Temple, although in its time study of the Law and good works flourished and God's commandments were obeyed, was destroyed because of causeless hatred' (Achai Gaon). When it is fed by racial rivalry or religious bigotry, causeless hatred petrifies the heart and becomes organized malice. None has suffered; and is still suffering, from causeless hatred more than the Jewish People. The Talmud instances the Emperor Hadrian's conduct as typical of men swayed by such hatred. One day on Hadrian's journey in the East, a Jew passed the Imperial train and saluted the Emperor. Hadrian was beside himself with rage. 'You, a Jew, dare to greet the Emperor! You shall pay for this with your life.' In the course of the same day, another Jew passed him, and, warned by example, he did not greet Hadrian. 'You, a Jew, dare to pass the Emperor without a greeting,' he angrily exclaimed. 'You have forfeited your life.' To his astonished courtiers he replied: 'I hate the Jews. Whatever they do, I find intolerable. I therefore make use of any pretext to destroy them.' So are all anti-Semites; so are all slaves of 'causeless hatred'.

rebuke thy neighbour. A precept extremely difficult of fulfilment; it is as difficult to administer reproof with delicacy and tact, as it is to receive reproof. Reproof must, of course, be offered in all kindness, otherwise it fails of its purpose; and if it entails putting a man to shame in public, it is mortal sin. No matter how much learning and good works the man who commits such a sin may possess, he has no share in the world to come—says a great Mishnah teacher.

sin because of him. Unless there is a frank statement from the aggrieved party, the hatred or dislike smouldering in his heart may lead him into sin.

18. thou shalt not take vengeance. Forbids repaying evil with evil. 'If a man finds both a friend and an enemy in distress, he should first assist his enemy, in order to subdue his evil inclination,' i.e. man's inborn passion for revenge (Talmud). Scripture inculcates this virtue both by precept and illustrious example. Joseph's conduct to his brethren, and David's to Saul, are among the noblest instances of forgiveness to be found in literature. Such examples are not confined to the Biblical period. Samuel ibn Nagrela was a Spanish-Jewish poet of the eleventh century, who was vizier to the king of Granada. He was one day cursed in the presence of the king, who commanded Samuel to punish the offender by cutting out his tongue. The Jewish vizier, however, treated his enemy kindly, whereupon the curses became blessings. When the king next noticed the offender, he was astonished that Samuel had not carried out his command. Samuel replied, 'I have torn out his angry tongue, and given him instead a kind one.' The Rabbis rightly declare, 'Who is mighty? He who makes his enemy his friend.'

The Jew is not 'a good hater'. Shylock is 'the Jew that Shakespeare drew'. He is not the Jew of real life, even in the Middle Ages, stained as their story is with the hot tears—nay, the very heart's blood—of the martyred race. The medieval Jew did not take vengeance on his cruel foes. The Jews hunted out of Spain in 1492 were in turn cruelly expelled from Portugal. Some took refuge on the African coast. Eighty years later the descendants of the men who had thus inhumanly treated their Jewish fellowmen were defeated in Africa, whither they had been led by their king, Dom Sebastian. Those who were not slain were offered as slaves at Fez to the descendants of the Jewish exiles from Portugal. 'The humbled Portuguese nobles,' the historian narrates, 'were comforted when their purchasers proved to be Jews, for they knew that they had humane hearts' (M. Joseph).

nor bear any grudge. Waiting for an opportunity to repay evil with evil. The Rabbis give the following explanation of these two phrases: 'If a man says, I will not lend you the tool you require, because you did not lend it me when I asked for it—that is vengeance. If a man says, I will lend you the tool, although you refused to lend it when I asked for it—that is bearing grudge.' In an ancient Jewish book, that has come down to us probably from Maccabean times, known as The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, we read: 'Love ye one another from the heart; and if a man sin against thee, cast forth the poison of hate and speak peaceably to him. If he confess and repent, forgive him. But if he be shameless and persist in his wrongdoing, even so forgive him from the heart, and leave to God the avenging. Beware of hatred; for it works lawlessness even against the Lord Himself. For it will not hear the words of the Commandments concerning the loving of one's neighbour. Love would quicken even the dead, and would call back them that are condemned to die; but hatred would slay the living.' The Rabbis declare, 'He who has a forgiving spirit is himself forgiven. Whosoever does not persecute them that persecute him, whosoever suffers wrong in silence and requites it not, they are deemed the friends of God.'

thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Heb. וְאָהַבְתָּ לְרֵעֶךָ כְּמוֹךָ; i.e. let the honour and property of thy fellowman be as dear to thee as thine own. These three Heb. words were early recognized as the most comprehensive rule of conduct, as containing the essence of religion and applicable in every human relation and towards all men. Even the criminal condemned to die, say the Rabbis, has a claim on our brotherly love, and we must spare him unnecessary suffering. Hillel paraphrased this rule into 'Whatever is hateful unto thee do it not unto thy fellow'; and declared it to be the whole Law, the remainder being but a commentary on this fundamental principle of the Torah. See Additional Note 'Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbour As Thyself', p. 563.

19-26. MISCELLANEOUS PRECEPTS

19. statutes. Laws for which the reason has not been revealed to us. However, the word may here mean, as in Jer. xxxiii, 25, fixed laws which God had instituted for the government of the physical universe. The purpose of the following regulations would then be: man must not deviate from the appointed order of things, nor go against the eternal laws of nature as established by Divine Wisdom. What God has ordained to be kept apart, man must not seek to mix together.

diverse kind. Josephus suggested as the reason for the prohibition of mixed breeding the fear that such unnatural union in the animal world might lead to moral perversion among human beings.

two kinds of seed. See Deut. xxii, 9 mingled together. Heb. shaatnez. See Deut. xxii, 11, where the law is more explicitly stated: 'mingled stuff, wool and linen.' 'Nature does not rejoice in the union of things that are not in their nature alike' (Josephus).

20. bondmaid. Here we have an example of 'prohibited mixture in the sphere of moral relationship'—the union with a heathen bondmaid betrothed to a Hebrew slave. The offence is not as serious as in the case of a betrothed nated for a man, and not at all redeemed, nor was freedom given her; there shall be inquisition; they shall not be put to death, because she was not free. 21. And he shall bring his forfeit unto the LORD, unto the door of the tent of meeting, even a ram for a guilt-offering. 22. And the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt-offering before the LORD for his sin which he hath sinned; and he shall be forgiven for his sin which he hath sinned. *III. ¶23. And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as forbidden; three years shall it be as forbidden unto you; it shall not be eaten. 24. And in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, for giving praise unto the LORD. 25. But in the fifth year may ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you more richly the increase thereof: I am the LORD your God. 26. Ye shall not eat with the blood; neither shall ye practise divination nor soothsaying. 27. Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. 28. Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor imprint any marks upon you: I am the LORD. 29. Profane not thy daughfreewoman; nevertheless, the act is branded as immoral and one to be punished.

There shall be inquisition. Better, 'there shall be a lashing,' or corporal punishment. The Heb. בקרת means a lash made of ox-hide (Ibn Ezra).

23. forbidden. lit. you shall regard its fruit as defective. The fruit tree in its first three years is to be regarded as a male infant during his first eight days; i.e. as unconsecrated (Dillmann). Its fruit was then stunted in its growth and unfit as a first-fruit offering to God; and hence forbidden for human use.

25. more richly. The trees become more productive if they are stripped of the blossoms in the early years.

26-31. PROHIBITION OF CANAANITE CUSTOMS

The context suggests that the allusion is to a heathenish rite of divination, well-known to the Israelites.

26. with the blood. 'They killed a beast, received the blood in a vessel or pot, and ate of the flesh of that beast, whilst sitting round the blood. They imagined that in this manner, the spirits would come to partake of the blood which was their food; brotherhood and friendship would be established with the spirits' (Maimonides). It is, however, taken by the Rabbis both in a literal sense ('do not eat flesh from an animal whose blood is yet in it', i.e. whose life has not yet departed), and as an ethical injunction ('the members of a Court whose decree of capital divination. Charms and incantations. Ancient life, whether in Egypt, Canaan, or Mesopotamia, was crushed under an intolerable weight of enchantment; magic, and demonology. The Israelite was freed from the incubus of superstition by these prohibitions, which constitute one of the great negations of Judaism; cf. Num. XXIII, 23.

soothsaying. Or, 'divination' by observing times and seasons and declaring one day 'lucky' and another 'unlucky'—a common practice among heathens.

27. round the corners. In this and the following verse, various mourning customs connected with the heathen worship of the dead are forbidden, as unbecoming the dignity of God's people and incompatible with loyalty to a God of holiness.

28. cuttings . . . for the dead. See on Deut. xiv, 1. Eastern peoples, in their excessive demonstration of grief at a bereavement, often gashed and mutilated themselves. The shedding of blood was also believed to have a sacrificial value for the dead person. Even apart from the prohibition of this idolatrous practice, the Torah inculcates reverence for the human body, as the work of God.

29. profane not thy daughter. A prohibition for a father to hand over his daughter to a man without the previous rites of 'sanctification'—i.e. without a legal marriage; as well as prohibition for a woman of her own free will to consort with a man without such legal marriage (Sifra). The use of the word profane is noteworthy. It presupposes the sacredness of womanhood; and it brands such an action as a profanation and a desecration of the sacred personality of a human being.

fall into harlotry. Looking upon the 'demand' for harlotry as a normal condition of things, and tolerating the consequent 'supply' of human beings for such life of shame.

30. sabbaths . . . sanctuary. The parenthetical insertion of this injunction may be intended to impress upon the Israelite that reverence for Sabbath and Sanctuary will keep him from the heathenish rites and immoralities mentioned in the preceding verses and that following.

31. familiar spirits. The English word 'familiar' here means 'attendant'. The wizard professes to know through the spirit attendant upon him, or residing within him, what is hidden from the ordinary person.

to be defiled. Physically, by coming into contact with the dead bones which were part of the paraphernalia of the wizard; and spiritually, by sinking into the mire of superstition inseparable from witchcraft and necromancy; see on xx, 6.

32-37. ETHICAL INJUNCTIONS

32. rise up before the hoary head. 'Hoary,' white with age. The ethical sublimity of this exhortation is not diminished by the fact that parallels exist among other ancient peoples, and that in the Orient reverence for old age is or was the rule until the present day.

honour the face of the old man. 'Honour the person of an old man' (Moffatt). The Rabbis enlarged the connotation of the word 'old' and made it include anyone who had acquired wisdom (זקן, זה שקנה חכמה). But even where there is no book-learning, there may be the matured wisdom of experience. A famous rabbi would stand up even before an aged heathen peasant, saying, 'What storms of fortune has this old man weathered in his life-time.'

thou shalt fear. Cf. on v. 14. Here, too, the inner motives of a man are involved, not only his outward acts.

33. a stranger. The duty of loving the stranger is stressed thirty-six times in Scripture and is placed on the same level as the duty of kindness to, and protection of, the widow and the orphan. 'The alien was to be protected, although he was not a member of one's family, clan, religious community, or people; simply because he was a human being. In the alien, therefore, man discovered the idea of humanity' (Hermann Cohen). See the comments on Exod. xxii, 20.

not do him wrong. Heb. לא תונו. Not only oppression by unrighteous deeds, such as taking advantage of his ignorance to overreach him. The Rabbis take the word in sense of 'offend', and they emphasize the peculiar heinousness of wounding the alien's feelings by insulting speech (אונאת דברים). Few modern peoples, alas, can truthfully be said to have learned this ethical precept.

34. as the home-born. There was to be one law only, the same for home-born and alien alike (xxiv, 22; Num. xv, 16); see p. 260. The stranger is to share in the corners of the field, the forgotten sheaf, and every form of poor relief. The tremendous seriousness with which justice to the stranger is inculcated is seen from the fact that, among the covenant admonitions at Mount Ebal, we read 'Cursed be he that perverteth the justice due to the stranger' (Deut. xxvii, 19). Israel was not permitted to hate even the Egyptian, the people that enslaved him. It was to transform those memories of bitter oppression into feelings of compassion to all the friendless and down-trodden. In other ancient codes, the stranger was born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God. 35. Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure. 36. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt. 37. And ye shall observe all My statutes, and all Mine ordinances, and do them: I am the LORD.*v.

CHAPTER XX

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2. Moreover, thou shalt say to the children of Israel: ¶ Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death; the people of the land shall stone him with stones. 3. I also will set My face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people, because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile My sanctuary.

thou shalt love him as thyself. Do to him what you would wish others to do unto you, if you were a stranger in a strange land. See Additional Note, 'Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbour As Thyself,' p. 563.

35. in judgment. Not an unnecessary repetition of the same phrase in v. 15. God abhors unrighteousness, i.e. dishonesty, in business. 'For all that do such things are an abomination unto the LORD' (Deut. xxv, 16).

CHAPTER XX. PENALTIES FOR UNLAWFUL MARRIAGES, MOLECH WORSHIP AND NECROMANCY

This chapter is a natural pendant to xviii and xix, and enumerates the acts that would debase Israel's life, and altogether destroy its ideal of Holiness. In an organized society, it is essential to institute penalties for the violation of enactments that are vital to its existence. Ruthless measures were indispensable against the abominable vices and hideous practices which Israel was in danger of transplanting into its own life from its Canaanite and Egyptian neighbours. Flaming jealousy for Israel's mission of Holiness, and gigantic energy on the part of its ethical guides and religious teachers, could alone have overcome the bestialities of heathendom.

Unsparring condemnation of the crimes did not, however, invariably lead to the unsparring punishment of everyone suspected of them. In Jewish Law, the presumption of innocence is given to the accused, and capital punishment requires two eye-witnesses to the premeditated commission of the crime. This alone rendered actual conviction in such cases a rare thing.

1-5. PENALTIES FOR MOLECH WORSHIP

2. strangers. Such horrors should not be permitted even to resident strangers on any false idea of toleration, or on the ground that it was no concern of the community what 'aliens' did.

people of the land. Heb. am ha-aretz. Here again it is better to translate, the National Council; i.e. the national representatives, acting on behalf of the nation, shall stamp out this hideous idolatry.

stone him. Stoning goes back to hoary Semitic antiquity, and was prescribed for crimes that demanded punishments with a deterrent effect upon the people. In later ages, the original method was modified to render it more humane. The Talmud tells that, in capital offences, delinquents were drugged in order to deaden the senses before execution.

will cut him off. This verse refers to the case of a man who performs the atrocity in private, so and to profane My holy name. 4. And if the people of the land do at all hide their eyes from that man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and put him not to death; 5. then I will set My face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off, and all that go astray after him, to go astray after Molech, from among their people. 6. And the soul that turneth unto the ghosts, and unto the familiar spirits, to go astray after them, I will even set My face against that soul, and will cut him off from among his people. 7. Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy; for I am the LORD your God. vi(vii). 8. And keep ye My statutes, and do them: I am the LORD who sanctify you. 9. For whatsoever man there be that curseth his father or his mother shall surely be put to death; he hath cursed his father or his mother; his blood shall be upon him. 10. And the man that committeth adultery to defile My sanctuary. 'The community of Israel which is sanctified to God' (Rashi); or the soil would be defiled by such an enormity (xviii, 27), and the defilement conveyed to the Sanctuary established upon it.

to profane My holy name. See xviii, 21.

4. hide their eyes. i.e. overlook it. For such an offence to be connived at and condoned by the authorities and nation is evidence of both religious demoralization and social decay. It furthermore proves that they too are on the threshold of succumbing to Molech worship (Strack).

5. his family. i.e. his sympathizers or accomplices. Ibn Ezra quotes an explanation which refers 'his family' to am ha-aretz in the preceding verse. They hide their eyes from his crime because they are of his family. Targum Jonathan renders this verse: 'And I shall choose My own time to attend to that man and to the members of the family who take him under their protection, and shall chasten them with painful trials; but the man himself I shall destroy.'

6. familiar spirits. See on xix, 31. The punishment is left in the hands of God; but as for the necromancer himself, the penalty is death by stoning (v. 27 below), since to cause others to sin is worse than sinning. Here, too, ruthlessness—social surgery—was required, if true and ethical religion was not to perish from the earth. 'Not to realize the vital necessity of these laws concerning witchcraft and the vital duty of its extirpation, is to fall a victim to the superstition that witchcraft was mere harmless make-believe that did not call for any drastic punishment. At the bottom of this sceptical attitude towards the laws of witchcraft is indifference towards the unique value of monotheism. In a conflict of this nature—witchcraft versus monotheism—there can be no hesitancy or mutual tolerance of opposite points of view. It is a question of To be or not to be for the ethical life' (Hermann Cohen).

7-21. LAWS BEARING ON IMMORALITY

7. sanctify yourselves. This and the following verses are introductory to the laws which follow. The first section deals with idolatry and heathenish superstition. The motive that should guide the life of the Israelite and restrain him from wrong actions is solemnly repeated; cf. xi, 44.

8. sanctify you. By electing you from all the nations to be My people, and by giving you laws and institutions designed to lead to a holy life. Before the performance of any religious precept, the Israelite repeats the Blessing: 'Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast sanctified us by thy commandments and hast commanded us . . .'

9. curseth. See Exod. xxi, 15, 17; Prov. xx, 20 ('Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his lamp shall be put out in the blackest darkness'). It was a capital offence; but the Rabbis, though they shared the horror with which the moral hideousness of such an action was viewed, endeavoured in various ways to render the carrying out of the penalty as rare as possible.

his blood shall be upon him. i.e. 'He has brought it upon himself that he should be killed' (Rashi). Some see in these Heb. words the formula used in pronouncing the condemnation.

with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, both the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death. 11. And the man that lieth with his father's wife—he hath uncovered his father's nakedness—both of them shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. 12. And if a man lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall surely be put to death; they have wrought corruption; their blood shall be upon them. 13. And if a man lie with mankind, as with womankind, both of them have committed abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. 14. And if a man take with his wife also her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedness among you. 15. And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death; and ye shall slay the beast. 16. And if a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman, and the beast: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. 17. And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness: it is a shameful thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of the children of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity. 18. And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness—he hath made naked her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood—both of them shall be cut off from among their people. 19. 10. committeth adultery. The repetition of the phrase and the substitution of neighbour's wife for another man's wife stress the heinousness of the offence. The consent of the husband is quite immaterial. Marriage is not merely a 'contract'; it is consecration, and adultery is far more than merely an offence against one of the parties to a contract. It is an offence against the Divine Command proclaimed at Sinai, and constitutes the annihilation of holiness in marriage (Z. Frankel).

11. father's wife. Stepmother; see xviii, 7 f.

13. mankind. See xviii, 22.

14. wife also her mother. Cf. xviii, 17; brands as 'wickedness' (or 'enormity') the union with the two women at the same time.

15. beast. See xviii, 23. Because it was the cause of the person's downfall, and would be a reminder to others of what had taken place.

17. see. Has the same meaning as 'uncover' in xviii, 9, 11.

shameful thing. Or, 'impiousness,' unholiness. The Heb. term is an expression of strongest moral detestation. The vehement condemnation of this crime may be due to the fact that, in early times, marriage with a half-sister was deemed unobjectionable, a custom that lingered on for centuries after its proscription at Sinai.

cut off in the sight. The words signify that there was a public ceremony of excommunication.

he shall bear his iniquity. Ibn Ezra understands the second half of the verse to refer to the case where the sister was seduced against her will. He alone is then punished. According to Hoffmann, the repetition of the phrase is to indicate that this is a double turpitude, as it is a brother's part to defend his sister's honour.

18. she hath uncovered. See xviii, 19.

19. thy mother's sister. See xviii, 12 f.

the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister; for he hath made naked his near kin; they shall bear their iniquity. 20. And if a man shall lie with his uncle's wife—he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness—they shall bear their sin; they shall die childless. 21. And if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is impurity: he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness; they shall be childless. ¶ 22. Ye shall therefore keep all My statutes, and all Mine ordinances, and do them, that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, vomit you not out.*vii. 23. And ye shall not walk in the customs of the nation, which I am casting out before you; for they did all these things, and therefore I abhorred them. 24. But I have said unto you: 'Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land flowing with milk and honey.' Ye shall therefore separate between the clean beast and the unclean, and between the unclean fowl and the clean; and ye shall not make your souls detestable by beast, or by fowl, or by any thing wherewith the ground teemeth, which I have set apart for you to hold unclean. 26. And ye shall be holy unto Me; for I the LORD am holy, and have set you apart from the peoples, that ye should be Mine. ¶ 27. 20. shall die childless. See XVIII, 14. Childlessness was regarded as little less calamitous than death. 'It is evidently meant as a heavenly and supernatural retribution' (Kalisch).

22-26. EXHORTATION

From here to the end of the Chapter is the concluding exhortation of the Law of Holiness (XVIII-XX), or possibly of the whole section beginning with Chap. XI (cf. v. 25 below). This paragraph may be compared with XVIII, 24-30.

22. vomit. See XVIII, 25.

23. customs of the nation. Cf. XVIII, 3. Heb. chukoth ha-goy. In later times, these Heb. words gave the name to the important principle in accordance with which Jewish life was jealously guarded against adopting the religious customs of surrounding nations.

24. set you apart. By means of distinctive laws and precepts.

25. clean . . . unclean. The inclusion of this verse is significant. It is a reminder, still required by the Jewish people, that the ideal of holiness for the Israelite consists in more than moral purity. The dietary laws have likewise their essential place in the scheme of the Torah, and form a necessary aid in the pursuit of the goal set by God.

26. ye shall be holy. Sums up the whole end and aim of the preceding laws. The people whom a holy God has chosen for His own must, like Him, be holy.

unto Me. 'If ye be separated from the heathen nations, then ye belong to Me; but if not, ye belong to Nebuchadnezzar and his colleagues,' i.e. you shall go into exile, become assimilated among the nations and lose your distinctive identity (Sifra).

27. familiar spirit. The position of this verse, after the exhortation, is intended as a final warning against superstition that was deadly to all higher religion. Unlike v. 6 the subject here is the person with 'the familiar spirit', and not he who consults the wizard.

AMOS IX, 7-15

CHAPTER IX

CAP. IX. ט

7. Are ye not as the children of the Ethiopians unto Me, O children of Israel? saith the LORD.
Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt,
And the Philistines from Caphtor,
And Aram from Kir?

8. Behold, the eyes of the Lord God
Are upon the sinful kingdom,
And I will destroy it from off the face of the earth;
Saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob,
Saith the LORD.

9. For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all the nations,
Like as corn is sifted in a sieve,
Yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth.

10. All the sinners of My people shall die by the sword,
That say: 'The evil shall not overtake nor confront us.'

Amos lived in the days of King Jeroboam II, about 750 B.C.E. The master-word of existence to Amos is Righteousness, which to him, as to his successors, means holiness of life in the individual and the triumph of right in the world. In His dealings with men and nations, he proclaims: God has but one test—their loyalty to the laws of righteousness; and He judges them accordingly. See p. 152.

The opening of the Sedrah strikes the note of consecration in the individual life; and the Haftorah in its earlier verses is an oracle against those who have rejected that high Jewish ideal, and thereby bring about the downfall of the Kingdom. But Israel will yet be true to its high and holy ideal, and worthy of the blessings that follow in the wake of such loyalty.

7. as the children of the Ethiopians. Two great teachings are here enunciated. The first is: God has guided other nations as well as the Israelites. All races are equally dear to Him; and the hand of Providence is seen not only in the migration of Israel, but in every historical movement. The second teaching is, God's special relationship to Israel rests on moral foundations. Degenerate the house of Jacob. A faithful and worthy 'Remnant' will survive the catastrophe, and form the nucleus of a purer community in the future. This thought, implicit in this verse, was adopted afterwards by Isaiah (I, 26-28) and became one of the most characteristic elements of his teaching (Driver).

9. I will sift. The whole nation will be subjected to a winnowing process, yet no good grain will be lost. Only the sinners will disappear (v. 10).

10. confront. Old English for 'meet' or 'come up to', 'catch'.

11. in that day. The day of Redemption which shall follow those other happenings of disaster.

And they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them;
And they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof;
They shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

14. turn the captivity. Foretells the home-coming of the exiled Israelites. They shall rebuild the waste places for the fulfilment of their destined vocation in the uplifting of humanity. This promise is again being literally fulfilled in the New Judea that has come to life during our own time.

Many Bible Critics maintain that the prophecy of Amos ends with the words, 'I will destroy it from off the face of the earth' (v. 8), and deem the remainder of the book to be from a later hand. This view fails to do justice to the idea of prophecy or of the prophet's office. 'For a prophet to close the entire volume of his prophecies without a single gleam of hope for a happier future, is very much opposed to the analogy of prophecy. Jeremiah and Ezekiel, for instance, blame Judah not less unsparingly than Amos blames Israel; but both nevertheless draw ideal pictures of the restored nation's future felicity' (Driver). 'If Amos had altogether despaired of Israel's future, he would not have had what to prophesy, nor to whom to prophesy. One does not moralize to the dead. Every preacher believes in the possibility of betterment, if the sinner repent; and he hopes that his words will lead to such repentance and consequent betterment. Thus also Amos' (Klausner).

CAP. XX. כ

2. And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying: 3. 'Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them: Thus saith the Lord God: Are ye come to inquire of Me? Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers; 5. and say unto them: Thus saith the Lord God: In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up My hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made Myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up My hand unto them, saying: I am the LORD your God; 6. in that day I lifted up My hand unto them, to bring them forth out of the land of Egypt into a land that I had sought out for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the beauty of all lands; 7. and I said unto them: Cast ye away every man the detestable things of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt; I am the LORD your God. 8. But they rebelled against Me, and would not hearken unto Me; they did not every man cast away the

This retrospect of the early history of Israel in the Wilderness is the opening portion of the same prophecy from which the Haftorah of the preceding Sedrah is taken. It was spoken to the exiles who had been deported ten years earlier to Babylon, after the first capture of Jerusalem in 597 B.C.E. The impending destruction of the City is declared by the Prophet to be the wages for disloyalty to the 'statutes and judgments' of which the 19th chapter of Leviticus in the Sedrah is so outstanding a summary; see p. 494.

3. son of man. In the presence of the awful majesty of God, Ezekiel is ever conscious of his mortality. This phrase occurs nearly 100 times in Ezekiel.

will not be inquired of by you. Because their act of inquiry was insincere, as the elders were themselves in secret sympathy with those of the exiles who were willing to become 'good Babylonians' and give up the Jewish Life and Faith. In v. 32 f of this same chapter, the Prophet exclaims: 'And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all; in that ye say, We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone. As I live, saith the LORD God, surely with a mighty hand . . . will I be king over you.'

the beauty of all lands. See Jer. III, 19.

7. detestable things. Idols; many of the Israelites in Egypt adopted in time Egyptian religious practices.

8. in the midst . . . Egypt. The history of the Exodus is silent on the internal struggles in Israel itself. The efforts of Moses in educating the people are entirely passed over in the history (Davidson); see p. 206.

9. but I wrought for My name's sake. That the Divine nature—His justice, mercy and faithfulness—should be fully understood by Israel as well as the world.

detestable things of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt; then I said I would pour out My fury upon them, to spend My anger upon them in the midst of the land of Egypt. 9. But I wrought for My name's sake, that it should not be profaned in the sight of the nations, among whom they were, in whose sight I made Myself known unto them, so as to bring them forth out of the land of Egypt. 10. So I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness. 11. And I gave them My statutes, and taught them Mine ordinances, which if a man do, he shall live by them. 12. Moreover also I gave them My sabbaths, to be a sign between Me and them, that they might know that I am the LORD that sanctify them. 13. But the house of Israel rebelled against Me in the wilderness; they walked not in My statutes, and they rejected Mine ordinances, which if a man do, he shall live by them, and My sabbaths they greatly profaned; then I said I would pour out My fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them. 14. But I wrought for My name's sake, that it should not be profaned in the sight of the nations, in whose sight I brought them out. 15. Yet also I lifted up My hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the beauty of all lands; 16. because they rejected Mine ordinances, and walked not in My statutes, and profaned My sabbaths—for their heart went after their idols. 17. Nevertheless Mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make a full end of them in the wilderness. 18. And I said unto their children in the wilderness: Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their ordinances, nor defile yourselves with their idols; 19. I am the LORD your God; walk in My statutes, and keep Mine ordinances, and do them; 20. and hallow My sabbaths, and they shall be a sign between Me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

12. to be a sign. The special sign of God's covenant with Israel (Exod. xxxi, 17). Since the observance of the Sabbath was not confined to Judea, its importance deepened in the eyes of the exiles, deprived of Temple and sacrifice.

(CHAPTERS XXI-XXIV)

REGULATIONS CONCERNING PRIESTS AND SANCTUARY

CHAPTER XXI

1-9. THE ORDINARY PRIEST

Whatever comes near, or is presented, to God must be perfect of its kind. Priests, therefore, must be free from physical defects or ceremonial impurity (xxi), and sacrifices must be without blemish (xxii).

The ideal of holiness, as expounded in the previous chapters, was intended for the whole Community of Israel. But since the priests were closely and constantly associated with the ritual of the Sanctuary, special laws were instituted for them and a higher standard was demanded.

1. unto the priests. To those performing sacerdotal functions, and not to such a one as had been rendered unfit for the priesthood on account of his father having contracted a marriage forbidden to a priest (see v. 7). The daughters of priestly families were not subject to these laws.

defile himself for the dead. Contact with the dead defiles (Num. xix) and, for the time being, renders a priest unfit to perform his duties. The law only held good when the dead person was 'among his people'; i.e. if there were others who were not priests able and willing to attend to the burial (Sifra). In the case of an unattended dead body of a friendless man (מת מצוה), everyone, even a High Priest or a Nazirite, had to busy himself with the last rites.

2. except for his kin. A concession to the natural feelings of the priest as man. The word for 'kin' denotes the closest possible bond of relationship. The wife is not mentioned because, as throughout the Torah, man and wife are regarded as 'one flesh' (Gen. ii, 24), and 'his wife' is here understood of itself. The mother is named before the father, because there is usually a deeper attachment between her and the son (see on xix, 3), and the desire to be with her at the last would be more intense.

3. sister . . . near unto him. The Rabbis explain this to include a sister who is betrothed. Although betrothal was considered almost as close a bond as marriage (Deut. xxi, 23 f), the priest may attend to the body in the event of her death. On her marriage, she became part of her husband; and in the same way that a priest was not allowed to defile himself for his brother-in-law, he was similarly forbidden to do so for his brother-in-law's wife, though she be his sister.

4. being a chief man. The translation is based on Onkelos. The reason why the priest is subjected to these special laws is that he is 'a chief man among his people'; his is an honour which carries with it peculiar obligations. Instead of 'chief man', Sifra translates 'as a husband' (so also RV Margin) and takes it to mean that he is forbidden to attend to his dead wife, if she belonged to any of the classes named in v. 7.

to profane himself. To render himself unfit for the service of the Sanctuary.

5. baldness . . . cuttings. See on x, 6 f and xix, 27 f.

6. they shall be holy. The motive for the special laws of the priests is the same as the motive for the laws of the Community (xx, 26). The sole reason why the restrictions on the priests were heavier was that they had the additional privilege of offering the sacrifices to God.

the bread of their God. See on iii, 11.

by fire, the bread of their God, they do offer; therefore they shall be holy. 7. They shall not take a woman that is a harlot, or profaned; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband; for he is holy unto his God. 8. Thou shalt sanctify him therefore; for he offereth the bread of thy God; he shall be holy unto thee; for I the LORD, who sanctify you, am holy. 9. And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the harlot, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire. ¶ 10. And the priest that is highest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil is poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not let the hair of his head go loose, nor rend his clothes; 11. neither shall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother; 12. neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the LORD. 13. And he shall take a wife in her virginity. 14. A widow, or one divorced, or a profaned woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take; but a virgin of his own people shall he take to wife. 15. And he shall not profane his seed among his people; for I am the LORD who sanctify him.*ii. ¶ 16. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 17. Speak unto Aaron, saying: ¶ Whosoever he be of thy seed

v. 7. קמץ בו"ק. v. 10. קמץ בו"ק.

7. profaned. Or, 'polluted' (RV Margin), 'dishonoured' (Driver). The Rabbis understand it as 'profaned'—the daughter of a forbidden marriage contracted by a priest, or a woman who had already entered into a marriage forbidden to a priest (i.e. a divorced woman whose previous husband, a priest, ought not to have married her).

put away. Better, divorced. There is no mention of a widow among the women whom a priest may not marry; see on Ezek. XLIV, 22, p. 529.

8. thou shalt sanctify. The Community as a body is addressed. The Israelites are to consider the priests as consecrated to God, and pay them the honour which is due to them. It is from this verse that the custom arose to give the Kohen precedence in such matters as the Reading of the Law.

9. burnt with fire. The Talmud maintains that the penalty of burning (see on xx, 14) was inflicted only if the priest's daughter became unchaste when betrothed or married—a crime which was in all cases considered a capital offence.

10–15. INCREASED RESTRICTIONS FOR THE HIGH PRIEST

10. anointing oil. See VIII, 12.

consecrated . . . garments. Or, 'consecrated by donning the vestments' (cf. xvi, 32). Nobody but a High Priest could wear the special garments; and his investiture in them was part of his consecration to his exalted office.

hair . . . go loose. See on x, 6.

11. for his father. Even for his father. But, according to the Rabbis, he must do so for the unattended body of a friendless man (see on v. 1).

12. out of the sanctuary. Cf. x, 7. He was dispensed from following even the funeral procession of his father or mother. It is probable that the High Priest had permanent quarters in the Temple-precincts (see I Sam. iii, 2 f).

I am the LORD. These words are added to increase the solemnity of the warning.

14. of his own people. lit. 'of his kinsfolk'. The Septuagint and Philo limit his choice to the priestly families.

15. profane his seed. Impair the pure descent of the Aaronic family by an improper marriage.

16–24. PHYSICAL BLEMISHES IN A PRIEST

A physical defect in a priest disqualified him from officiating in the Sanctuary.

throughout their generations that hath a blemish, let him not approach to offer the bread of his God. 18. For whatsoever man he be that hath a blemish, he shall not approach: a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath any thing maimed, or any thing too long, 19, or a man that is broken-footed, or broken-handed, 20. or crook-backed, or a dwarf, or that hath his eye overspread, or is scabbed, or scurvy, or hath his stones crushed; 21. no man of the seed of Aaron the priest, that hath a blemish, shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the LORD made by fire; he hath a blemish; he shall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God. 22. He may eat the bread of his God, both of the most holy, and of the holy. 23. Only he shall not go in unto the veil, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish; that he profane not My holy places; for I am the LORD who sanctify them. ¶ 24. So Moses spoke unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying:
2. Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, which they hallow unto Me, and that they profane not My holy name: I am the LORD. 3. Say unto them: ¶ Whosoever he be of all your seed throughout your generations, that approacheth unto the holy things,

20. dwarf. He was not to blame for being a dwarf, but only men without blemish and who had the full measure of manly power were permitted to exercise the functions of that holy office. Even so in the higher realms of the soul, a spiritual dwarf cannot offer the bread of his God to his fellows.

eye overspread. Probably, the white and black parts of the eye are not properly defined.

21. that hath a blemish. Any blemish not restricted to those just enumerated.

22. he may eat. Though he may not officiate, he is still a priest by birth; and he is, therefore, entitled to his share of the sacrificial dues.

most holy. e.g. the flesh of the sin-offering, which could be eaten by male priests alone.

24. all the children of Israel. These laws, although they were the peculiar concern of the priests, were also addressed to the Community as a whole. The people must insist upon their being honoured.

CHAPTER XXII. HOLINESS OF THE SANCTUARY 1-9. REGULATIONS FOR PRIESTS WHO SHARE IN A SACRIFICIAL FEAST

The last Chapter dealt with the bodily defects that disqualify the priest from officiating in the Sanctuary: this section insists on physical purity as the condition in which alone he could handle the offerings.

2. that they separate themselves. The sacred foods may be eaten only by priests and the members of their family, and then only if they are ritually clean. We must add words like, 'in the time of impurity,' which are implied in the context.

holy things of. A comprehensive expression for all offerings presented at the Altar. Even the offerings which the priests themselves bring to the Altar on their own behalf must not be sacrificed or eaten by them when they are ritually unclean (Rashi).

3. approacheth. To participate in the offering of the sacrifices or in the sharing of the sacred dues.

uncleanness. The term is defined in the next verses.

shall be cut off. Some understand this to mean which the children of Israel hallow unto the LORD, having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off from before Me: I am the LORD. 4. What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath an issue, he shall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean. And whoso toucheth any one that is unclean by the dead; or from whomsoever the flow of seed goeth out; 5. or whosoever toucheth any swarming thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath; 6. the soul that toucheth any such shall be unclean until the even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he bathe his flesh in water. 7. And when the sun is down, he shall be clean; and afterward he may eat of the holy things, because it is his bread. 8. That which dieth of itself, or is torn of beasts, he shall not eat to defile himself therewith: I am the LORD. 9. They shall therefore keep My charge, lest they bear sin for it, and die therein, if they profane it: I am the LORD who sanctify them. 10. There shall no ¹common man eat of the holy thing; a tenant of a priest, or a hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing. 11. But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he may eat of it; and such as are born in his house, they may eat of his bread. 12. And if a priest's daughter be married unto a common man, she shall not eat of that which is set apart from the holy things. 13. But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, exclusion from the priestly service. It is, however, more likely that a sterner punishment is intended; see v. 9, and chap. x.

5. swarming thing. i.e. a dead insect or reptile; xi, 24, 29 f.

a man . . . uncleanness. See xv, 5, 7, 19.

6. the soul. Heb. idiom for 'the person'.

7. bread. Or, 'food.' Certain portions of the sacrifices were the prescriptive right of the priests, and they depended upon them for their sustenance (cf. x, 12 f).

8. or is torn of beasts. This prohibition is repeated here for the special warning of the priests, since the impurity thereby caused would incapacitate them for service at the Sanctuary (Ibn Ezra); see also Ezek. xliv, 31, p. 530.

9. for it. Either for the Sanctuary (Ibn Ezra), die therein. The Rabbis explain this as 'death by the hand of Heaven'.

10-16. No layman was to eat a sanctified thing; with a list of the exceptions to that rule.

10. common man. Not a priest; a layman.

tenant. One who dwells with the priest, or is his guest; or the Hebrew slave who refused his freedom in the seventh year and remained in his service.

hired servant. As distinct from a non-Israelite slave, who was considered a member of the household (see next v.). The Torah does not mention that the priest's wife may eat of the portion, as husband and wife were deemed one person; see note on xxi, 2.

11. the purchase of his money. The non-Israelite slave purchased by a priest became part of the family, and was allowed to share in the sacrificial portion.

12. priest's daughter. On marrying a layman, she no longer belonged to the priestly family (see on xxi, 3).

and is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father's bread; but there shall no common man eat thereof. 14. And if a man eat of the holy thing through error, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give unto the priest the holy thing. 15. And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they set apart unto the LORD; 16. and so cause them to bear the iniquity that bringeth guilt, when they eat their holy things; for I am the LORD who sanctify them.*iii. ¶ 17. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 18. Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ Whosoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers in Israel, that bringeth his offering, whether it be any of their vows, or any of their freewill-offerings, which are brought unto the LORD for a burnt-offering; 19. that ye may be accepted, ye shall offer a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats. 20. But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not bring; for it shall not be acceptable for you. 21. And whosoever bringeth a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD in fulfilment of a vow clearly uttered, or for a freewill-offering, of the herd or of the flock, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein. 22. Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scabbed, or scurvy, ye shall not offer these unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD. 23. 13. have no child. If there is issue of the marriage, she is still regarded as attached to her husband's family. If, however, the issue of the marriage died, she regained her former status as a priest's daughter.

bread. Food, as in v. 7 above.

14. through error. Cf. chap. v, 14-16. the holy thing. i.e. its equivalent.

15. they shall not profane. The subject is the priests; and the profanation is the admission of unqualified persons to partake of the sacred dues (Rashi).

17-25. QUALITY OF OFFERINGS

After laws concerning the purity of the priesthood and the holiness of the sacrifices, there follow regulations concerning the faultlessness of the offerings. Jewish tradition demands of the Israelite such faultlessness in the case of any gift or offering set apart for sacred purposes, whether in the sphere of religion or of charity.

18. the strangers. Aliens who were residing in their midst; see on i, 2.

19. male without blemish. See on i, 3. beeves. The same Heb. word is rendered 'herd' in i, 3.

20. shall ye not bring. The Rabbis extended the scope of this law and insisted that the oil, wine, flour and wood offered and used in the Temple must likewise be of the best quality. Even the wood to be burnt on the Altar was to be carefully selected so as to contain no worm-eaten pieces.

22. blind . . . scabbed. The blemishes which disqualify the animal as an offering are very similar to those which render the priest unfit for service (xxi, 18 f).

wen. A running sore, an ulcer.

23. mayest thou offer. According to the Rabbinic interpretation, this means that the imperfect animal may not be sacrificed upon the Altar, but it may be donated to the Temple for working purposes.

offer for a freewill-offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted. 24. That which hath its stones bruised, or crushed, or torn, or cut, ye shall not offer unto the LORD; neither shall ye do thus in your land. 25. Neither from the hand of a foreigner shall ye offer the bread of your God of any of these, because their corruption is in them, there is a blemish in them; they shall not be accepted for you. ¶ 26. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: ¶ 27. When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat, is brought forth, then it shall be seven days under the dam; but from the eighth day and thenceforth it may be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD. 28. And whether it be cow or ewe, ye shall not kill it and its young both in one day. 29. And when ye sacrifice a sacrifice of thanksgiving unto the LORD, ye shall sacrifice it that ye may be accepted. 30. On the same day it shall be eaten; ye shall leave none of it until the morning: I am the LORD. 31. And ye shall keep My commandments, and do them: I am the LORD. 32. And ye shall not profane My holy name; but I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the LORD who hallow you, 33. that brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD.*iv.

24. ye do thus. The Heb. can bear two interpretations. It can mean, 'Ye shall not offer such mutilated animals'; or it may be taken, according to the Rabbis, as a general prohibition of emasculation in men and animals.

25. foreigner. Blemished animals are unacceptable even from a non-Israelite who 'comes out of a far country for Thy name's sake' (1 Kings viii, 41). The priest was not to think that he need not be so strict in such a case.

in one day. 'It is prohibited to kill an animal with its young on the same day, in order that people should be restrained and prevented from killing the two together in such a manner that the young is slain in the sight of the mother; for the pain of the animals under such circumstances is very great. There is no difference in this case between the pain of man and the pain of other living beings, since the love and the tenderness of the mother for her young ones is not produced by reasoning but by feeling, and this faculty exists not only in man but in most living things' (Maimonides); cf. the similar prohibition of the mother-bird being taken with her young (Deut. xxii, 6 f).

CHILLUL HASHEM AND KIDDUSH HASHEM

32. ye shall not . . . Israel. This verse has been called 'Israel's Bible in little' (Jellinek). It contains the solemn warning against the Profanation of the Divine Name (Chillul Hashem), and the positive injunction to every Israelite to hallow the Name of God (Kiddush Hashem) by his life and, if need be, by his death. Although spoken in reference to the priests as the appointed guardians of the Sanctuary, this commandment, both in its positive and negative forms, was early applied to the whole of Israel.

ye shall not profane My holy name. Be ye exceedingly guarded in your actions, say the Rabbis, so that ye do nothing that tarnishes the honour of Judaism or of the Jew. Especially do they warn against any misdeed towards a non-Jew as an unpardonable sin, because it gives a false impression of the moral standard of Judaism. The Jew should remember that the glory of God is, as it were, entrusted to his care; and that every Israelite holds the honour of his Faith and of his entire People in his hands. A single Jew's offence can bring shame on the whole House of Israel. This has been the fate of Israel in all the ages; and nothing, it seems, will ever break the world of its habit of putting down the crimes, vices, or failings of a Jew, no matter how estranged from his people or his people's Faith he may be, to his Jewishness, and of fathering them upon the entire Jewish race. The Rabbis say: 'Wild beasts visit and afflict the world because of the profanation of the Divine Name' (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 11). And, indeed, wherever Jews are guilty of conduct unworthy of their Faith, there the wild beast in man—blind prejudice and causeless hatred—is unchained against Israel. No student of Jewish history will question the truth of this judgment. The Rabbis, in a striking apologue, picture a boat at sea, full of men. One of them begins to bore a hole in the bottom of the boat and, on being remonstrated with, urges that he is only boring under his own seat. 'Yes,' say his comrades, 'but when the sea rushes in we shall be drowned with you.' So it is with Israel. Its weal or its woe is in the hands of every one of its children.

I will be hallowed. Not to commit Chillul Hashem is only a negative virtue. Far more is required of the Israelite. He is bidden so to live as to shed lustre on the Divine Name and the Torah by his deeds and influence. Rabbi Simon ben Shetach one day commissioned his disciples to buy him a camel from an Arab. When they brought him the animal, they gleefully announced that they had found a precious stone in its collar. 'Did the seller know of this gem?' asked the Master. On being answered in the negative, he called out angrily, 'Do you think me a barbarian that I should take advantage of the letter of the law by which the gem is mine together with the camel? Return the gem to the Arab immediately.' When the heathen received it back he exclaimed: 'Blessed be the God of Simon ben Shetach! Blessed be the God of Israel!'

The highest form of hallowing God is martyrdom; and Jewish Law demands of every Israelite to surrender his life, rather than by public apostasy desecrate the Name of God (Shulchan Aruch, Yore Deah, CLVII). When, during the war of annihilation which the Emperor Hadrian waged against Judaism, the readiness for martyrdom on the part of young and old began to imperil the existence of the Jewish nation, the Rabbis decreed that only with regard to three fundamental laws—idolatry, incest, and murder—should death be preferred to transgression. See also p. 201, on the Akedah, and the ideal of martyrdom in Jewish history. 'The Jewish martyrs of olden days, who bore witness to their God at the stake, are described as having yielded up their lives for the "sanctification of the Divine Name"'. Such testimony is within the power, and constitutes the duty, of the Jew in these times also. If he is not called upon to die for the sanctification of the Name, he has at least to live for it. His life must give glory to God, vindicate his God-given religion' (M. Joseph).

among the children of Israel. If it is a sacred duty to hallow the Name of God and Israel before the nations, it is even a more sacred duty to do so 'among the children of Israel'. Moses could make Pharaoh fear God; the dukes of Edom, the mighty men of Moab, and the peoples of Canaan trembled before him; but he was far from uniformly successful in making his own people do so. Therefore he was to see the promised Land afar off, but he was not to enter it. 'Get thee up unto Mount Nebo, and die in the mount as Aaron thy brother died on Mount Hor, because ye sanctified me not in the midst of the children of Israel' (Deut. xxxii, 49–52). It is important to make non-Jews respect Judaism, but even more so to make Jews respect Judaism.

CHAPTER XXIII THE HOLY DAYS

This chapter gives a comprehensive description of the sacred seasons in the Jewish year. There is no mention of the New Moon, because it was not necessarily a day of cessation from work, and was not ranked as one of the 'holy convocations'. The sacrifices for each Festival are given in Num. xxviii.

2. appointed seasons. Or, 'appointed (or fixed) seasons.'

holy convocations. An assembly 'convoked', or called together, for worship at the Sanctuary. The calling together was done by means of sounding two silver trumpets (Num. x, 1–10). Although it was only on the three Pilgrimage Festivals that the Israelites were to appear before the Lord at the Sanctuary, many would no doubt also come for the Days of Memorial and Atonement.

appointed seasons. 3. Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day is a sabbath of solemn rest, a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of work; it is a sabbath unto the LORD in all your dwellings. ¶ 4. These are the appointed seasons of the LORD, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their appointed season. 5. In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at dusk, is the LORD's passover. 6. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the LORD; seven days ye shall eat unleavened bread. 7. In the first day ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. 8. And ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD seven days; in the seventh day is a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. ¶ 9. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 10. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ When ye are come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring the sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest. 11. And he shall wave the sheaf before the LORD, to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it. 12. And in the day when ye wave the sheaf, ye shall offer a he-lamb without blemish of the first year for a

3. sabbath of solemn rest. The reference to the Sabbath in this connection is, according to the Rabbis, to emphasize the fact that the seventh day of the week must always be 'a sabbath of solemn rest'—even when it coincides with a Festival, on which day, otherwise, only manual labour is prohibited, but not such as is necessary for the preparation of meals.

at dusk is the LORD'S passover. Better, towards even is a passover unto the LORD (Friedländer); i.e. a paschal offering in honour of the LORD.

6. feast of unleavened bread. Only the 15th day of the month is 'the feast of unleavened bread', so called because the partaking of matzah (מצה של מצה) is obligatory on the eve thereof, although unleavened bread is eaten for seven days and the seventh day is a 'holy convocation'.

7. servile work. lit. 'work of labour', the usual work which one does on an ordinary week day. It implies a less strict abstinence from labour than was demanded for the Sabbath (v. 3) and the Day of Atonement (v. 28), and does not include the prohibition of preparing food.

8. offering. This is defined in detail in Num. XXVIII, 19 f.

9-14. THE OMER

At the beginning of the barley harvest—barley ripens two or three weeks before the wheat—the first sheaf was presented at the Sanctuary; see Deut. XXVI, 2.

10. when ye are come. When the Israelites had begun to till the soil of their land.

11. on the morrow after the sabbath. Better, on the morrow after the day of rest; Heb. ממחרת השבת. The interpretation of this phrase was the subject of heated controversy in early Rabbinic times between the Pharisees and Sadducees. The latter took the word 'sabbath' in its usual sense, and maintained that the Omer was to be brought on the morrow of the first Saturday in Passover. The Pharisees argued that 'sabbath' (השבת) here means, 'the day of cessation from work'; and the context shows that the Feast of Unleavened Bread is intended: therefore, the Omer was to be brought on the 16th of Nisan. This is supported by the Septuagint, which renders 'on the morrow of the first day', and by Josephus. 'The offerings of the sheaf took place on the 16th, the first busy work-day of the harvest, in relation to which the preceding day might well be called a Sabbath or rest-day, burnt-offering unto the LORD. 13. And the meal-offering thereof shall be two tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a sweet savour; and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of a hin. 14. And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor fresh ears, until this selfsame day, until ye have brought the offering of your God; it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. ¶ 15. And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the ¹day of rest, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the waving; seven weeks shall there be complete; 16. even unto the morrow after the seventh week shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall present a new meal-offering unto the LORD. 17. Ye shall bring out of your dwellings two wave-loaves of two tenth parts of an ephah;

15-21. FEAST OF WEEKS—SHAVUOS

One of the three agricultural festivals, the feast of the first harvest יוֹם הַבְּכוּרִים. Jewish tradition, however, connects it with the Covenant on Mount Sinai, and speaks of the festival as זמן מתן תורתנו 'the Season of Giving of our Torah'. The Israelites arrived at Sinai on the New Moon. On the second of the month, Moses ascended the mountain; on the third, he received the people's reply; on the fourth, he made the second ascent and was commanded to institute three days of preparation, at the conclusion of which the Revelation took place. Hence its association with the Feast of Weeks, which became the Festival of Revelation.

15. and ye shall count. The paragraph dealing with the Feast of Weeks has no introductory formula, 'The Lord spake unto Moses', such as we find in connection with the other Festivals, because it was conceived as the complement of the Passover, and not something independent of it. Its name in Talmudic literature is not Shavuos, but almost invariably עצרת, 'the concluding festival' to Passover. 'We count the days that pass since the preceding Festival, just as one who expects his most intimate friend on a certain day counts the days and even the hours. This is the reason why we count the days that pass since the offering of the Omer, between the anniversary of our departure from Egypt and the anniversary of the Law-giving. The latter was the aim and object of the exodus from Egypt' (Maimonides). In other words, the Deliverance from bondage was not an end in itself; it was the prelude to Sinai (Exod. m, 12). Liberty without law is a doubtful boon, whether to men or nations.

unto you. From this addition, the Rabbis deduce that each Israelite had the duty of counting for himself; hence the 'counting of the days of the Omer' even after the Omer itself was no longer brought to the Temple. The season between Passover and Shavuos (or Pentecost, which in Greek means 'the fiftieth day' after the first day of Passover) is known as Sephirah, Period of Counting. It is a period of semi-mourning, because repeatedly dire calamities befell the Jewish people at this time.

day of rest. This is a departure from the RV which translates 'sabbath'; see on v. 11.

seven weeks. lit. 'seven sabbaths'. It is evident that here and in xxv, 8, the Heb. shabbath signifies 'week'. Hence the most common name for the Festival, חג השבועות, the Feast of Weeks; Deut. xvi, 10.

16. seventh week. Instead of, 'seventh sabbath' (RV).

new meal-offering. The cereal offering of the produce of the new wheat harvest; see next v.

'With the destruction of the Second Temple, the agricultural aspect of the Festival receded, and Shavuos became primarily the Feast of Revelation. An echo of nature, however, still lingers in the present custom of adorning the Synagogue with flowers' (H. M. Adler).

And ye shall present with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams; they shall be a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meal-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD. 19. And ye shall offer one he-goat for a sin-offering, and two he-lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings. 20. baked with leaven. The loaves were made to represent the common food of the people, and symbolically mark their gratitude to the Provider of their sustenance. They were not offered upon the Altar (II, 11), but only 'waved'; they belonged to the priest.

19. ye shall offer. These offerings are additional to those mentioned in Num. XXVIII, 27.

20. to the LORD for the priest. i.e. they are devoted to God by being eaten by the priest; cf. Num. v, 8, for a similar usage.

22. when ye reap. A repetition of XIX, 9 f. A significant reminder to the Israelite that his thankfulness to God for the wheat-harvest was to be demonstrated by more than an offering on the Altar. If he failed to share God's bounty with the poor, his observance of the Festival would be unacceptable.

24-25. DAY OF MEMORIAL—ROSH HASHANAH

As the seventh day in the week was a holy day, so the seventh month was the holy month in the year. Each New Moon was made the occasion for additional offerings (Num. XXVIII, 11 f). It is, therefore, not surprising that the New Moon of the seventh month should be a Festival of special solemnity. In later times, it was known as Rosh Hashanah, New Year's Day. But unlike the New Year celebrations of many ancient and modern nations, the Jewish New Year is not a time of revelry, but an occasion of the deepest religious import.

24. a memorial. In Num. XXIX, 1, the occasion is called 'a day of blowing the horn', i.e. Shofar, the ram's horn; Josh. VI, 4. This act must be differentiated from the sounding of the 'trumpet' (not the Shofar) which took place while the offerings were brought on all the Festivals and New Moons (Num. x, 10). The blowing of the Shofar had consequently quite a different significance, and was more awe-inspiring (see Amos III, 6) than the blowing of the silver trumpets, which generally was a joyous sound. The sound of Shofar, consisting, as handed down by Tradition, of three distinctive Shofar-notes—tekiah, she-varim, teruah—has been looked upon from time immemorial as a call to contrition and penitence, as a reminder of the Shofar-sound of Sinai; and the Day of Memorial, the beginning of the Ten Days of Repentance (עֶשְׂרֵת יְמֵי תְשׁוּבָה), which culminate in the Day of Atonement, as a time of self-examination and humble petition for forgiveness. 'The Scriptural injunction of the Shofar for the New Year's Day has a profound meaning. It says: Awake, ye sleepers, and ponder over your deeds; remember your Creator and go back to Him in penitence. Be not of those who miss realities in their pursuit of shadows and waste their years in seeking after vain things which cannot profit or deliver. Look well to your souls and consider your acts; forsake each of you his evil ways and thoughts, and return to God so that He may have mercy upon you' (Maimonides).

25. an offering. Described in Num. xxix, 2 f.

26-32. DAY OF ATONEMENT

On the subject of this the most solemn day in the Jewish year, see the commentary on xvi, 29-34. No other nation, ancient or modern, has an institution approaching the Day of Atonement in religious depth—'a day of purification and of turning from sins, for which forgiveness is granted through the grace of the merciful God, who holds penitence in as high an esteem as guiltlessness' (Philo).

27. day of atonement. Heb. yom kippurim. lit. 'Day of Atonements'. The name of this most sacred of Festivals is in the plural, 'because it represents two streams of love. As soon as the desire for reconciliation has awakened in the sinner's soul, and wings its way Heavenward, God's grace comes down to meet it, calming his breast with the assurance of Divine pardon and forgiveness' (Zohar).

afflict your souls. See on xvi, 29; this Day, set aside for penitence and moral regeneration, is the only one for which the Torah prescribes fasting—which is the intensest form of devotion and contrition. 'On that Day,' the Rabbis state, 'the Israelites resemble the angels, without human wants, without sins, and linked together in love and peace.' It is the only day of the year—they add—on which the accuser Satan is silenced before the Throne of Glory, and even becomes the defender of Israel. Confession of sin is the most essential and characteristic element in the services of the Day of Atonement; 'every one entreating pardon for his sins and hoping for God's mercy, not because of his own merits but through the compassionate nature of that Being who will have forgiveness rather than punishment' (Philo). The Confession is made by the whole Community collectively; and those who have not themselves committed the sins mentioned in the confession regret that they were unable to prevent them from being committed by others (Friedländer).

an offering. See Num. xxix, 7 f.

28. no manner of work. The phrase is not qualified by the addition of the word 'servile'. With regard to work, the Day of Atonement is of the same strictness as the Sabbath (Exod. xx, 10), with similar exceptions where life might be endangered.

to make atonement for you. 'As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways' (Ezek. xxxiii, 11).

30. will I destroy. Synonymous with 'shall be cut off', showing that the punishment is not by a human Court.

31. it is a statute. As in iii, 17.

dwellings. 32. It shall be unto you a sabbath of solemn rest, and ye shall afflict your souls; in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye keep your sabbath. *vi. ¶ 33. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: ¶ 34. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying: ¶ On the fifteenth day of this seventh month is the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the LORD. 35. On the first day shall be a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. 36. Seven days ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD; on the eighth day shall be a holy convocation unto you; and ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD; it is a day of solemn assembly; ye shall do no manner of servile work. ¶ 37. These are the appointed seasons of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meal-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, each on its own day; 38. beside the sabbaths of the LORD, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD. ¶ 39. Howbeit on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruits of the land, ye shall keep the feast of the LORD seven days; on the first day shall be a solemn rest, and on the eighth day shall be a solemn rest. 40.

32. in the ninth day. The Day commencing with the preceding eve (Gen. i, 5). Both the opening and closing evenings are marked by services (Kol Nidré and Neilah) of special solemnity. The Neilah Amidah is one of the most masterly products of Israel's religious genius. It begins: 'Thou givest a hand to transgressors, and Thy right hand is stretched out to receive the penitent. Thou hast taught us, O LORD our God, to make confession unto Thee of all our sins, in order that we may cease from the violence of our hands and may return unto Thee who delightest in the repentance of the wicked.' These words contain what has been called 'the Jewish doctrine of salvation.'

33-43. FEAST OF TABERNACLES

34. fifteenth day. Like the Passover, this Feast commenced at full moon.

tabernacles. Heb. Succoth. lit. 'booths'. In Exod. xxiii, 16, it is called 'the Feast of Ingathering'. In Rabbinic literature, it is known as 'the Feast', because, as the time of harvest, it would naturally be a period of rejoicing and holiday-making. It really consists of two groups: the first seven days, Tabernacles proper; and the eighth day, Atzeres. The seventh day of Tabernacles became in later times an echo of the Day of Atonement and was known as Hoshanah Rabbah; and the 'second day' of Atzeres assumed the nature of a separate Festival under the name of Simchas Torah, Rejoicing of the Law, the day on which the annual reading of the Torah was completed and restarted.

36. an offering. See Num. xxix.

solemn assembly. Or, 'closing festival'. Heb. atzereth, the concluding day of a festival season, applied to the seventh day of Passover (Deut. xvi, 8), and, in Rabbinic literature, to the Feast of Weeks (see on v. 15). Maimonides explains the purpose of this eighth day to be, 'in order to complete our rejoicings, which cannot be perfect in booths, but in well-built houses.'

38. the sabbaths. i.e. the additional sacrifices offered on the Sabbaths (Num. xxviii, 9 f).

gifts. The voluntary offerings that accompanied the Israelite on his pilgrimage to the Temple, when he was bidden not to appear before the LORD 'empty' (Deut. xvi, 16 f).

vows. See on vii, 16.

39-43. Additional directions in regard to Tabernacles for the time when, after the settlement in Canaan, the people would be tilling the soil and reaping the harvest.

39. eighth day. Which is deemed a Festival on its own account, distinct from the Feast of Tabernacles.

And ye shall take you on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days. 41. And ye shall keep it a feast unto the LORD seven days in the year; it is a statute for ever in your generations; ye shall keep it in the seventh month. 42. Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are home-born in Israel shall dwell in booths; 43. that your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God. ¶ 44. And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the appointed seasons of the LORD.*vii.

and ye shall rejoice before the LORD. This phrase was closely linked with the preceding, and gave rise to the joyous processions in the Temple. The pilgrims held the lulav and esrog in their hands and sang Psalms of praise to God.

42. booths. The Heb. sukkah represents a hastily-constructed and unsubstantial edifice, such as the Israelites must have set up during the wanderings in the Wilderness. In addition to its historical associations, reminding the Israelite of the Divine protection during the desert-journey, the command to dwell in booths has also a religious signification. 'Man ought to remember his evil days in his days of prosperity. He will thereby be induced to thank God repeatedly, to lead a modest and humble life. We, therefore, on Tabernacles leave our houses in order to dwell in booths. We shall thereby remember that this has once been our condition' (Maimonides). The Book of Ecclesiastes is aptly set aside for special reading during Tabernacles or Atzeres.

44. Moses declared. Cf. xxi, 24. Not only did he communicate the contents of the chapter to the people, but, as each Festival occurred, he took the opportunity of repeating the commands so that they were properly observed (Sifra).

CHAPTER XXIV

1-9. THE LAMPS AND THE SHEWBREAD

The Torah, before leaving the subject of the Sanctuary, alludes to the constant duty of the priests to see that the lamp is kept perpetually alight and the shewbread regularly arranged. These are outstanding obligations of priesthood, which must not be relaxed even at the special seasons of the year, when the attention and energies of the Temple-servants were otherwise taxed to the full.

2. pure olive oil. See on Exod. xxvii, 20 f.

3. shall Aaron order it. In Exod. the phrase 'and his sons' is added after 'Aaron'. In the first instance, the lamp was kindled by Aaron (Num. viii, 3).

4. the pure candlestick. So called either because made of pure gold (Exod. xxv, 31 f), or because it was to be cleansed each time that the lamps are arranged upon it.

before the LORD. It must on no account be removed from the Sanctuary.

before the LORD continually; it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations.

4. He shall order the lamps upon the pure candlestick before the LORD continually.

¶ 5. And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth parts of an ephah shall be in one cake. 6. And thou shalt set them in two rows, six in a row, upon the pure table before the LORD. 7. And thou shalt put pure frankincense with each row, that it may be to the bread for a memorial-part, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD. 8. Every sabbath day he shall set it in order before the LORD continually; it is from the children of Israel, an everlasting covenant. 9. And it shall be for Aaron and his sons; and they shall eat it in a holy place; for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, a perpetual due.' ¶ 10.

And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel; and the son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp. 11. And the son of the Israelitish woman blasphemed the Name, and cursed; and they brought him unto Moses. And his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan. 12. And they put him in ward, that it might be declared unto them at the mouth of the LORD. ¶ 13. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 14. 'Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay

9. holy place. See II, 3.

10-23. THE PENALTY OF BLASPHEMY

The sole aim of all that is enjoined in the Book of Leviticus is to sanctify Israel, individually and collectively. When, therefore, anyone presumes to desecrate the Divine Name, the penalty must be ruthless.

10. went out. Or, 'had come forth' from Egypt, among the children of Israel (Ehrlich). The cause of the quarrel is not stated, because it is not of material importance. Note that the blasphemer is not 'an Israelite' but the 'son of the Israelitish woman'. Only one of the mixed multitude (Exod. xii, 38) could be guilty of so heinous an offence.

11. blasphemed. lit. 'to indicate by name', here with unholy contempt and dishonour.

his mother's name. Rashi remarks that his genealogy is recorded to impress upon the Israelite that a man's life is not his own to do with as he pleased. His disgrace is also that of his parents, of his tribe, of his people.

12. that it might be declared. The Torah had ordained, 'Thou shalt not revile God' (Exod. xxii, 27); but no penalty had been mentioned in that connection.

their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him. 15. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying: Whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin. 16. And he that blasphemeth the name of the LORD, he shall surely be put to death; all the congregation shall certainly stone him; as well the stranger, as the home-born, when he blasphemeth the Name, shall be put to death. 17. And he that smiteth any man mortally shall surely be put to death. 18. And he that smiteth a beast mortally shall make it good: life for life. 19. And if a man maim his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him: 20. breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth; as he hath maimed a man, so shall it be rendered unto him.*m. 21. And he that killeth a beast shall make it good; and he that killeth a man shall be put to death. 22. Ye shall have one manner of law, as stone him. See on xx, 2.

15. and thou shalt speak. The incident became the opportunity of presenting to the Israelites a law on this and kindred offences.

16. the stranger. Although he is not subject to the precepts of the Torah and is to be allowed a large degree of tolerance, he yet may not be permitted to desecrate the holiness of the camp. If he does not wish to worship the God of Israel, he is not to be compelled to do so; but should he publicly revile the Holy Name, the offence is as serious with him as with the Israelite.

18. life for life. This phrase is a legal term equivalent to 'fair compensation'; for it cannot mean that anyone who slew an animal should forfeit his own life in return! In the same way, the phrase, 'as he hath done, so shall it be done to him' in v. 19, and 'eye for eye' and 'tooth for tooth' in v. 20, are merely technical phrases for the demand that adequate and equitable compensation, after due and judicial appraisal of the injury inflicted, is to be paid for the injury. There is in Jewish history no instance of the law of retaliation ever having been carried out literally—eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth. To the Talmudists the Biblical words eye for eye had become a mere expression of the law of equality. 'None of the later [Rabbinic] law books even suggest retaliation as a proper remedy, the example of contemporary European and Asiatic systems of jurisprudence to the contrary notwithstanding' (D. W. Amram). The last clause reminds us of one of the paradoxes of history. On the one hand, Judaism, the so-called religion of 'strict justice', rejected the literal application of the law of retaliation, and knew neither torture in legal procedure nor mutilation as a legal punishment. In Christian lands, on the other hand, mutilation and torture are well-nigh the indispensable accompaniments of justice from the middle of the thirteenth century down to the end of the eighteenth, and in some countries to the middle of the nineteenth century and beyond. See also pp. 309 and 405.

22. ye shall have one manner of law . . . home-born. One of the great texts of Scripture; cf. xix, 33 f. Though in this connection the application of the law may be, so to speak, disadvantageous to the alien, the general principle of equality between alien and native is only strengthened thereby. In no other code was there one and the same law for native-born and alien alike. Even in Roman law, every alien was originally classed as an enemy, and therefore devoid of any rights. Only gradually was the protection of the law in a limited degree extended to him. It is not so very long ago that aliens in European states were incapable of owning landed property. In many countries, the denial by the dominant race of civic and political rights to 'aliens', though these may have lived for generations in the land of their sojourn, is a matter of contemporary history; see p. 260.

for I am the LORD your God. The reason given is noteworthy: show equal justice to all men, for I am your God, the God of Israel, the Father of all mankind. Once again, monotheism is the well for the stranger, as for the home-born; for I am the LORD your God.' 23. And Moses spoke to the children of Israel, and they brought forth him that had cursed out of the camp, and stoned him with stones. And the children of Israel did as the LORD commanded Moses.

15. But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of My sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from Me, they shall come near to Me to minister unto Me; and they shall stand before Me to offer unto Me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God; 16. they shall enter into My sanctuary, and they shall come near to My table, to minister unto Me, and they shall keep My charge. 17. And it shall be that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments; and no wool shall come upon them, while they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within.

The Haftorah is taken from the last portion of the Book of Ezekiel (xl-xlviii), which is a Vision of the New Jerusalem and the New Temple that are to arise when the Captivity is over. If, however, the new Temple is to be the embodiment in concrete form of Israel's ideals of Holiness and Purity, those that shall minister in the House of God must not, as in the past, permit any violations of those ideals. Therefore, only descendants of the loyal family of Zadok shall be the priests of the future. In this Haftorah, Ezekiel undertakes to define their duties and ministrations; and thus connects with the Sedrah which regulates the life and work of the priests.

15. sons of Zadok. The high priest appointed to that office by King Solomon (1 Kings ii, 35). Ezekiel was himself a priest, and in all probability spent his childhood and youth within the precincts of the Temple in Jerusalem. He therefore had a

linen garments. The reason is given in the next verse: sweat was regarded as a form of uncleanness.

18. They shall have linen tires upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins; they shall not gird themselves with any thing that causeth sweat. 19. And when they go forth into the outer court, even into the outer court to the people, they shall put off their garments whercin they minister, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments, that they sanctify not the people with their garments. 20. Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only poll their heads. 21. Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court. 22. Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away; but they shall take virgins of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that is the widow of a priest. 23. And they shall teach My people the difference between the holy and the common, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean. 24. And in a controversy they shall stand to judge; according to Mine ordinances shall they judge it; and they shall keep My laws and My statutes in all My appointed seasons, and they shall hallow My sabbaths. 25. And they shall come near no dead person to defile themselves; but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves. 26. And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days. 27. And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, into the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering,

18. linen tires upon their heads. Worn for ornament (Kimchi).

19. sanctify not the people. A precaution against confusion of the sacred and the common. They are not to mingle with the people in their sacred garments (Targum), lest the thoughtless among the people might consider themselves qualified to perform duties of the Temple Service.

20. shave . . . grow long. Both prohibitions in this verse are protests against customs of heathen worship that prevailed in one cult or another of the time.

poll their heads. i.e. keep it at a moderate and even length all round.

22. neither shall they take . . . a widow. In the Sedrah (Lev. xxi, 14) the prohibition is restricted to the High Priest. Although this is only a more stringent application of the principle underlying the original law—possibly in that decadent age, when the moral standards had lowered, it was found necessary to do so in order to protect the purity of the priestly families—it is one of Ezekiel's apparent divergencies from the Torah, and it raised doubts in the early Rabbinic period as to whether his Book should remain in the Canon of Scripture.

23. teach. Instruction, teaching the people the eternal difference between right and wrong, holy and unholy, 'Jewish' and heathen, has always been the main function and mission of priest, prophet, sage, rabbi or teacher in Judaism.

24. to judge. Cf. Deut. xvii, 8 f, on the judicial power given to the priests.

25. but for father. As in the Sedrah (xxi, 1–3) there is no mention of the wife, it being self-evident; cf. Ezek. xxiv, 15 f.

26. and after he is cleansed. The period before his cleansing seems likewise to have been seven days; Num. xix, 11.

27. he shall offer his sin-offering. Contact with the dead was a technical, i.e. ritual, sin; the reference is not to any moral lapse.

And the first of all the first-fruits of every thing, and every heave-offering of every thing, of all your offerings, shall be for the priests; ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, to cause a blessing to rest on thy house. 31. 28-31. Enumerate the dues for the maintenance of the priests. They had no possession in Israel—in contrast to the priests of the Babylonian temples, who, besides stated tariffs for their services, often had large private estates (like medieval abbeys) and did much banking business (Lofthouse).

28. I am their inheritance. The priest's inheritance is a spiritual, not a material one.

29. devoted thing. Everything on which a ban had been placed; Lev. xxvii, 28.

30. heave-offering. Heb. terumah, 'contribution.'

31. shall not eat. The Rabbis explain that repetition of this law was required in the case of the priests, as the manner of the slaying (e.g. מליקה) of those sacrifices, of which the priests were permitted to partake, did not altogether coincide with the laws of Shechitah outside the Sanctuary.

In connection with this verse and v. 22, it is well to remember that this Haftorah is part of a half-ideal and half-allegorical programme of the New Jerusalem that is to follow the Captivity. The Prophet's symbolic picture was probably never intended for, and certainly never received, literal realization. A deeper study of his Vision shows that the account of the Temple, the City, the Prince, and the divisions of the land are as ideal as his vision of the stream that issues from under the threshold of the Temple and flows through the desert of southern Judea into the Dead Sea, fertilizing the one and transforming the other into a fresh-water lake swarming with life and surrounded by noble trees that bear fruit every month (xlvi, 1-12). Where all else is ideal, actuality is not to be affixed to the regulations alone concerning priests and their offerings. The Rabbis were therefore guided by highest spiritual wisdom (רוח הקודש) when, disregarding the apparent or real divergencies from the Torah which these chapters contain, they permitted the Book to remain part of Holy Scripture.

(CHAPTERS XXV-XXVI, 2)

CHAPTER XXV. THE SABBATICAL YEAR AND THE YEAR OF JUBILEE

The cycle of sacred seasons begun in xxiii is here continued, and the system of sabbaths—the Sabbath at the end of the week; Pentecost at the end of seven weeks; the Seventh month, as the sacred month studded with Festivals—is here completed by the Sabbatical year and by the Jubilee, which came after a 'week' of Sabbatical years.

During the Sabbath-year the land was to lie fallow (Exod. xxiii, 10 f) and was to be 'released' from cultivation. The land is not the absolute possession of man; it belongs to God, and is to be held in trust for His purposes. The Sabbath-year does not seem to have been regularly observed in pre-exilic times, and, according to the Mishnah, the Sabbath-year was fully enforced only in Palestine. A promise to observe it in the future formed part of the covenant on the Return from Babylon; Neh. x, 32. Alexander the Great remitted to the Jews the tribute in every seventh year 'because then they did not sow their fields' (Josephus). Julius Caesar acted in the same manner.

Heathens did not trouble to understand the meaning of this unique law, which, among other things, saved the soil from the danger of exhaustion. Thus, the Roman historian Tacitus attributes the Jews' observance of it to indolence.

1. spoke unto Moses. Better, had spoken unto Moses. As these laws are intended to meet the social problems that would arise in the Israelitish Commonwealth, they bring the legal part of Leviticus to an appropriate conclusion.

2. the land keep a sabbath. The land is personified. It should rest in the seventh year, as man rests on the seventh day. The Israelite may not during that year till it himself or allow anyone to do so on his behalf. 'Just as the freedom of the individual was a fundamental principle of the Torah, so was the freedom of the land from the absolute ownership of man' (F. Perles).

unto the LORD. As the Sabbath was more than a cessation of labour, and was a day dedicated to God—similarly during the Sabbatical year, the soil was to be devoted to Him by being placed at the service of the poor and the animal creation (Exod. xxiii, 10, 11). In Deut. xxxi, 10 f, we learn that the seventh year was, furthermore, to be utilized for national educational ends, and special measures were to be taken to acquaint the men and the women, the children as well as the resident aliens, with the teachings and duties of the Torah. Josephus rightly claims that while the best knowledge of olden times was usually treated as a secret doctrine, and confined to the few, it was the glory of Moses that he made it current coin. 'To place within the reach of the English worker, once in every seven years, a year's course at a University in science and law and literature and theology, would be something like the modern equivalent for one of the advantages which the Sabbath-year offered to the ancient Hebrew' (F. Verinder in My Neighbour's Landmark, Short Studies in Bible Land Laws, 1911).

4. in the seventh year. In the seventh month of that year, after the gathering of the harvest, the year of rest began.

sabbath of solemn rest. A Sabbath of the strictest kind. The same phrase is used of the Day of Atonement (xxiii, 32), as well as of the Sabbath day (xxiii, 3).

5. undressed vine. The Heb. is the word for a Nazirite whose hair was to remain unshorn (Num. vi, 5). Like him, the vines were not to be trimmed during the Sabbatical year. There was to be neither planting, pruning, nor gathering.

year of solemn rest for the land. 6. And the sabbath-produce of the land shall be for food for you: for thee, and for thy servant and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant and for the settler by thy side that sojourn with thee; 7. and for thy cattle, and for the beasts that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be for food. ¶ 8. And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and there shall be unto thee the days of seven sabbaths of years, even forty and nine years. 9. Then shalt thou make proclamation with the blast of the horn on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of atonement shall ye make for you. The plural is used to comprehend all those that are to benefit by this provision. The fruit and grain which grew of itself in the Sabbatical year might be plucked and eaten, but not stored. Grain growing of itself—i.e. without regular ploughing and sowing—is not uncommon in Palestine; see on v. 22.

7. cattle. Heb. בְּהֵמָה; domestic animals.

beasts. Heb. חַיָּה; free beasts of the field or forest; sometimes used in contrast to חַיָּה רָעָה 'evil beast' (XXVI, 6). The Divine promise in this verse is in accordance with the uniformly tender regard for animals throughout Scripture. They were part of God's creation, and as such were comprehended in His pity and love; see the concluding verse of Jonah. 'A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast' (Prov. XII, 10).

8-55. THE JUBILEE

In the fiftieth year, the Hebrew slaves with their families are emancipated, and property, except house property in a walled city, reverts to its original owner. The Jubilee institution was a marvellous safeguard against deadening poverty. By it, houses and lands were kept from accumulating in the hands of the few, pauperism was prevented, and a race of independent freeholders assured. It represented such a rare and striking introduction of morals into economics, that many have been inclined to question whether this wonderful institution was ever in actual force. However, 'nothing is more certain than that the Jubilee was once for centuries a reality in the national life of Israel' (Ewald). Ezekiel speaks of its non-observance as one of the signs that 'the end is come' upon the nation for its misdoings; and he mentions (see p. 966) 'the year of liberty', when a gift of land must return to the original owner. 'It is impossible to think that, as has sometimes been supposed, the institution of the Jubilee is a mere paper-law; at least as far as concerns the land (for the periodical redistribution of which there are analogies in other nations), it must date from ancient times in Israel' (Driver). According to the Talmud, the law of the Jubilee was observed as long as the entire territory of the Holy Land was inhabited by Israelites. When a portion of the tribes went into exile, the law lapsed.

8. the days of. Equivalent to 'the time of', as in Gen. XXV, 7; XLVII, 8 f.

9. Horn. Heb. Shofar.

in the day of atonement. Although the year commenced on the first of Tishri, Rosh Hashanah, it was not until the tenth of the month, Yom Kippur, that the proclamation of the Jubilee was made. The Day of Atonement and the Jubilee had much in common. The message of both was a 'new birth'. The Day of Atonement freed man from slavery to sin and enabled him to start life anew, at one with God and with his fellow men. The Jubilee had for its aim the emancipation of the individual from the shackles of poverty, and the readjustment of the various strata in the commonwealth in accordance with social justice. No more appropriate day, therefore, for inaugurating such a year of rectification—as well as to attune the hearts of all to the sacrifices demanded by such rectification—than the day of Atonement; and no more suitable signal to inaugurate it than the blowing of the Shofar. Isa. LVIII, which forms the Haftarah for the Day of Atonement, seems to have been spoken on a Yom Kippur inaugurating a Jubilee year.

10. the fiftieth year. Some have held that the forty-ninth year itself was the Jubilee, as otherwise there would be two consecutive Sabbath-years. This opinion is not the traditional view, proclamation with the horn throughout all your land. 10. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family. 11. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you; ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of the undressed vines. 12. For it is a jubilee; it shall be holy unto you; ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field. 13. In this year of jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.*ii. 14. And if thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buy of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not wrong one another. 15. According to the number of years after the jubilee thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the crops he shall sell unto thee. 16. According to the multitude of the years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of the years thou shalt diminish the price of every man unto his possession. In this way the original equal division of the land was restored. The permanent accumulation of land in the hands of a few was prevented, and those whom fault or misfortune had thrown into poverty were given a 'second chance'.

According to Scripture 'the earth is the LORD's'; and all the land was, as it were, held from God on lease (v. 23). The Israelite who voluntarily or through some compulsion sold his land to another, sold not the ownership of the land, but the remainder of the lease—till the next year of Jubilee, when all the leases fell in simultaneously. The land then came back to his family, all contracts of sale to the contrary notwithstanding. His children thus enjoyed the same advantage of a 'fair start' as their father had had before them (Verinder). Heine rightly remarks that the Torah does not aim at the impossible—the abolition of property, but at the moralization of property, striving to bring it into harmony with equity and the true law of Reason by means of the Jubilee-year. This institution forms a most striking contrast to 'prescription' among the Romans, according to which the possessor of a piece of land could not, after the lapse of a certain period, be compelled to restore it to its real owner, so long as the latter was unable to show that he had during that period demanded restitution in due form. Far other is the spirit that we find in the Law of Moses. 'It is not the protection of property, but the protection of humanity, that is the aim of the Mosaic Code. Its Sabbath day and Sabbath year secure even to the lowliest, rest and leisure. With the blast of the jubilee trumpets the slave goes free, and a redivision of the land secures again to the poorest his fair share in the bounty of the common Creator' (Henry George).

11. ye shall not sow. The Jubilee year shares the features of the Sabbatical year.

12. out of the field. The Israelite may not store any of the produce, but whenever he requires corn or fruit, he may go out into the field and gather it.

13. unto his possession. This repetition of v. 10 serves as an introduction to the exposition of the law of land-tenure.

14. ye shall not wrong. There is to be no rack-renting.

15. according to the number of years. What is really conveyed to the purchaser is not the land, but the number of harvests which the incoming tenant would enjoy.

16. the number of the crops. As the land itself belonged to God (v. 23), only the produce could be a matter of sale.

it; for the number of crops doth he sell unto thee. 17. And ye shall not wrong one another; but thou shalt fear thy God; for I am the LORD your God. 18, Wherefore ye shall do My statutes, and keep Mine ordinances and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety. *iii (ii). 19. And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat until ye have enough, and dwell therein in safety. 20. And if ye shall say: 'What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we may not sow, nor gather in our increase'; 21. then I will command My blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth produce for the three years. 22. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat of the produce, the old store; until the ninth year, until her produce come in, ye shall eat the old store. 23. And the land shall not be sold in perpetuity; for the land is Mine; for ye are strangers and settlers with Me. 24. And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land. *iv. ¶ 25. If thy brother be waxen poor, and sell some of his possession, then shall his kinsman that is next unto him come, and shall redeem that which his brother hath sold. 26. And if a man have no one to redeem it, and he be waxen rich and find sufficient means to redeem it; 27. then let him count the fear thy God. This principle of a fair deal in the leasing of landed property was to be acted upon in all relations between man and man. Hence the addition of 'thou shalt fear thy God'; see on v. 43 and xix, 14.

18-23. EXHORTATION

18. dwell in . . . safety. What follows must be understood of both the Sabbatical and Jubilee years. If the enactments are conscientiously carried out, the people, far from suffering because of the 'Sabbath' allowed to the land, would dwell in safety; i.e. secure from the perils of drought and famine (cf. xxvi, 5).

21. for the three years. The exceptional fertility in the sixth year might be compared with the double portion of manna which was to be gathered on the sixth day (Exod. xvi, 22).

22. ninth year. Until the Feast of Tabernacles; for then the produce of the eighth year is gathered in and stored (Rashi). 'The experience of the present day in Syria shows that, after lying fallow for a year, a field requires several ploughings before it can be sown. The consequence is that sowing cannot be begun till the following spring—the eighth year of v. 22—and the crop is not available till late autumn, when the ninth year has begun' (Kennedy).

23. the land is Mine. This verse enunciates the basic principle upon which all these enactments rest. 'The earth is the LORD's' (Ps. xxiv, 1), and His people hold their lands in fee from Him. The ground itself, then, was not a proper object of sale, but only the result of man's labour on the ground.

24-28. REDEMPTION OF LAND

25. be waxen poor. Only dire poverty would induce an Israelite to part with his family heritage. When Ahab asks Naboth to sell his vineyard, he answers the king, 'The LORD forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee' (1 Kings xxi, 3).

his kinsman. Heb. goel, lit. 'redeemer'; the technical term for him whose duty it was to avenge the person of his next-of-kin, or redeem his property that had been leased away. See Jer. xxxii, 8-12, the Haftorah to the Sedrah.

shall redeem. The next-of-kin is not under compulsion to do this; it is a moral obligation upon him, if his circumstances permit, to see that the property reverts to the family at the earliest opportunity. In that case, the purchaser cannot refuse to accept a just offer of repayment and return the land.

26. waxen rich . . . redeem it. 'Becomes rich enough to buy it back himself' (Moffatt).

years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it; and he shall return unto his possession. 28. But if he have not sufficient means to get it back for himself, then that which he hath sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee; and in the jubilee it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession. *v(III). ¶ 29. And if a man sell a dwelling-house in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold; for a full year shall he have the right of redemption. 30. And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall be made sure in perpetuity to him that bought it, throughout his generations; it shall not go out in the jubilee. 31. But the houses of the villages which have no wall round about them shall be reckoned with the fields of the country; they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubilee. 32. But as for the cities of the Levites, the houses of the cities of their possession, the Levites shall have a perpetual right of redemption. 33. And if a man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold in the city of his possession, shall go out in the jubilee; for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession

27. the overplus. The amount by which the purchase money of the field exceeded the value of the crops reaped by the purchaser. In Rabbinic law, if the purchaser had resold the land to a second buyer, then the owner treats with the first purchaser, if he had sold it at a higher price than he paid; and with the second, if the price had been smaller. The purpose of this regulation was to give the advantage to the original owner, and also to discourage speculation in land values.

28. it shall go out. Into freedom. According to the testimony of Josephus, there was due recognition of tenants' improvements. 'When the Jubilee is come, he that sold the land, and he that bought it, meet together, and make an estimate, on the one hand, of the fruits gathered; and, on the other hand, of the expenses laid out upon it. If the fruits gathered come to more than the expenses laid out, he that sold it takes the land again; but if the expenses prove more than the fruits, the present possessor receives of the former owner the difference that was wanting, and leaves the land to him; and if the fruits received and the expenses laid out prove equal to one another, the present possessor relinquishes it to the former owner.'

29-34. REDEMPTION OF HOUSES

29. a dwelling-house. A house in a walled city could be disposed of in perpetuity; but the owner had the right of re-purchase during the first year of the sale.

a walled city. In contrast to villages; see on v. 31.

be made sure. That is, a house in the town could be sold 'out and out'; but not houses in the open country; see next v.

31. reckoned with the fields. Being indispensable to the man who had to work the land.

32. Levites. While Aaron and his sons were chosen for the priestly office, the menial services at the Sanctuary and Temple were assigned to the Levites—the rest of the tribe. In the Wilderness, they bore the furniture of the Sanctuary during the wanderings. At the Settlement in Canaan, the tribe of Levi received no definite domain, but scattered cities were assigned to them in territory belonging to other tribes. In these cities (see Num. xxxv, 2 f) the vendor has a perpetual right of redemption.

33. if a man purchase of the Levites. If one purchases a house in one of the Levitical cities, even if it be a walled city, the law of v. 30 does not apply; in the Jubilee, it reverts to the owner.

And if thy brother be waxen poor, and his means fail with thee; then thou shalt uphold him: as a stranger and a settler shall he live with thee. 36. Take thou no interest of him or increase; but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee. 37. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon interest, nor give him thy victuals for increase. 38. And if thy brother be waxen poor with thee, and sell himself unto thee, thou shalt not make him to serve as a bondservant. 40. As a hired servant, and as a settler, he shall be with thee; he shall serve with thee unto the year of jubilee. 41. Then shall he go out from thee, he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession

35-38. PRACTICAL LOVE OF NEIGHBOUR

35. if thy brother be waxen poor. He still remains thy brother, and is to be treated in a brotherly and considerate manner. This is in strongest contrast to the treatment of the impoverished debtor in ancient Rome. The creditor could imprison him in his own private dungeon, chain him to a block, sell him into slavery, or even put him to death. If the debtor had several creditors, the Roman Law of the Twelve Tables ordained that they could hew him in pieces; and although one of them took a part of his body larger in proportion than his claim, the other creditors had no redress!

uphold him. Or, 'relieve him.' Do not suffer him to come down into the depths of misery, for then it is difficult to raise him; but come to his support at the time when his means begin to fail (Rashi).

as a stranger and a settler shall he live. Better, yea though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live (AV, Zunz, Benisch—following Rashi and Ibn Ezra). The great principle of 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself' must be a reality in Israelite life. The stranger and alien settler are explicitly included in the term thy brother, and are to be helped by timely loans, free of interest.

shall he live with thee. These words can be understood quite literally: it is the Israelite's duty to see to it that his fellowman does not die of starvation. It was centuries, millennia even, before the world outside Israel learned this elementary duty. Constantine in 315 is the first European ruler to have effected poor relief legislation, only to be repealed by Justinian two centuries later. It was not till the days of Queen Elizabeth that poor relief came to be recognized as a duty of the State. Other States followed England's example in the nineteenth century.

36. interest. This prohibition led to the establishment in every organized Jewish community of a Gemillus Chassodim Society, for advancing loans free of interest to the poor; see also on Deut. xxiii, 20.

fear thy God. To take advantage of the dire need of the poor is contrary to all decent human feeling; for the Heb. idiom see on Exod. i, 17.

37. victuals for increase. Interest on food-stuffs, seed, and the like, which was paid in kind.

38. brought . . . Egypt. The Israelites, in their prosperity, were to remember the days when they were in bondage and needed the help that God had vouchsafed to them. Let them follow the Divine example, and not imitate the callousness of their Egyptian masters, but deal with their fellowmen in a spirit of brotherhood and justice.

39-46. NO PERMANENT SERVITUDE FOR ANY ISRAELITE

When a man's ill fortune forces him to sell himself into bondage, his Hebrew master had definite obligations towards one who is of the same flesh and blood as himself. These regulations are unique in the respect for labour they inculcate and the manner in which the dignity of the labourer is safeguarded.

of his fathers shall he return. 42. For they are My servants, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt; they shall not be sold as bondmen. 43, Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour; but shalt fear thy God. 44. And as for thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids, whom thou mayest have: of the nations that are round about you, of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids. 45. Moreover of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they have begotten in your land; and they may be your possession. 46, And ye may make them an inheritance for your children after you, to hold for a possession: of them may ye take your bondmen for ever; but over your brethren the children of Israel unto the year of jubilee. This must be understood in connection with Exod. xxi, 2 f, and Deut. xv, 12 f, which ordain that the Hebrew who sells himself into slavery serves his master for six years, and goes free in the seventh. Should the Jubilee occur before his six years of service are over, the servant regains his personal freedom at the same time that his inheritance returns to him, in the year of Jubilee.

41. his children. Should the Hebrew be the father of a family when he sells himself into slavery, the master has to take the children into his care and maintain them.

his own family. The Rabbis taught that the freed slave must be received with cordiality and friendliness by his relatives, and no slight shown to him because of his former servitude.

42. for they are My servants. An Israelite therefore can never be more than nominally a slave to any human master.

they shall not be sold as bondmen. lit. 'they shall not be sold the sale of a slave'. The Rabbis ruled that a Hebrew is not to be sold publicly in the slave-market, but the sale is to be privately arranged.

43. with rigour. The same word is used to describe the hardship of Israel's bondage in Egypt (Exod. i, 13). In Rabbinic law, the rules that should regulate the relationship between a master and his Hebrew slave are given in great detail, and are based on the principle that master and man are kinsmen; e.g. the slave must not be given inferior food or accommodation to that of the master. Kindliness and chivalry are to characterize the bearing of the Israelite towards his less fortunate brother.

but shalt fear thy God. 'Whenever this phrase is used it refers to matters that are part of heart-religion,' דְּבַר מִסּוּר לֵלֵב (Sifra); i.e. part of natural piety and fundamental humanity in our dealings with our fellowmen.

46. of them may ye take your bondmen. Better, you may hold them to service (Leeser); Heb. בהם תעבדו. 'You may hold them to service, but only to service, nothing more' (Sifra).

XXV, 46. SLAVERY

The system of slavery which is tolerated by the Torah was fundamentally different from the cruel systems of the ancient world, and even of Western countries down to the middle of the last century. The Code of Hammurabi has penalties only for the master who destroys the tooth or eye of another man's slave. It orders that a slave's ear be cut off, if he desires freedom; while to harbour a runaway slave was considered a capital offence. As to Greece, a slave was deemed 'an animated tool', and he could claim no more rights in his relationship to his master than a beast of burden. Agricultural labourers were chained. If at any time it was thought that there were too many slaves, they were exterminated, as wild beasts would be. Athens was an important slave market, and the State profited from it by a tax on the sales. So much for 'the glory that was Greece'. The 'grandeur that was Rome' was even more detestable. The slave was denied all human rights, and sentenced to horrible mutilation and even crucifixion at the whim of his master. Sick slaves were exposed to die of starvation, and there was corporate responsibility for slaves: Tacitus records that as late as the Empire the 400 slaves of one household were all put to death because they had been under their master's roof when he was murdered. Worlds asunder from these inhumanities and barbarities was the treatment accorded to the Hebrew slave. The position of Eliezer in Abraham's household (Gen. xxiv) enables us to realize the nature of servitude in the ancient Hebrew home. Kidnapping a man or selling him as a slave was a

And if a stranger who is a settler with thee be waxen rich, and thy brother be waxen poor beside him, and sell himself unto the stranger who is a settler with thee, or to the offshoot of a stranger's family, 48. after that he is sold he may be redeemed; one of his brethren may redeem him; 49, or his uncle, or his uncle's son, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or if he be waxen rich, he may redeem himself. 50. And he shall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he sold himself to him unto the year of jubilee; and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years; according to the time of a hired servant shall he be with him. 51. If there be yet many years, according unto them he shall give back the price of his redemption out of the money that he was bought for. 52. And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he shall reckon with him; according unto his years shall he give back the price of his redemption. 53. As a servant hired year by year shall he be with him; he shall not rule with rigour over him in thy sight. 54. And if he be not redeemed by any of these means, then he shall go out in the year of jubilee, capital offence. Cruelty on the part of the master that resulted in injury to an organ of the body secured the slave's freedom (Exod. xxi, 26 f); and if a slave ran away, he must not be surrendered to his master (Deut. xxiii, 16 f). A Fugitive Slave Law, such as existed in America, with the tracking of runaway slaves by blood hounds, would have been unthinkable to the Israelite of old.

47-55. ISRAELITES WHO ARE SLAVES OF ALIENS

47. offshoot. Children of alien settlers would frequently join the Israelitish community; but the case dealt with here is that of a Hebrew selling himself into the service of an alien who remained aloof from the community.

49. if he be waxen rich. lit. 'if he attaineth to power' (or 'means').

50. unto the year of jubilee. Hence it is to be deduced that, unlike the Hebrew slave who sells himself to a Hebrew master, his service does not automatically cease at the end of six years (Exod. xxi, 2). It is presupposed here that the man sold himself for an indefinite period, and unless redeemed would continue in bondage until the Jubilee.

a hired servant. The calculation is to be based on the assumption that the total sum paid was for a definite number of years till the Jubilee. This total sum is to be divided by the number of years, and it was to be considered that he had hired himself for the resulting amount per year (Rashi).

CHAPTER XXVI

1. Ye shall make you no idols, neither shall ye rear you up a graven image, or a pillar, neither shall ye place any figured stone in your land, to bow down unto it; for I am the LORD your God. 2. Ye shall keep My sabbaths, and reverence My sanctuary: I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XXVI

The traditional Hebrew division of the Bible Text attaches the first two verses of this chapter to the preceding. The association of ideas is explained by the Sifra in this way: at the end of the last chapter, the Torah had treated of the case of an Israelite who had sold himself as a slave to a heathen master, and who might be tempted to follow the worship of his heathen master. Therefore, the warning of these verses is uttered. The words may, however, have a wider application. These two verses give 'the quintessence of the foregoing legislation' (Baentsch).

7. v. הב' בקמץ

For a brief characterization of the life and message of Jeremiah see p. 229.

The Sedrah deals with the redemption of a family inheritance; and the Haftorah furnishes a striking instance of its observance at a great crisis in Israel's history. It was in the year 587, during the siege of Jerusalem, when Jeremiah was in prison because of his outspoken foretelling of the inevitable capture and destruction of the City by the Babylonians. At that dark hour, the Prophet 'redeemed' a piece of land, so that it should not pass out of his family.

He looks beyond the storm of judgment to the hope of a brighter day. In the offer of redempin the land of Benjamin; for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself.' Then I knew that this was the word of the LORD. 9. And I bought the field that was in Anathoth of Hanamel mine uncle's son, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver. 10. And I subscribed the deed, and sealed it, and called witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances. 11. So I took the deed of the purchase, both that which was sealed, containing the terms and conditions, and that which was open; 12. and I delivered the deed of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Mahseiah, in the presence of Hanamel mine uncle['s son], and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the deed of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the guard. 13. And I charged Baruch before them, saying: 14. 'Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: Take these deeds, this deed of the purchase, both that which is sealed, and this deed which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel; that they may continue many days. 15. For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: Houses and fields and vineyards shall yet again be bought in this land.' ¶ 16. Now after I had delivered the deed of tion that is made to him by a kinsman, he sees a God-sent opportunity to show forth to his brethren a Divine pledge that the night of Captivity will be followed by the morn of Return, when houses and lands will once again be freely bought and sold. His action finds a parallel during Hannibal's invasion of Italy, when a Roman purchased, at full price in public auction, the ground on which the enemy's army was encamped.

then I knew that this was the word of the LORD. He had previously (v. 7) had a mysterious premonition of the visit and of its purpose; but now he is convinced that God had inspired the visit. The purchase would illustrate in a most striking manner the certainty of Israel's restoration (see v. 15).

9-11. He bought the field, and sealed the purchase with all the legal formalities. The Jews had been vassals of Assyria and Babylon for about a century; and, it seems, transference of land was now performed according to the legal procedure of the Sovereign Power. As in all Babylonian documents of that nature, the deed was written on clay, and enclosed in a clay envelope, which was sealed up. A copy of the contract was inscribed on the envelope: this is referred to in v. 14 as the 'open' deed. Only in case of the writing on the envelope becoming obliterated, or of suspicion that it had been tampered with, was the envelope broken and the text itself examined.

Yet Thou hast said unto me, O Lord GOD: Buy thee the field for money, and call witnesses; whereas the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.' ¶ 26. Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying: 27. 'Behold, I am the LORD, the God of all flesh; is there any thing too hard for Me?

I am the LORD your God, who brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bars of your yoke, and made you go upright. ¶ 14. But if ye will not hearken unto Me, and will not do all these commandments; 15. and if ye shall reject My statutes, and if your soul abhor Mine ordinances, so that ye will not do all My commandments, but break My covenant; 16. I also will do this unto you: I will appoint terror over you, even consumption and fever, that shall make the eyes to fail, and the soul to languish; and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it. 17.

v. 15. קמץ כו"ק

7. ye shall chase. Should they attempt to attack you.

8. five . . . hundred. These are round numbers, not to be taken literally. They express the idea that the Israelites, with God as their helper, will be able to overcome vastly superior forces; e.g. the victories of the Maccabees over armies of great numerical superiority.

9. respect unto you. lit. 'turn unto you'; i.e. be gracious, favourably inclined towards you.
establish. Carry out.

10. the old. i.e. of the previous years; cf. xxv, 22.

11. My tabernacle. Better, My abiding presence (cf. Exod. xxv, 8); God will be manifestly with His people, as evidenced by their extraordinary happiness.

abhor you. Withdraw My favour so as to expose you to misfortune; cf. Jer. xiv, 19.

12. walk among you. A forcible image to describe how intimately God will associate with Israel.

13. brought you forth. That God is able to fulfil His promises is proved by His mighty acts in overthrowing the power of Egypt and setting Israel free.

bars. With which the yoke was fastened to the animal's neck.

14-39. THE WAGES OF DISOBEDIENCE

In dealing with the consequences of faithfulness, the Torah speaks in general terms; but in regard to the wages of disobedience, this Prophetic warning describes in much detail the penalties and horrors that would befall the sinful people. These are arranged in a series of five groups of increasing severity—sickness and defeat, famine, wild beasts, siege and exile.

16-18. SICKNESS AND DEFEAT

16. terror. i.e. terrible things, defined by what follows. The diseases which are mentioned are such as would strike terror in the heart of a person afflicted with any of them; cf. Deut. xxviii, 22.

consumption. Any disease which causes a wasting of the body.

fever. lit. 'a burning', internally.

sow your seed in vain. Toiling without enjoying the fruits of their labour is frequently given as a punishment for faithlessness; cf. Deut. xxviii, 30.

17. set My face. See xvii, 10; xx, 3, 6.

ye shall flee. They will be so demoralized that panic will seize them without cause; cf. v. 36 below.

And I will set My face against you, and ye shall be smitten before your enemies; they that hate you shall rule over you; and ye shall flee when none pursueth you. 18. And if ye will not yet for these things hearken unto Me, then I will chastise you seven times more for your sins. 19. And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass. 20. And your strength shall be spent in vain; for your land shall not yield her produce, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruit. 21. And if ye walk contrary unto Me, and will not hearken unto Me; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you according to your sins. 22. And I will send the beast of the field among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number; and your ways shall become desolate. 23. And if in spite of these things ye will not be corrected unto Me, but will walk contrary unto Me; 24, then will I also walk contrary unto you; and I will smite you, even I, seven times for your sins. 25. And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall execute the vengeance of the covenant; and ye shall be gathered together within your cities; and I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy. 26. When I break your staff of bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver your bread again by weight; and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied. ¶ 27. And if ye will not for all this hearken unto Me, but walk contrary unto Me; 28. then I will

18. seven times. A round number, meaning 'very much more.'

19-22. FAMINE AND WILD BEASTS

19. pride of your power. The power which is the cause of your pride. By 'power' is to be understood the feeling of independence that results from prosperity; cf. Deut. viii, 11-18.

heaven as iron. A cloudless heaven in the rainy season and an unproductive soil would quickly humble the pride of the people, and make them realize their helplessness.

21. contrary unto Me. Heb. קרי, acting perversely, and wilfully doing the opposite of what God wishes. The Heb. also means 'accident'. In defiant opposition to God, they would despise God's laws, and act as if accident ruled the moral and spiritual universe (S. R. Hirsch).

plagues. Strokes, smittings.

23-26. THE HORRORS OF SIEGE

23. corrected unto Me. The purpose of God's chastisements is the moral discipline of His people.

25. vengeance of the covenant. i.e. retribution for disregarding My covenant with you.

within your cities. You will flee from the enemy and take refuge behind the fortifications of your cities (cf. Jer. iv, 5); but even there punishments, in the form of epidemics, will overtake you and weaken your powers of resistance.

26. break your staff of bread. An expression denoting the cutting off of the food-supply. Food being that upon which life is supported, it is symbolized as a staff; Isa. iii, 1.

ten women. A round number. Although each household has its own oven, ten families will require the use of only one oven.

by weight. Food is so scarce that it is doled out by measure.

27-39. NATIONAL DESTRUCTION AND EXILE

28. in fury. The continued stubbornness of the people will lead to direr and direr punishment. The warnings now reach the climax of horror.

walk contrary unto you in fury; and I also will chastise you seven times for your sins. 29. And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat. 30. And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your sun-pillars, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols; and My soul shall abhor you. 31. And I will make your cities a waste, and will bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours. 32. And I will bring the land into desolation; and your enemies that dwell therein shall be astonished at it. 33. And you will I scatter among the nations, and I will draw out the sword after you; and your land shall be a desolation, and your cities shall be a waste. 34. Then shall the land be paid her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye are in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and repay her sabbaths. 35. As long as it lieth desolate it shall have rest; even the rest which it had not in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it. 36. And as for them that are left of you, I will send a faintness into their heart in the lands of their enemies; and the sound of sun-pillars. Or 'images of the sun-god.'

cast your carcasses. See II Kings xxiii, 14, 20, for a historical instance.

abhor you. In contrast to what was stated in v. 15.

31. your sanctuaries. God will not associate Himself with such a Temple; hence 'your sanctuaries', not 'My sanctuary' as in v. 2. The plural may refer to the different divisions of the Sanctuary.

I will not smell. Cf. Amos v, 21. Since the incense symbolized prayer (see on II, 1), the phrase means, 'I will ignore your petitions.' Sanctuary and sacrifice are valueless, if unaccompanied by moral obedience.

32. astonished. Amazement will seize them at the appalling desolation, and they will perceive that it is due to superhuman agency.

33. you will I scatter among the nations. 'There is a marvellous and grand display of the greatness of God in the fact that He holds out before the people whom He has just delivered from the hands of the heathen the prospect of being scattered again among the heathen, and that even before the land is taken by the Israelites, He predicts its return to desolation. These could only be spoken of by One who has the future really before His mind, who can destroy His own work, yet attain His end, certain of victory notwithstanding all opposing difficulties' (quoted in Keil-Delitzsch).

the sword after you. An expression for the hot pursuit of fugitives; cf. Ezek. xxi, 8-11. Malbim explains these words as an essential qualification of the first part of the verse, scatter among the nations. 'Israel's dispersion is not a curse in itself: it is a means of fulfilling God's purpose of spreading His word among the nations. The tragedy lies in being scattered because of the sword.'

34. be paid her sabbaths. Better, satisfy its sabbaths; i.e. make compensation for the years of release which the Israelites did not observe according to the dictates of the Law (Leeser). Driver explains that the Heb. word rendered 'be paid' is the technical term in connection with the settlement of an account. When the people are exiled, the land, here personified, will receive payment of an overdue account in the long Sabbath-rest which it will then enjoy; see next v.

36. left of you. The two preceding verses are a parenthesis, describing the 'rest' which the land would have, when its inhabitants had been carried into captivity. This verse resumes v. 33, and alludes to the fate, with its resulting cowardice and 'spiritual slavery', that would be in store for those who escaped. 'The author possessed the imagination of a poet as well as the eloquence of an orator' (Kennedy).

a driven leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as one fleeth from the sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth. 37. And they shall stumble one upon another, as it were before the sword, when none pursueth; and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies. 38. And ye shall perish among the nations, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up. 39. And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them. 40. And they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, in their treachery which they committed against Me, and also that they have walked contrary unto Me. 41. I also will walk contrary unto them, and bring them into the land of their enemies; if then perchance their uncircumcised heart be humbled, and they then be paid the punishment of their iniquity; 42. then will I remember My covenant with Jacob, and also My covenant with Isaac, and also My covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land. 43. For the land shall lie forsaken without them, and shall be paid her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them; and they shall be paid the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they rejected Mine ordinances, and their soul abhorred My statutes. 44. And yet for all that, when they are in the

37. stumble. In their panic, caused by demoralization and not by a real enemy, they would forget the need for mutual help; and each would endeavour to escape, even at the cost of sacrificing his brother—true psychology of the Golus.

38. eat you up. For the image of a land consuming those who dwell upon its soil, see Num. xiii, 32.

39. in their iniquity. From the consequences of their guilt; i.e. their punishment. To this guilt (and punishment) their fathers have contributed. with them. Refers to the fathers. There will be an added agony to the wretched lot of the sinful parents, that they will behold their children, who had followed their evil example, experiencing the hard fate which was so bitter to themselves. This explanation is supported by the Traditional accentuation of the words.

40-45. REPENTANCE SHALL BRING RESTORATION

40. confess. God desireth not the death of the sinner; and, therefore, every threat of punishment for disobedience is followed by a promise of mercy, if there is repentance and amendment. Divine discipline is for moral ends; and in truth the Exile proved a purifying furnace unto Israel.

treachery. Implying that faithlessness to the Covenant is a wrong committed directly against God; cf. v. 15.

41. I also will walk. Better, I also walk. They will acknowledge that the calamities which had overtaken them were God's method of humbling their arrogance.

uncircumcised. Unconsecrated, unclean; closed to the Divine call or appeal; cf. on xix, 23.

be paid. Acknowledge that the punishment was deserved; see, however, v. 34 and 43.

42. Jacob . . . Isaac . . . Abraham. God is stirred to mercy by recalling the noble ancestors of Israel and the Covenant He entered into with each. In retrospect, the last comes first to mind. the land. Which was itself a symbol of the Covenant with the Patriarchs, and prominently figured in the promises which God had made to them.

43. shall lie forsaken without them. Because the Israelites had failed to observe the Sabbatical year, they had wronged the soil of the Holy Land, and that wrong had to be expiated before they could return and resettle there; see xviii, 25.

CHAPTER XXVII

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying:
2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ When a man shall clearly utter a vow of persons unto the LORD, according to thy valuation, 3. then thy valuation shall be for the male from twenty years old even unto sixty years old, even thy valuation shall be fifty shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary. 4. And if it be a female, then thy valuation shall be thirty shekels. 5. And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy valuation shall be for the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels. 6. And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, then thy valuation shall be for the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy valuation shall be three shekels of silver. 7. And if it be from sixty years old and upward:

44. yet for all that. The chapter ends characteristically on a note of hope. God's anger may be severe, but it is not everlasting. He will grant His people every opportunity to renew the ancient Covenant. Israel—'a people who have been overthrown, crushed, scattered; who have been ground, as it were, to very dust, and flung to the four winds of heaven; yet who, though thrones have fallen, and empires have perished, and creeds have changed, and living tongues have become dead, still exist with a vitality seemingly unimpaired' (Henry George).

45. their ancestors. lit. 'the first' generations. It alludes not only to the Patriarchs, but to the founders of the Twelve Tribes and their descendants who left Egypt; cf. Deut. xix, 14; Isa. lxi, 4.

46. these are the statutes. This verse is the subscription not only to chaps. xvii-xxvi, but to the whole of Leviticus, the following chapter being an appendix to the Book.

CHAPTER XXVII

REDEMPTION OF VOWS AND TITHES

The Book of Leviticus concludes, as it opened, with a chapter of Sanctuary-regulations—voluntary contributions to the upkeep of the Sanctuary, such offerings being a true expression of devotion to the House of God.

2-8. VOWING AND VALUATION OF A PERSON

2. clearly utter a vow. By setting a valuation upon himself or any of his family, the money being paid into the treasury of the Sanctuary.

3. fifty shekels. The equivalent of £7 of our money, but the true value in purchasing power is many times that sum (Kennedy). The form, thy estimation, is archaic. See on Exod. xxx, 13.

4. thirty shekels. The valuation seems to have been made on the basis of what might be called the market value of the individual's labour. A woman, not possessing the physical strength of a man, had a lower valuation set upon her.

6. from a month old. No valuation is placed in regard to a child under a month old. In Jewish law there are no mourning rites to be observed for a child who dies within a month of birth.

if it be a male, then thy valuation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels. 8. But if he be too poor for thy valuation, then he shall be set before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to the means of him that vowed shall the priest value him. ¶ 9. And if it be a beast, whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD, all that any man giveth of such unto the LORD shall be holy. 10. He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good; and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then both it and that for which it is changed shall be holy. 11. And if it be any unclean beast, of which they may not bring an offering unto the LORD, then he shall set the beast before the priest. 12. And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad; as thou the priest valuest it, so shall it be. 13. But if he will indeed redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part thereof unto thy valuation. ¶ 14. And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the LORD, then the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad; as the priest shall value it, so shall it stand. 15. And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy valuation unto it, and it shall be his. *v(vll). ¶ 16. And if a man shall sanctify unto the LORD part of the field of his possession, then thy valuation shall be according to the sowing thereof; the sowing of a homer of barley shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. 17. If he sanctify

8. according to the means. 'If he (the person making the vow) be too poor to pay the valuation, then he shall set him (the person vowed) before the priest, and the priest shall value him.' The priest, in forming his estimate of what he could pay, must leave him sufficient means for his necessities (Talmud).

9-13. REDEMPTION OF AN ANIMAL

9. if it be a beast. If a 'clean' animal, that and none other had to be presented.

shall be holy. It became the property of the Sanctuary, and all profane use of it was interdicted.

10. not alter it. Even for one of greater value. Alter is to replace one species by another, e.g. a bull for a sheep; change refers to different members of the same species.

12. good or bad. i.e. whether it be of much value or little.

13. fifth part. See on v. 16.

14-15. REDEMPTION OF A HOUSE

14. sanctify. Dedicate.

15. redeem. As in v. 13. The law of xxv, 29 f applied to this case where the redeemer was not the owner. If the house was in a walled city, it could be redeemed by the owner within a year; and if not redeemed, it remained for ever in the possession of the buyer. In the case of a house situated in a village, the Jubilee-year brought its restitution to the owner.

16. possession. An inherited field, as contrasted with a piece of land which he had bought (v. 22).

the sowing thereof. The value of the land was estimated by the quantity of seed required to sow it. For each homer of seed used in sowing barley, the valuation was placed at fifty shekels for the whole period of forty-nine years. A homer was ten ephahs (see on xix, 36), and nearly six bushels in capacity.

But if he sanctify his field after the jubilee, then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain unto the year of jubilee, and an abatement shall be made from thy valuation. 19. And if he that sanctified the field will indeed redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy valuation unto it, and it shall be assured to him. 20. And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more. 21. But the field, when it goeth out in the jubilee, shall be holy unto the LORD, as a field devoted; the possession thereof shall be the priest's.*v1. 22. And if he sanctify unto the LORD a field which he hath bought, which is not of the field of his possession; 23. then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of thy valuation unto the year of jubilee; and he shall give thy valuation in that day, as a holy thing unto the LORD. 24. In the year of jubilee the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the possession of the land belongeth. 25. And all thy valuations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary; twenty gerahs shall be the shekel. ¶ 26. Howbeit the firstling among beasts, which is born as a firstling to the LORD, no man shall sanctify it; whether it be ox or sheep, it is the LORD's. 27. 20. if he will not redeem. If the redeemer of the field is not the owner, the Sanctuary becomes the de jure owner of the field, which at the next Jubilee becomes the inalienable property of the Sanctuary.

21. field devoted. See on v. 28.

22. bought. Since he bought the field until the Jubilee only, it is clear that his gift to the Sanctuary is only temporary.

23. in that day. The price had to be paid in one sum and in full-weight shekels (see on Exod. xxx, 13).

26-27. REDEMPTION OF A FIRSTLING shall sanctify. i.e. devote, as a voluntary offering.

27. an unclean beast. i.e. a dedicated clean animal that became blemished; in which case the proceeds of the sale were to be used for Temple repair (Rashi).

28-29. LAW OF THE BAN

28. devoted thing. lit. 'cut-off, excluded', irrevocably given up. There were three varieties of the ban, of differing degrees of stringency: the war ban, the justice ban, and the private ban. This verse deals with the last-named. The 'devoting' of anything to the Temple was a more solemn act than a mere presentation. The human being, animal, or field became 'most holy', i.e. remained the inalienable property of the Sanctuary, and passed into the possession of the priests.

field of his possession. Only an inheritance could be 'devoted', not a purchased field, since the latter only belonged to the owner temporarily, and passed out of his possession in the Jubilee. In the same manner, a Hebrew slave

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the LORD's; it is holy unto the LORD. 31. And if a man will redeem aught of his tithe, he shall add unto it the fifth part thereof. *m. 32. And all the tithe of the herd or the flock, whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the LORD. 33. He shall not inquire whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it; and if he change it at all, then both it and that for which it is changed shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed. ¶ 34. These are the commandments, which the LORD commanded Moses for the children of Israel in mount Sinai.

of men. 'The reference here is to the justice-ban; in other words, to the judicial sentence by the proper authorities on such malefactors as the idolater (see Exod. xxii, 19), and the blasphemer' (Kennedy). The individual was not permitted to carry out such a ban. Deut. xii, 31, forbids human sacrifice, and the putting to death of a slave is forbidden in Exod. xxi, 20.

30-33. REDEMPTION OF THE TITHE

is the LORD'S. Tithes belong to God as the real owner of the land; see on xxv, 23. They are a kind of rent paid by the people as His tenants. Being already God's, they cannot be made the subject of vows (Dummelow).

32. tithe of the herd. Every tenth animal born of the herd or flock had to be treated like the tenth of the produce of the field. The animals were sacrificed and the flesh consumed in Jerusalem. passeth under the rod. The Mishnah thus describes the procedure: The new-born animals were herded in a pen with one narrow exit, through which they could only pass in single file. As they came out, each tenth animal was touched on the back with a rod coated with red paint, and in this manner distinguished for the tithe.

33. he shall not inquire. The owner could not select which animals should form part of the tithe. If he substituted one of the designated animals for another, whether of better or inferior quality, he forfeited both.

34. these are the commandments. Cf. xxvi, 46. This verse seems to be the subscription of the concluding chapter only.

The Massoretic Note states the number of verses in Leviticus to be 859; its Sedrahs (parshiyoth) 10; its Sedarim, smaller divisions according to the Triennial Cycle, 23; and its Chapters 27.

CHAPTER XVI

CAP. XVI. טז

19. O LORD, my strength, and my strong-hold,

And my refuge, in the day of affliction,
Unto Thee shall the nations come From the ends of the earth, and shall say:

'Our fathers have inherited nought but lies,
Vanity and things wherein there is no profit.'

20. Shall a man make unto himself gods,
And they are no gods?

21. Therefore, behold, I will cause them to know,

This once will I cause them to know

My hand and My might;

And they shall know that My name is the LORD.

CHAPTER XVII

1. The sin of Judah is written

With a pen of iron, and with the point of

The Sedrah proclaims the happy result of national faithfulness, and the inevitable and disastrous consequences of national faithlessness to the Divine Law. The Haftorah is the utterance of the Prophet who witnessed the destruction of the Temple and State through the religious and moral degeneracy of the nation. His words, especially in the verses preceding this section, are thus an echo of the prophecy of Moses. But Jeremiah's message here is one of great hope. Even heathen nations shall yet acknowledge that truth and moral sanity are only to be found in the Revelation given to Israel. Let Israel trust—as he does—in God, the faithful Physician, who will heal them, and establish them on an eternal foundation.

19. have inherited nought but lies. The Prophet foresees the time when the heathen from the utmost ends of the earth will realize the vanity and falsehood of their hereditary gods, and come to acknowledge God's glorious Name.

That all mankind will at last grope their way out of the night of traditional ignorance towards the Truth, is a fundamental conviction of the Jewish spirit. This has found expression in the Oleynu prayer, with its culminating aspiration, taken from the Prophet (Zech. xiv, 9), The LORD shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall the LORD be One, and His name one (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 77), and in the וְיֵאָתֵי hymn of the New Year liturgy, dating from the early Middle Ages:—

'All the world shall come to serve Thee,
And bless Thy glorious Name,
And Thy righteousness triumphant

ADDITIONAL NOTES TO LEVITICUS

ITS ANTIQUITY AND MOSAIC AUTHORSHIP

Both the antiquity and the Mosaic authorship of the Book of Leviticus are denied by Bible Critics. They declare Leviticus to be part of that section of the Pentateuch which they call the 'Priestly code' and usually designate by the letter P. This 'Priestly code,' or P, is supposed to include, besides Leviticus, some portions of Genesis and Exodus (especially the chapters on the Tabernacle) and twenty-eight chapters of Numbers. They maintain that while some portions of P may be earlier than others, they were all edited, or written, by Ezra and his School and made an integral part of the Law of Moses in the year 444 before the Christian era, or very shortly thereafter.

It must be clearly understood that this idea of a 'Priestly code' and of its late origin is nothing more than pure hypothesis, and there is not a shred of evidence to show that it ever constituted a separate work. In fact, the whole Documentary theory as propounded by Julius Wellhausen and his followers—i.e. that the Pentateuch consists of separate 'documents' of different date and authorship—rests on unproved assumptions. It is easy to make any theory look plausible, if the facts are selected or trimmed judiciously; and Bible Critics are most judicious both in selecting the facts and in trimming them to suit their purpose. When the facts are against their theory, the facts are altered or pronounced to be a later gloss in the passage in which they occur, or the Critics declare the whole passage to be sheer forgery. Irreconcilable differences between the 'documents' are created, leading to a complete reversal of Israel's story. And the principal support for such a topsyturvy presentation of Bible history and religion is the alleged existence of these irreconcilable differences between the 'documents'. It is all reasoning in a vicious circle.

Outstanding scholars, like Prof. Sayce, have from the first pronounced the Documentary theory of the Pentateuch to be a 'baseless fabric of subjective imagination'. Others have come to share his view, realizing more and more the insuperable objections to the theory of the late origin of the Levitical legislation. The whole Critical theory is to-day being questioned on fundamental issues. Nevertheless, the popularizers of theological literature ignore altogether the existence of any other opinion than that of the Critics, and they continue to write as if the lateness of Leviticus were indeed one of the 'finalities of scholarship'. That nothing could be further from the truth will be plain to any student who will take the trouble to consult the following books:—

J. Robertson, The Early Religion of Israel (William Blackwood)—the first critical investigation of the Wellhausen hypothesis in English;

James Orr, The Problem of the Old Testament (James Nisbet)—gives a comprehensive survey of the weaknesses of the Critical position;

W. L. Baxter, Sanctuary and Sacrifice (Eyre and Spottiswoode)—demolishes the foundation pillars of Wellhausen's structure;

H. M. Wiener, Essays in Pentateuchal Criticism (Elliot Stock)—is a lawyer's examination of the Critical claims; and

D. Hoffmann, Die Wichtigsten Instanzen gegen die Graf-Wellhausensche Hypothese (Poppelauer, Berlin)—written over a generation ago, but still unanswered because unanswerable.

THE INTERNAL EVIDENCE AGAINST THE CRITICAL THEORY

Leviticus merely continues the story of the departure from Egypt and of the Children of Israel in the Wilderness. The few incidents in Leviticus, as well as its legislation, point to a sojourn in the Desert of the Sinai Peninsula prior to the occupation of Canaan. A verse such as 'After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do; and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do' (xviii, 3), is in itself decisive in favour of the Mosaic date.

In many passages of the Book, the going forth from Egypt, and the manifestation of God's protecting power in the release, are spoken of as events of recent occurrence, fresh in the memory of those who had experienced the Divine mercy.

Israel is contemplated as living in tents, and the conditions of life which are presupposed are those of a camp (see on Lev. xvii, 3). The Sanctuary is depicted as a temporary structure of a portable nature, such as would be required while the people were wandering in the Wilderness. Leviticus assumes the people to be within reach of the religious centre, and in a position to attend the Sanctuary during the pilgrimage Festivals: in Ezra's time, this was impossible, as the bulk of the people was in Babylon, and another portion had drifted back to Egypt. The ritual of Azazel on the Day of Atonement is patently archaic, and had to be modified to meet the conditions of later times; see commentary on Lev. xvi, 21, p. 483.

The priests are always denoted as 'Aaron and his sons.' Their initial consecration to the priestly office is described (Lev. viii), to which ceremony 'all the congregation' was summoned (ibid. v. 3). This is meaningless on the supposition of the late origin of the Book. Furthermore, P exalts the High Priest. In Ezra's age, the High Priests were not worthy of honour, and seem to have been among those that attempted to thwart the work of religious reformation.

Similarly, the story of the blasphemer in Leviticus (xxv, 10-12) is inexplicable on the Critical theory. A son of an Israelitish woman blasphemes, he is put in ward, but no one knows what punishment is to be meted out for that offence. Compare with this the story of Naboth and his judicial murder for alleged blasphemy in 1 Kings xxi, which chapter the Critics declare to be centuries older than Leviticus. When Jezebel, by means of perjured witnesses, convicts Naboth of that grave offence, there is not the slightest doubt in the mind of the judges and the people—as little as in Jezebel's own mind—what his punishment is to be. Now, if we were to admit that the narrative of the blasphemer was indeed written, or even 'edited', for the benefit of the post-Exilic community, is it reasonable to assume that in those days there would be doubt as to the penalty for blasphemy?

The evidence of the language of Leviticus precludes a late date of composition. Reihn, Delitzsch, Dillmann, and Hoffmann have demonstrated that it cannot truthfully be said to show traces of Exilic or post-Exilic times. The technical terms of the sacrificial regulations point to hoary antiquity, and are linguistically derived from ancient Arabic and Minæan (Hommel). There is in Leviticus an entire absence of neo-Babylonian or Persian loan-words that would reflect the age of the Exile. Of course, the language, vocabulary, and style differ considerably from that of the historical parts of the Pentateuch. But this is due to the nature of the subjects treated in Leviticus; e.g. sacrifices, leprosy, land laws, as against stories of family life, national history, and moral admonition in the other books. One hundred years ago, Macaulay drafted the Penal Code for India. In that work, his whole manner of writing—vocabulary, sentence-formation, and style—is different from that used by him in his History, Essays, Speeches, or Ballads. Yet, would anyone question Macaulay's authorship of the Indian Code, or would anyone advance the hypothesis of the existence of five separate Macaulays—one each for the History, Essays, Speeches, Ballads, and Code—and living centuries apart from one another?

Bible Critics point to the Tochacha, the Admonition in Lev. xxvi, as proof that at any rate that chapter must have been written at a late date, because the punishments foreshadowed in that chapter (v. 14-45) were clearly realized in the time of the Babylonian Exile. Those who do not eliminate the Divine from history or from human life regard the Tochacha as belonging to that unique mass of Bible predictions that have been fulfilled to the letter, and that are wholly inexplicable except on the Providential view of human history. But even quite apart from the predictive element in prophecy, there is no reason to doubt the Mosaic authorship of this chapter.

Hoffmann has drawn attention to a parallel of the Tochacha in the far older code of Hammurabi. One thousand years before Moses, that code concludes with the promise of blessings of the god Shamash for obedience to his law, and with a detailed account of the calamities that would overtake those who are faithless to them. Leviticus xxvi is thus merely another instance of the principle דברה תורה כלשון בני אדם, which the Jewish exegetes of the Middle Ages translated to mean—Scripture chooses those forms of literary expression that would be most effective with the hearers to whom they are addressed.

One more striking circumstance. The Ten Commandments are given on Mt. Sinai, and the promulgation of the other laws takes place in the Wilderness and the plains of Moab. How came they to be attributed to lands outside the Holy Land, territories that had no sacred associations for the men of Ezra's age, or for that matter even for the heroes of the Patriarchal age? Surely such a strange, 'inconvenient,' unnatural tradition is not likely to have been invented, but is based on fact. And if so, the events associated with that tradition could only have taken place in Mosaic times.

II

IMPROBABILITY OF THE CRITICAL THEORY

It is evident that if the Critical account of the origin and promulgation of the so-called Priestly code is accepted, it is necessary to attribute deliberate fraud to Ezra. The Critics do not feel this moral difficulty, because the avowed object of many of the Critics has for a long time been to 'deprive Israel of its halo', and to degrade its saints and heroes. But even those who do not recoil from attributing fraud to the sacred writers should weigh the sheer improbability of the introduction of a new code in the manner put forward by the Critical theory.

'It is utterly out of the question, that a body of laws, never before heard of, could be imposed upon the people as though they had been given by Moses centuries before; and that they could have been accepted and obeyed by them, notwithstanding the fact that these laws imposed new and serious burdens, set aside established usages to which the people were devotedly attached, and conflicted with the interests of powerful classes of the people' (W. H. Green).

Thus, on the theory of the Critics, tithes of corn, oil, and cattle for the support of the Levitical order had never before been heard of; yet the people submit to the new burdens without dissent. The Book of Nehemiah shows that there was a strongly disaffected party and a religiously faithless party in Jerusalem; yet no one raises a doubt. The Book of Deuteronomy was in the hands of at least the priests; yet even the hostile members of that body do not attempt to ward off the alleged new legislation by appealing to Deuteronomy xiii, 1, 'All this word which I command you, that shall ye observe to do; thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it.' Even the Samaritans—then the bitterest enemies of Ezra and the Jews—are supposed to receive 'Ezra's Torah' as the undoubted work of Moses, and seem to keep on changing and enlarging it, as the followers of Ezra—on the assumption of the Critics—keep on making new additions to it for at least a century after his death!

The improbability of Ezra attempting to pass off his work as the work of Moses, or of his succeeding in such a hypothetical attempt, will be considerably increased, when we realize the lack of agreement between the 'Priestly code' and the conditions that confronted Ezra and his generation. P brings many things that could have been only of archæological interest. Its largest section deals with the portable Sanctuary in the Wilderness; but in Ezra's time, the Tabernacle, the Ark, the Urim and Thummim had long ceased to exist. The tithe-laws as given in P are intended for a large body of Levites and a small number of priests, in the proportion of ten Levites to one priest. But the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah tell us that in the community under Ezra's spiritual guidance there were, on the contrary, twelve priests to one Levite! And yet Ezra is alleged by the Critics to have spent fourteen years, from 458–444, in the adaptation of the older legal enactments to the conditions of the community in Palestine (Oxford Hexateuch, I, 137).

Even more strange, on the theory of the Critics, is the absence of all reference in the 'Priestly code' to the burning religious problems of the returned exiles, such as intermarriage. Ezra is crushed by grief and despair when he realizes the extent of the evil in the new community. 'And when I heard this thing, I rent my garments and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, and sat down. . . . I fell upon my knees and spread out my hands unto the LORD my God.' He then set about the work of reformation; he called upon the nobles and people to put away their strange wives. They answer with a loud voice, 'As thou hast said, so must we do'; and they enter upon the covenant, so fateful for the future of Israel and of monotheism. But to all this matter of intermarriage, which was of vital concern to Ezra and his School, there is not the slightest reference in the very legislation which, we are asked to believe, was produced for the salvaging of the community from the mortal danger of absorption among the heathens. No less than two chapters in the 'Priestly code' (Lev. xviii and xx) are devoted to the subject of prohibited marriages; but not a word to the question which shook the post-Exilic community to its foundations. Surely an unaccountable omission—if the Critics are right.

There is, furthermore, no provision in P for the singers, porters, Nethinim, and Levites of Ezra's day. 'The musical services of the Temple are as much beyond its line of vision as the worship of the Synagogue.' In view of the minute way in which Leviticus regulated worship for the Mosaic generation, is it conceivable that, if Leviticus were a product of Ezra's age, there would be in it nothing directly bearing on the manner of contemporary worship?

III

THE ARGUMENT FROM SILENCE

A favourite argument against the early date of Leviticus is the so-called argument from silence. It is somewhat as follows: Throughout the period of the Judges and Kings, we find that the precepts of the Book of Leviticus were violated; hence, they could not then have existed. Furthermore, it is alleged that there is no explicit reference to them in the historical books of Judges, Samuel, and Kings—another supposed proof that they could not have been known.

As to the first consideration, even cases of flagrant violation do not disprove the existence of the law as laid down in Leviticus. Neither a Jewish law, nor any other law, necessarily presupposes universal compliance with its terms. All historical experience is against it. It is unnecessary to point to modern laws of incontestable and universally acknowledged existence that are accompanied by open and organized violation. And the same is true of ancient laws, even of those believed to have Divine sanction. Take the prohibition of image-worship in the Ten Commandments. Canon Charles has aptly pointed out that for fifteen centuries the whole of Christendom disregarded it, and half of the Christian Church is still disregarding it. If violation of a law were proof of its non-existence, then the Second Commandment has to this day not yet been given! In fact, the Critics themselves note that the existence and the disregard of a law-book may very well go together. Deuteronomy became known—they hold—in the year 620, during the reign of king Josiah. It was observed during his lifetime; but immediately after his death, it was totally disregarded. The attitude of the Critics is therefore as follows:—non-observance of the Law in the ages after Moses is proof absolute that no such Law was ever promulgated in the days of Moses; but non-observance of the Law after the death of Josiah does not prove the non-existence of the Law in Josiah's time. In other words, 'witnesses are reliable when they testify in favour of the Critics; but their veracity is promptly impeached, if their testimony is on the other side' (Baxter). For departures from statutory law in exceptional circumstances, see p. 371.

And as for the second consideration, viz, the silence of the Historical books, that is an even feebler support for the Critical position. A few examples will illustrate its feebleness. Thus, none of the Prophets speaks of the Ten Commandments, and there are exceeding few references to Sabbath, New Moon, or circumcision outside the Pentateuch; and yet no responsible historian doubts the existence of these institutions in ancient Israel. As for the Day of Atonement, the first clear and unmistakable mention of it after the Pentateuch is in Roman times by Josephus! Furthermore, all Critics admit that the Passover and the Feast of Weeks existed in Israel since the earliest days. The Feast of Weeks, however, is nowhere named in the Historical books of the Bible; and Passover only twice, and then only in connection with exceptional conditions. An examination of the passages in which Passover is alluded to (Josh. v and II Kings xxiii) shows conclusively that, but for these exceptional conditions, viz. that the Festival had for a long time fallen into neglect, there would have been no record of its celebration. Would, in that case, the silence of the Bible have been valid evidence that Passover was unknown until after the Exile? Similarly, wherever the Sabbath is referred to outside the Pentateuch, it is nearly always in passages where the Israelites are rebuked for desecrating the holy day. Had the Sabbath been duly observed by the Israelites, none of the Prophets would have had occasion to mention it. The fact, then, that the Day of Atonement is never alluded to in the Historical books is really evidence in favour of its regular observance.

Critics dwell on the fact that the Day of Atonement is not mentioned in I Kings viii, 65, which describes the celebration of the dedication of Solomon's Temple. That celebration lasted a fortnight, during which period the tenth of the seventh month occurred, and there is no record that the festivities were suspended for that day. But neither is there in that chapter any indication that the popular rejoicings were moderated on the Sabbath day. Are we to argue that the Sabbath was unknown? We have here but another instance that, in regard to the feasts and fasts, Scripture does not record what is usual and normal, but only what is unusual and abnormal. This also explains Nehemiah viii. That chapter describes the unusual events in the seventh month of the year 444, among them the observance of the Feast of Tabernacles on the 15th, 'for since the days of Joshua the son of Nun unto that day had not the children of Israel done so' (v. 17). It is silent in regard to the Day of Atonement, because evidently there had been no interruption in its observance, as it is quite unlikely that the priests ever allowed their supreme function in the Temple service on that day to fall into abeyance. The fast described in Nehemiah ix was not a substitute for the Day of Atonement. It was a special fast for special evils. It was a day of prayer and contrition, on which the people confessed the 'iniquities of their fathers' as well as their own. There is not the slightest analogy to the Day of Atonement. It was a fast supplementary to it, called forth by the uniqueness of the circumstances.

What we can deduce from the Biblical data is that past history is repeating itself at the present time. Just as many modern Jews who neglect the Sabbath and Festivals adhere to Yom Kippur, so in the periods of religious decadence in the past, the Israelites seem to have hallowed the Day of Atonement while ignoring the other Festivals.

IV

'EVOLUTION' IN SACRIFICE

'Those who advocate revolutionary ideas, either in government, in scholarship, or in religion, must show good cause and their arguments must possess overwhelming force. The proof must be clear, strong, and conclusive, without a shadow of suspicion in its reality or its sufficiency.' None can gainsay the reasonableness of this demand, put forward by an impartial judge of the Critical views, nor the lamentable failure of those views to meet this reasonable demand. 'But,' it is said, 'these new views are in line with the principle of Evolution. In ritual, as in every thing else, the more developed must be later than the less developed, out of which, on the principle of Evolution, it has gradually grown. As the Priestly code (Leviticus and Numbers) shows the most ramified sacrificial enactments, it must be the latest of all the documents of the Pentateuch.' We are even told that there is a clear evolution from the simple to the complex in sacrifice, a straight line of development from the Prophetic document (JE) to Deuteronomy (D), from Deuteronomy (D) to Ezekiel, and from Ezekiel to the Priestly Code (P).

If there ever was an instance when the saying was true that 'theories are vast soap-bubbles with which the grown-up children of Learning amuse themselves, while the ignorant public stand gazing on and dignify these vagaries by the name of Science', that instance is Evolution in sacrifice. In the first place, the straight line of evolution—JE, D, Ezekiel, and P—turns out to be anything but straight. It is now generally admitted by the Critics that the 'Priestly code'—or at any rate its most important constituent, the Holiness chapters—is far from being the latest of the series. Instead of being the culmination of the chain, it is the source of Ezekiel. Ezekiel is saturated with the phraseology of Leviticus xvii–xxvi, and he takes for granted an acquaintance therewith on the part of his Babylonian hearers. But Leviticus is not only older than Ezekiel's half-ideal and half-allegorical vision of the constitution of the New Jerusalem, it is older than Deuteronomy; for the law of leprosy in Lev. xiii is the basis of Deuteronomy xxiv, 8, and Deuteronomy xii presupposes Lev. xvii.

In the second place, the whole idea of evolution does not apply to a field of human history like the institution of sacrifice. In the realm of language, for example, it is not true to say that, on the one hand, the more simple the language, the more primitive it is; nor, on the other hand, the more complex it is, the later is its appearance in the life of any ethnic group. Thus, Anglo-Saxon, with its five cases and eight declensions of the noun, is immeasurably more complicated than its direct lineal descendant, modern English; even as Latin is far more complex than Italian. The same holds true in the development of ritual laws. Besides, the statement that Leviticus must be the latest sacrificial legislation, because its ritual laws are the most elaborate, is quite against the evidence of primitive cultures. 'It does not appear that very simple systems of law and observance do belong to very primitive societies, but rather the contrary' (Rawlinson).

The case for 'evolution' in Biblical sacrifice is furthermore based by its advocates on a series of dogmatic assumptions which are not only not borne out by the facts, but are in direct contradiction to the facts. Among those unwarranted assumptions are the following: that in ancient Israel every slaughter for food was an act of sacrificial worship; that originally there was unlimited freedom of altar-building; that early sacrifices were all joyful feasts, with a total absence of any underlying reference to sin; and that sin- and guilt-offerings are late inventions, the fruit of the 'monotonous seriousness' of the so-called Priestly code.

Hoffmann, Wiener, and especially Baxter in his masterly Sanctuary and Sacrifice, have subjected these assumptions to an annihilating examination and shown their utter falsity.

As to sacrifice and slaughter being absolutely synonymous terms, Wiener refers to Exod. xxi, 37 ('If a man steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it'), and he asks, Does the Legislator contemplate the sacrifice of stolen animals and of places made holy as the result? To ask the question is to reveal the utter absurdity of the Critical contention on this point.

To proceed to the next assumption of the Critics. The statement that there was unrestricted altar-building, and consequent multiplicity of sanctuaries, in ancient Israel rest, upon a mistranslation of Exodus xx, 21. בכל המקום does not mean 'in every place', but 'in whatever place' (Graetz). That is, in whatever place God would designate for worship—Shiloh, Gibeon, Jerusalem—an altar might be erected, and sacrificial worship would there be considered legitimate. Such permission of successive places of worship, till the building of the Central Sanctuary in Jerusalem, is something quite different from a recognition of simultaneous sanctuaries in different places.

The charge that the strict regulations concerning the sacrificial cult killed all the spontaneous joy which characterized ancient Israelite worship, implies a partiality on the part of the Critics for the lawless licence, foul sensuality, and unrestrained jollity of the heathen merry-makings—half-sacrifices, half-picnics—that were not infrequent in times of national apostasy. For nothing is further from the truth than to say that the Torah did, or does, kill joy. One commandment alone—that concerning Tabernacles, and found in the so-called Priestly code—would be sufficient to refute this. 'And ye shall take you on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days' (Lev. xxiii, 40). The very men whom the Critics would turn into the makers of the 'Priestly code' soothe the people when weeping over their sins on that historic New Year's Day (Nehemiah viii) with the words: 'This day is holy unto the LORD your God; mourn not, nor weep. Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto him for whom nothing is prepared; for the joy of the LORD is your strength.'

Even more astounding is the statement, in effect, that the sense of sin was unknown in Israel before the days of Ezra! It is sufficient to point to the agonized cry in Micah vi, 6 and 7—

'Wherewith shall I come before the LORD . . .
Shall I give my first-born for my transgression,
The fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?'

Surely, if the semi-heathen worshipper of whom Micah speaks felt such a sense of guilt, the loyal Israelite did not have to wait for Ezra to invent sin- and guilt-offerings to ease his soul. And were not penitential psalms written in Babylon some two thousand years before Ezra's date? So far from sin- and guilt-offerings being of quite late date, they are distinctly mentioned in pre-Exilic times (e.g. ii Kings xii, 17); and, for that matter, are never mentioned in any post-Exilic Prophet. There is no truth whatsoever in the statements that P assigns 'an enormous importance' to the sin offering, or that peace offerings were in post-Exilic times practically banished. In the most exhaustive sacrificial catalogue in the 'Priestly Code' (Numbers vii), the other sacrifices outnumber sin offerings in the proportion of seventeen to one!

Probably the strangest argument of all for the lateness of P is, that Ezekiel and his circle wrote down from memory the pre-existent Temple usage; for 'so long as the cult lasted, no sacrificial code was needed'. This is contrary both to reason and historical analogy. It is contrary to reason to maintain 'that the laws of sacrificial worship were first written down, or even invented, during the Exile in Babylon, when there was no longer any sacrificial worship' (Dillmann). It is also contrary to historical analogy. Written regulations for the existing sacrificial cult existed in Egypt, Babylonia, and Phœnicia.

One concluding consideration. The Critics themselves tell us that sacrifice was of old the natural and universal expression of religious homage; that religion without sacrificial cult was unthinkable throughout antiquity; and they admit that 'heathen sacrificial worship was a constant menace to morals and monotheism' (Wellhausen). If, therefore, there was any Divine choice of Israel at all, is it not of all things the most natural that Israel's manner of Divine Service should be freed from everything foul, cruel, immoral, and idolatrous? (Baxter). But for such regulation at the hand of Moses, banishing everything debasing either to morals or monotheism from what is admitted by all to have been the universal expression of religious homage, his mission would assuredly have failed, and his work would have disappeared.

I. SACRIFICE: HEBREW AND HEATHEN

According to Bible and Talmud, the institution of sacrifice is as old as the human race. The study of primitive man, likewise, traces its origins back to the very beginnings of human society, and declares sacrificial worship to be both an elementary and a universal fact in the history of Religion.

Apart from various unconvincing theories as to the rise of sacrifice, there are two simple explanations as to the fundamental meaning of sacrifice.

The first of these takes sacrifice to be an act of homage and submission to the Heavenly Ruler, or of thankfulness for God's bounties; even as the suppliant expresses his submissiveness and his gratitude to an earthly ruler by gifts. The other declares that sacrifice arose from primitive man's yearning for reconciliation with the Deity. If for some reason the worshipper feared that he had forfeited Divine favour, he sought to propitiate it; and the giving up of things dearest to him—his first-born, his cattle, his possessions—was intended to effect this propitiation.

The existence of animal sacrifice as a virtually universal custom of mankind from times immemorial proves that the expression of religious feeling in this form is an element of man's nature and, therefore, implanted in him by his Creator. To spiritualize this form of worship, free it from cruel practices and unholy associations, and so regulate the sacrificial cult that it makes for a life of righteousness and holiness, was the task of monotheism. In heathen Semitic religions, sacrificial worship was cruel, often requiring human victims. It was foul—licentious rites being an essential element in many kinds of sacrifice. It was immoral—covering crimes and deliberate iniquities against fellow-men. It was irrational—steeped in demonology and magic. In absolute contrast to this degrading heathenism, the Torah banishes everything cruel, foul and unholy from the sacrificial cult. Moreover, the sphere of the efficacy of sacrifice is strictly limited; and, with a few specified exceptions (Lev. v, 1-6, 20-26), sacrifice atones only for sins committed unwittingly, if no human being suffers by them; viz., if restitution precedes the sacrifice. 'A deliberate moral obliquity is not to be obliterated by sacrifice. It must be punished under the penal law or forgiven by repentance, and for the individual there is no other means of atonement' (Montefiore).

Moderns do not always realize the genuine hold that the sacrificial service had upon the affections of the people in ancient Israel. It was for ages the main outward manifestation of religion, as well as the vehicle of supreme spiritual communion. The Central Sanctuary was the axis round which the national life revolved. The Temple was the forum, the fortress, the 'university' and, in the highest sense, the spiritual home of ancient Israel. The people loved the Temple, its pomp and ceremony, the music and song of the Levites and the ministrations of the priests, the High Priest as he stood and blessed the prostrate worshippers amid profound silence on the Atonement Day. As for the choicer spirits, their passionate devotion found expression in words like those of the Psalmist :—

'How lovely are Thy tabernacles, O LORD of hosts, My soul longeth, yea, fainteth for the courts of the LORD. . . .
Happy are they that dwell in Thy house.'

'As the hart panteth after the water brooks,
So panteth my soul after Thee, O God.
My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God:
When shall I come and appear before God?'

'O send out Thy light and Thy truth; let them lead me;
Let them bring me unto Thy holy mountain, and to Thy dwelling-places;
Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God, my exceeding joy.'

Religious ecstasy has rarely found nobler expression than in these lines of the Psalmist; and that words like these reflected the sincere and earnest faith of god-fearing men is beyond question. However, 'bad men also confided in sacrifice as an effective means of placating God, just as a gift might serve to corrupt a judge. This confidence in the efficacy of sacrifice involved an immoral idea of God and Religion. Against it, therefore, the Prophets direct their attack' (Moore).

II. DO THE PROPHETS OPPOSE SACRIFICE?

Widespread misunderstanding exists in regard to the attitude of the Prophets to the sacrificial cult, which attitude is often represented as an uncompromisingly hostile one. This is far from being the case.

The Prophets do not seek to alter or abolish the externals of religion as such. They are not so unreasonable as to demand that men should worship without aid of any outward symbolism. What they protested against was the fatal tendency to make these outward symbols the whole of religion; the superstitious over-estimate of sacrifice as compared with justice, pity and purity; and especially the monstrous wickedness with which the offering of sacrifices was often accompanied.

Thus, Amos denounces the people for their oppressions and impurities, warning them that as long as these are adhered to, the multiplication of sacrifices will not avert God's threatened judgments.

'I hate, I despise your feasts, and I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies. Yea, though you offer me burnt-offerings and your meal-offerings, I will not accept them, neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts. Take thou away from Me the noise of thy song; and let Me not hear the melody of thy psalteries. But let justice well up as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream' (v, 21-24).

God would not be the God of Holiness if He did not 'hate' and 'despise' sacrifices, hymns and songs of praise on the part of unholy and dishonourable worshippers. But there is no intimation that sacrifice, prayer and praise will continue to be 'hated', if the worshippers cast away their vile and oppressive deeds. In the same exhortation, he pleads :—

'Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish justice in the gate; it may be that the LORD, the God of hosts, will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph' (v, 15).

Isaiah declares that the most elaborate ritual, if unaccompanied by righteous conduct, is both futile and blasphemous. In his opening arraignment of contemporary Israel, he proclaims :—

'Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity. . . .

'To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts . . .

'When ye come to appear before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to trample My courts?

'Bring no more vain oblations; it is an offering of abomination unto me; new moon and sabbath, the holding of convocations—I cannot endure iniquity along with the solemn assembly.

'Your new moons and your appointed seasons my soul hateth; they are a burden unto Me; I am weary to bear them.

'And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide Mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood . . .

'Put away the evil of your doings from before Mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek justice, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow' (Isa. i, 4, 11-17).

If this is to be taken as an absolute condemnation by Isaiah of all sacrifice, then that absolute condemnation must also include Sabbaths and Festivals; solemn Assemblies, i.e., public gatherings for worship, and the appearing before the LORD in the Temple: for all these are classed by him with 'blood of bullocks' and 'fat of fed beasts'. But, of course, to Isaiah, prayers and Sabbaths and solemn assemblies and Temple were noble and sacred institutions, indispensable to religious life, and it was only their intolerable abuse which he condemned. The same thing applies to his view of sacrifices. The Prophet's call is not, Give up your sacrifices, but, Give up your evil-doing.

A fair examination of the above words of Amos, the first of the literary Prophets, and of Isaiah, who utters what is taken to be the most sustained condemnation of sacrifice, bears out the considered opinion that 'there was use, a seemly and beneficial use, of sacrifice, but there was also an abuse, a vile and God-dishonouring abuse. The Prophets made war upon the latter, but it does not follow that they objected to the former' (Baxter).

The Prophets were orators, and made occasional use of hyperbole, in order to drive home upon the conscience of their hearers a vital aspect of truth which those hearers were ignoring. And when they were confronted by the pernicious belief that God desired nothing but sacrifice, and saw sacrifice being held to excuse iniquity, heartlessness and impurity—they gave expression to their burning indignation in the impassioned language of vehement emotion (see on Jeremiah vii, 22, p. 439).

The lesson which the Prophets laboured to impress upon the soul of Israel was nevermore forgotten. It is repeated by the sacred singers to whom we owe the Book of Psalms, 'the hymn-book of the second Temple'; by the Sages, who teach that 'the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the LORD' (Prov. xv, 8), that offerings made of goods wrung by extortion from the poor are like murder (Ecclesiasticus xxxiv, 20); as well as by the Rabbis, who declare that obedience to God and love of men are greater than sacrifice.

III. THE RABBIS AND THE SACRIFICIAL CULT

To the Rabbis, the institution of sacrifice is a mark of the Divine love unto Israel. Its purpose is to bring peace to the world. Nevertheless, the sacrificial cult is not to them of pre-eminent importance, but is co-ordinated with the knowledge and study of the Torah, with Prayer, and with the performance of good deeds. To the details of the sacrificial requirements they give symbolical meanings, and draw from them deep ethical and spiritual teachings. Thus, the sacrificial ordinances prove that God is with the persecuted. Cattle are chased by lions; goats, by panthers; sheep, by wolves; but God commanded, 'Not them that persecute, but them that are persecuted, offer ye up to Me.' In similar manner, Philo taught that 'the perfection of the victims indicates that the offerers should be irreproachable; that the Israelites should never bring with them to the altar weakness or evil passion in the soul, but should endeavour to make it wholly pure and clean; so that God may not turn away with aversion from the sight of it. The tribunal of God is inaccessible to bribes; it rejects the guilty, though they offer daily 100 oxen, and receives the guiltless though they offer no sacrifices at all. God delights in fireless altars, round which virtues form the choral dance.'

The Rabbis proclaim the cardinal importance, wellnigh the omnipotence, of Repentance in the spiritual life of man. 'Men asked Wisdom, "If a man sin what shall his punishment be?" Wisdom answered, "Evil pursueth the evil-doer." Men then asked Prophecy, the Torah, and God, "If a man sin what shall his punishment be?" Prophecy answered, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The Torah answered, "Let him bring a guilt-offering, and his sin shall be forgiven him." God answered, "Let him repent and it shall be forgiven him."' Henceforth, Repentance becomes the sole condition of all expiation and Divine forgiveness of sins: 'Neither the sin-offering, nor trespass-offering, nor the Day of Atonement is of any avail, unless accompanied by Repentance.' With the cessation of sacrifices, study of the Torah, Prayer and Beneficence definitely take the place of the Temple Service. It is for this reason that the disappearance of the Temple did not in any way cripple Judaism. When the Temple fell, there still remained the Synagogue—with reading and exposition of the Torah, and congregational worship without priest or sacrificial ritual. The Temple was only in Jerusalem, while the Synagogue was in every village, the expression of the Jew's religion day by day and week by week. 'The Temple was the altar, the Synagogue was the hearth, and the sacred fire burned on each of them. With the fall of the Temple, the fire was quenched on the altar, stamped out under the heel of the conqueror; but it still glowed on the hearth.... In all their long history, the Jewish people have done scarcely anything more wonderful than to create the Synagogue. No human institution has a longer continuous history, and none has done more for the uplifting of the human race' (Herford).

IV. JEWISH INTERPRETATIONS OF SACRIFICE

Rabbinical Judaism accepted the law of sacrifices without presuming to find a satisfactory explanation of its details. 'The sacrificial institutions were an integral part of revealed religion, and had the obligation of statutory law. It was of no practical concern to inquire why the divine Lawgiver had ordained thus and not otherwise. It was enough that he had enjoined upon Israel the observance of them' (Moore). Sometimes, the Rabbis resorted to symbolism, though to a far lesser extent than Philo. Their attitude towards sacrifices has remained that of the main body of Jews in all generations, and has found eloquent expression in the writings of Yehudah Hallevi during the Middle Ages, and of S. R. Hirsch and D. Hoffmann in modern times. According to the last-named, sacrifices are symbols of man's gratitude to God and his dependence on Him; of the absolute devotion man owes to God, as well as of man's confidence in Him.

Alongside the symbolic interpretation of sacrifice is the so-called juridical. It is advocated by Ibn Ezra and to some extent by Nachmanides. Its essence is: As a sinner, the offender's life is forfeit to God; but by a gracious provision he is permitted to substitute a faultless victim, to which his guilt is, as it were, transferred by the imposition of hands. Many Christian exegetes adopted this interpretation, and built the whole theological foundation of their Church upon it.

Quite otherwise is the rationalist view of sacrifice held by Maimonides and Abarbanel. Maimonides declares that the sacrificial cult was ordained as an accommodation to the conceptions of a primitive people, and for the purpose of weaning them away from the debased religious rites of their idolatrous neighbours. (See on Lev. xvii, 7.) Hence the restriction of the sacrifices to one locality, by which means God kept this particular kind of service within bounds. By a circuitous road, Israel was thus to be led slowly and gradually up to a perception of the highest kind of service, which is spiritual. Abarbanel finds support for Maimonides' view in a striking parable of Rabbi Levi recorded in the Midrash. 'A king noticed that his son was wont to eat of the meat of animals that had died of themselves, or that had been torn by beasts. So the king said, "Let him eat constantly at my table, and he will rid himself of that gross habit." So it was with the Israelites, who were sunk in Egyptian idolatry, and were wont to offer their sacrifices on the high places to the demons, and punishment used to come upon them. Thereupon the Holy One, blessed be He, said, "Let them at all times offer their sacrifices before Me in the Tabernacle, and they will be weaned from idolatry, and thus be saved."'

Notwithstanding these views, the Rabbis and such thinkers as Maimonides and Abarbanel did not cease to look forward to a restoration of the sacrificial cult in Messianic times. 'Even those laws which have been enacted by human authority remain in force till they are repealed in a regular and legal manner. Whether any of these laws of the Torah will ever be abrogated we do not know, but we are sure that in case of such abrogation taking place, it will be done by a revelation as convincing as that on Mount Sinai. On the other hand, the revival of the sacrificial Service must, likewise, be sanctioned by the divine voice of a prophet' (M. Friedländer).

The Rabbis, however, hoped that with the progress of time, human conduct would advance to higher standards, so that there would no longer be any need for expiatory sacrifices. Only the feeling of gratitude to God would remain. 'In the Messianic era, all offerings will cease, except the thanksgiving offering, which will continue forever' (Midrash).

THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOUR AS THYSELF

LEVITICUS XIX, 18

The 'Golden Rule' in Judaism. The world at large is unaware of the fact that this comprehensive maxim of morality—the golden rule of human conduct—was first taught by Judaism. No less a thinker than John Stuart Mill expressed his surprise that it came from the Pentateuch. Not only is it Jewish in origin, but, long before the rise of Christianity, Israel's religious teachers quoted Leviticus XIX, 18, either verbally or in paraphrase, as expressing the essence of the moral life. Thus, Ben Sira says, 'Honour thy neighbour as thyself.' In the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs we read: 'A man should not do to his neighbour what a man does not desire for himself.' Tobit admonishes his son in the words, 'What is displeasing to thyself, that do not unto any other.' Philo and Josephus have sayings similar to the above. As to the Rabbis, there is the well-known story of Hillel and the heathen scoffer who asked Hillel to condense for him the whole Law in briefest possible form. Hillel's answer is, 'Whatever is hateful unto thee, do it not unto thy fellow: this is the whole Torah; the rest is explanation.' Targum Jonathan adds to its translation of Lev. XIX, 18 a paraphrase in words almost identical with those of Hillel. In the generation after the Destruction of the Temple, Rabbi Akiba declares "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" is a fundamental rule in the Torah.' His contemporary Ben Azzai agrees that this law of love is such a fundamental rule, provided it is read in conjunction with Gen. v, 1 ('This is the book of the generations of man. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made He him'); for this latter verse teaches reverence for the Divine image in man, and proclaims the vital truth of the unity of mankind, and the consequent doctrine of the brotherhood of man. All men are created in the Divine image, says Ben Azzai; and, therefore, all are our fellow-men and entitled to human love.

And the command of Lev. XIX, 18 applies to classes and nations as well as to individuals. The Prophets in their day, on the one hand, arraigned the rich for their oppression of the poor; and, on the other hand, pilloried the nations that were guilty of inhumanity and breach of faith towards one another. Their sublime conception of international morality has found wonderful expression in the words of Judah the Pious, a medieval Jewish mystic, who said: 'On the Judgment Day, the Holy One, blessed be He, will call the nations to account for every violation of the command "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" of which they have been guilty in their dealings with one another.'

Modernist Depreciation of Lev. XIX, 18, 34. Though the Founder of Christianity quotes 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself' as the old Biblical command of recognized central importance, many Christian theologians maintain that the Heb. word for 'neighbour' (rea) in this verse refers only to the fellow-Israelite. Its morality therefore is only tribal. But the translation of the Heb. word rea by 'fellow-Israelite' is incorrect. One need not be a Hebrew scholar to convince oneself of the fact that rea means neighbour of whatever race or creed. Thus in Exodus XI, 2—'Let them ask every man of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, jewels of silver, etc.'—the Heb. word for neighbour cannot possibly mean 'fellow-Israelite', but distinctly refers to the Egyptians. As in all the moral precepts of Scripture, the word neighbour in Lev. XIX, 18, is equivalent to 'fellow-man', and it includes in its range every human being by virtue of his humanity.

In order to prevent any possible misunderstanding, the command of love of neighbour is in v. 34 of this same nineteenth chapter of Leviticus extended to include the homeless alien.

'The stranger (ger) that sojourneth with you shall be unto you as the home-born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers (gerim) in the land of Egypt.'

But even this marvellous law, that is absolutely without parallel in any ancient or modern code of civil law, is cavilled at by modernist theologians and decried as 'narrow'. The Heb. word ger, they hold, denotes only an alien who had become a fellow-worshipper of the God of Israel. This is contrary to fact. The Israelites in Egypt are in this very verse spoken of as gerim; but they did not as a body adopt the worship of Isis or Apis; they were hated, suspected and enslaved 'strangers'. It is evident, therefore, that Lev. XIX, 34 likewise refers to the friendless and homeless foreigner. He was throughout antiquity the victim of injustice and oppression, as were the Israelites in Egypt; in Israel alone he was not obliged to struggle for recognition as a human being. (See further on love of alien and of enemy, pp. 313 and 316.)

The 'Negative' Golden Rule. There is one other argument that is resorted to in order to prove that the true Golden Rule was first promulgated by Christianity. The greatest stress is laid on the fact that both Tobit and Hillel paraphrase Lev. XIX, 18 in a negative way—'Whatever is hateful unto thee, do it not unto thy fellow.' This is contrasted, and unfavourably so, with the positive paraphrase in the New Testament, 'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them.' It is claimed that the former is only negative morality; and that in its positive restatement alone, as formulated in the Gospels, is the Rule a great imperative of moral enthusiasm.

This argument is now seen to be illusory. 'The delicate difference which has been thought to exist between the negative and positive form is due to modern reflection on the subject, and was quite unapparent to the men of antiquity' (G. Kittel). In the oldest Christian literature the two forms are recorded indiscriminately; and the negative Golden Rule occurs in the Western texts of Acts xv, 20, Romans xiii, 10, the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, and the Apostolical Constitutions. And positive forms of the Rule have had a place in Judaism. Thus Hillel says, 'Love thy fellow-creatures'; and Eleazar ben Arach, 'Let the honour of thy neighbour be as dear to thee as thine own.' But the mere fact that Lev. xix, 18 is positive, itself renders all talk of a negative Jewish morality in connection with the Golden Rule fatuous.

It is time that the attempt to rob Judaism of its title to having given the Golden Rule to humanity, as well as the dispute as to the superiority of the positive over the negative form, came to an end.

As thyself. 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.' Regard for self has its legitimate place in the life of man. Unlimited self-surrender is impossible; and a sound morality takes account of our own interests equally with those of others. In the luminous words of Hillel: 'If I am not for myself, who will be for me? And if I am only for myself, what am I?' The Sifra, the oldest Rabbinic commentary on Leviticus, records the following: 'Two men are in the desert with a little water in possession of one of them. If the one drinks it, he will reach civilization; but if the two of them share it, both will die. Ben Petura said, Let the two of them drink, though both will die. Rabbi Akiba held that, in such a case, your own life has precedence over the life of your fellow-man.' Rabbi Akiba could not agree that two should perish where death demands but one as its toll. And, indeed, if the Torah had meant that a man must love his neighbour to the extent of sacrificing his life for him in all circumstances, it would have said: 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour more than thyself.'

There are those, both in ancient and in modern times, who do not agree with Rabbi Akiba, and who deem the view of Ben Petura the more altruistic, the more heroic. Such would have preferred that the words as thyself had not occurred in the Golden Rule. Others again preach the annihilation of self, or at any rate its total submergence, as the basic principle of human conduct. New formulations of the whole duty of man have in consequence been proposed by various thinkers. We need examine but one of these formulations—Live for others. Were such a rule seriously translated into practice, it would lead to absurdity. For Live for others necessarily entails that others live for you. You are to attend to everybody else's concerns, and everybody else is to attend to your concerns—except yourself. A moment's examination of this or any other proposed substitute for 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself' only brings out the more clearly the fundamental sanity of Judaism.

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS

NAME. The oldest name for the fourth book of the Pentateuch is חמש הפקודים 'the Fifth of the Musterings'; i.e. that one of the five books of Moses which describes the numbering of the Israelites. Later it came to be known by the fourth word in the opening sentence—במדבר Bemidbar, 'In the Wilderness'—a name that lends a unity of time and place to the varied happenings and laws in the Book. The current English designation Numbers is derived from the Septuagint.

CONTENTS. In contrast with Leviticus, which is almost entirely legislative in character, Numbers, like Exodus, combines history and law. The greater portion of the Book is devoted to the vicissitudes of the Israelites in their wanderings after the exodus till, thirty-eight years later, they are about to enter the Holy Land. Numbers is no mere chronicle of the outstanding events during the journey in the wilderness. It interprets these events, and shows forth the faithful watchfulness of God in every distress and danger, as well as the stern severity of the Divine judgments against rebellion and apostasy. In addition to the story of this discipline, it records the laws and ordinances given during that journey; laws relating to the Sanctuary, the camp, and the purification of life; and such civil and political ordinances as would enable the Israelites to fulfil the task God assigned to them among the nations.

DIVISIONS. 1. Chapters I–X, 10 contain the laws and regulations given in the wilderness of Sinai: the first census, the choice of the Levites, the laws concerning the ordeal of jealousy, the Nazirites, the Menorah, and the Supplementary Passover. This section also includes the account of the consecration of the Altar and the Priestly Blessing.

2. Chapters X, 11–XXI cover the thirty-eight years' wanderings till the arrival at Moab. They relate the incidents of Taberah, the 'Graves of Lust', the appointment of the seventy elders, the punishment of Miriam, the mission of the Spies, the rebellion of Korah, the sin of Moses, and the conquest of the Amorite kingdoms. This section contains the command concerning Tzitzis and the ritual of the Red Heifer.

3. Chapters XXII–XXXVI describe the final happenings in Moab—the Testimony of Balaam to Israel's might, the zeal of Phinehas, the appointment of Joshua as the successor of Moses, the Midianite war, and the settlement East of the Jordan. Alongside these events, we have the commands concerning the second census, festival offerings, and vows; the itinerary from Egypt to Jordan; and a group of laws in connection with the impending occupation of Canaan. This section of Numbers forms the transition to Deuteronomy, the Fifth Book of Moses.

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the tent of meeting, on the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying: 2. 'Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of names, every male, by their polls; 3. from twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Israel: ye shall number them by their hosts, even thou and Aaron. 4. And with you there shall be a man of every tribe, every one

CHAPTER I. MUSTERING THE PEOPLE

One month after the erection of the Tabernacle, Moses is commanded to muster all the men of military age, i.e. those twenty years of age and upwards.

The total number of adult males is given in v. 46 as 603,550. This number is exactly the same as the number of individuals who paid the poll-tax six months previously—possibly because the census was taken once only, and that at the time of the taking of the poll-tax. All that is commanded in the present chapter may only be 'to prepare a classified return of the census already taken, with a view to the proper arrangement of the tribes in camps, as their wanderings were about to begin' (H. Adler).

1. tent of meeting. The Tabernacle (the place 'where I will meet with you' to speak there unto thee; Exod. xxix, 42), the Tent of revelation.

2. take ye. The plural is used because the command is to be carried out by both Moses and Aaron; see next v.

take ye the sum. Heb. שְׂאוּ אֶת רֹאשׁ, here equivalent to: Prepare a classified return of the census already taken. It is not quite synonymous with סָקַד, the root used in iii, 15, 40, when the command is merely to number the first-born or the Levites.

all the congregation. Exclusive of the Levites; see v. 47 ff.

their families. Their clans—subdivisions of a tribe.

fathers' houses. Their septs, subdivisions of the clan. Both 'family' (משפחה) and 'father's house' (בית אב) have each a wider and a narrower sense.

by their polls. lit. 'skulls'; individual persons, as in the English poll-tax or head-money.

3. to go forth to war. Or, go forth to service. number them by their hosts. As military men: the march towards Canaan was to be that of a disciplined nation and not a rabble of runaway slaves (Luzzatto). The aged, infirm, and maimed were therefore exempted from the numbering, as were those under twenty years of age.

4. a man of every tribe. Twelve assessors, the head-man of each tribe, were to assist in the work of numbering.

5. Elizur. 'God is my rock.' Of the twenty-four proper names here given, nine contain the Divine name El, God; three, the name Tzur, Rock—a frequent appellation for God; and in three Shaddai occurs. Shaddai is usually translated 'Almighty' and derived from a Heb. root 'to overpower'. It has also been derived from the Arabic شَدَا, which means 'to heap benefits', and 'to reconcile persons at enmity with one another'. This idea of beneficence and peace is amply borne out by the passages in Genesis in which Shaddai occurs (Gen. xvii, 1; xxviii, 3; xliiii, 14). The meaning conveyed by them is that of a Friend and Protector, who watches over the Patriarchs, shepherds them and bestows upon them and their descendants great moral and material good. Shaddai can therefore be translated 'Dispenser of benefits' (Baron David Gunzburg in Revue des Etudes Juives, XLVII).

head of his fathers' house. 5. And these are the names of the men that shall stand with you: of Reuben, Elizur the son of Shedeur. 6. Of Simeon, Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai. 7. Of Judah, Nahshon the son of Amminadab. 8. Of Issachar, Nethanel the son of Zuar. 9. Of Zebulun, Eliab the son of Helon. 10. Of the children of Joseph: of Ephraim, Elishama the son of Ammihud; of Manasseh, Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur. 11. Of Benjamin, Abidan the son of Gideoni. 12. Of Dan, Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai. 13. Of Asher, Pagiel the son of Ochran. 14. Of Gad, Eliasaph the son of Deuel. 15. Of Naphtali, Ahira the son of Enan.' 16. These were the elect of the congregation, the princes of the tribes of their fathers; they were the heads of the thousands of Israel. 17. And Moses and Aaron took these men that are pointed out by name. 18. And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls. 19. As the LORD commanded Moses, so did he number them

Zurishaddai. 'My Rock is Shaddai.'

7. Nahshon. 'Serpent.' Animal names are common in all lands; cf. the Germanic names, Wolf, Bear, etc.

Amminadab. 'The (divine) Kinsman is generous.'

Deuel. Or, 'Reuel' (II, 14). 'God is a friend.' Both forms seem to be an abbreviation of Daruel (Luzzatto).

15. Ahira. Shortened form of Ahirea, 'the (divine) Brother is a friend.'

These names are invaluable documents of early life in Israel, and throw light on the religious feelings of the ancient Israelite. They are genuine and trustworthy, as they can each be paralleled in Babylonian and Arabian inscriptions. If, as alleged by hostile critics, these names were merely made to pattern and the product of the age of Ezra, they should be met with in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah. This, however, is not the case; and, in fact, such characteristic names as those compounded with Amm, Zur, and Shaddai are never found in post-Exilic times. 'It is quite certain that the names contained in the lists in the Book of Numbers cannot be rightly assigned to any other period than that of Moses' (Hommel).

Of the children of Dan, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 39. those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Dan, were three-score and two thousand and seven hundred. ¶ 40. Of the children of Asher, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 41. those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Asher, were forty and one thousand and five hundred. ¶ 42. Of the children of Naphtali, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 43. those that were numbered of them, of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred. ¶ 44. These are those that were numbered, which Moses and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Israel, being twelve men; they were each one for his fathers' house. 45. And all those that were numbered of the children of Israel by their fathers' houses, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Israel; 46. even all those that were numbered were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty. 47. But the Levites after the tribe of their fathers were not numbered among them. ¶ 48. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 49. 'Howbeit the tribe of Levi thou shalt not number, neither shalt thou take the sum of them among the children of Israel; 50. but appoint thou the Levites over the tabernacle of the testimony, and over all the furniture thereof, and over all that belongeth to it; they shall bear the

ARRANGEMENT OF THE CAMP, AND ORDER OF THE MARCH

The whole encampment was in the form of a quadrilateral, lying four-square with the Taber-

Nearest to it, and surrounding it on all four sides as a protecting cordon, were the camps of the Levitical families. Beyond these and enclosing them was the camp of the Israelites—the tents of the twelve lay tribes, divided into four sections, each of which bore the name of its leading tribe.

These are they that were numbered of the children of Israel by their fathers' houses; all that were numbered of the camps according to their host were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty. 33. But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses. 34. This did the children of Israel: according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, each one according to its families, and according to its fathers' houses.*^{1v}

These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the priests that were anointed, whom he consecrated to minister in the priest's office. 4. And Nadab and Abihu died before the LORD, when they offered strange fire before the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children; and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office in the presence of Aaron their father. ¶ 5. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 6. 'Bring the tribe of Levi near, and set them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him. 7. And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tent of meeting, to do the service of the tabernacle. 8. And they shall keep all the furniture of the tent of meeting, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle. 9. instead of every first-born. The sacredness of the first-born, and the priestly functions which they are enjoined to perform, date from the time of the slaying of the first-born in the land of Egypt. At the worship of the Golden Calf, the first-born forfeited their special priestly privileges through their participation in that idolatrous worship. The Levites were chosen in their stead, in recognition of their firm and faithful stand at that hour of apostasy.

13. Mine they shall be. The Levites.

15. every male from a month old and upward. The Levites were numbered in this manner because they were substitutes for the first-born,

¶14. And the Lord spoke unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying: 15. 'Number the children of Levi by their fathers' houses, by their families; every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them.' 16. And Moses numbered them according to the word of the Lord, as he was commanded. 17. And these were the sons of Levi by their names: Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari. 18. And these are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families: Libni and Shimei. 19. And the sons of Kohath by their families: Amram and Izhar, Hebron and Uzziel. 20. And the sons of Merari by their families: Mahli and Mushi. These are the families of the Levites according to their fathers' houses. ¶ 21. Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimeites; these are the families of the Gershonites. 22. Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them were seven thousand and five hundred. 23. The families of the Gershonites were to pitch behind the tabernacle westward; 24. the prince of the fathers' house of the Gershonites being Eliasaph the son of Lael, 25. and the charge of the sons of Gershon in the tent of meeting the tabernacle, and the Tent, the covering thereof, and the screen for the door of the tent of meeting, 26. and the hangings of the court, and the screen for the door of the court—which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar, round about—and the cords of it, even whatsoever pertaineth to the service thereof. ¶ 27. And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites; these are the families of the Kohathites: 28. according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, eight thousand and six hundred, keepers of the charge of the sanctuary. 29. Hence he ranks as the prince of Levi, and is invested with the supervision of all the other overseers.

38. those that were to pitch . . . eastward. The most honourable place in the camp, and the most convenient for constant and direct access to the Sanctuary.

39. twenty and two thousand. This total of 22,000 Levites falls short by 300 of the separate totals of the divisions mentioned in this chapter. The Talmud explains the discrepancy by saying that the Levites were taken and counted instead of the first-born of the Israelites and as a 'redemption' for them. Hence, their own first-born, who amounted to 300, had to be excluded, as being ineligible for the purpose of redeeming other first-born.

40-51. The substitution of the Levites for the first-born.

'Take the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be Mine, even the LORD's. 46. And as for the redemption of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the first-born of the children of Israel, that are over and above the number of the Levites, 47. thou shalt take five shekels apiece by the poll; after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them—the shekel is twenty gerahs. 48. And thou shalt give the money wherewith they that remain over of them are redeemed unto Aaron and to his sons.' 49. And Moses took the redemption-money from them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites; 50. from the first-born of the children of Israel took he the money: a thousand three hundred and threescore and five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary. 51. And Moses gave the redemption-money unto Aaron and to his sons, according to the word of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moses. *vii.

43. twenty . . . and thirteen. The first-born number 273 more than the Levites; and as no substitutes were available for the redemption of this extra 273, they had to be redeemed independently, by a payment of five shekels apiece, as the redemption price of a male child under five years old who has been vowed unto God; Lev. xxvii, 6.

At first sight, the numbers in these chapters present definite difficulties. Six hundred thousand adult males imply a total population of over two millions. How did such a large multitude live on the arid peninsula of Sinai, whose present population is under 10,000? But Scripture nowhere affirms that the Israelites lived for forty years upon the natural produce of the desert, but that they were fed miraculously with manna (Exod. xvi, 4, 35). And unless miracles are prejudged to be impossible, account must be taken of the miraculous provision made for the sustenance of the Israelites till the time that they entered Canaan. Moreover, the resources of the Wilderness must not be judged by present conditions. The word 'Wilderness' does not mean a barren tract, but an uninhabited country, which may be very fertile. And traces exist to show that the 'Wilderness' not only could but did support at one time an extensive population. For a powerful presentation of evidence that this whole region had a higher rainfall, and was much more productive, at the time of the Exodus than now, see Huntington's 'The Climate of Ancient Palestine' (Bulletin of The American Geographical Society, vol. XL, 1908).

The other objection is that the number of first-born males is given as 22,273—a very small number in proportion to the total number of males. What is meant is the number of first-born males under twenty years of age at the time of the census. The law did not have retrospective force, so as to include all first-born sons throughout the nation who themselves were fathers or grand-fathers at the time.

NUMBERING OF THE LEVITES QUALIFIED FOR SERVICE AND RULES OF SERVICE

This is the service of the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting, about the most holy things: 5. when the camp setteth forward, Aaron shall go in, and his sons, and they shall take down the veil of the screen, and cover the ark of the testimony with it; 6. and shall put thereon a covering of sealskin, and shall spread over it a cloth all of blue, and shall set the staves thereof. 7. And upon the table of showbread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the pans, and the bowls, and the jars wherewith to pour out; and the continual bread shall remain thereon. 8. And they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of sealskin, and shall set the staves thereof. 9. And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candlestick of the light, and its lamps, and its tongs, and its snuff-dishes, and all the oil vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it. 10. And they shall put it and all the vessels thereof within a covering of sealskin, and shall put it upon a bar. 11. And upon the golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of sealskin, and shall set the staves thereof. 12. And they shall take all the vessels of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of sealskin, and shall put them on a bar. 13. And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the holy furniture, and all the holy vessels, as the camp is to set forward—after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear them; but they shall not touch the holy things, lest they die. These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting. 16. And the charge of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be the oil for the light, and the sweet incense, and the continual meal-offering, and the anointing oil: he shall have the charge of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, whether it be the sanctuary, or the furniture thereof.* 17. And the LORD spoke unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying: 18. 'Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites; 19. but thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden; 20. but they shall not go in to see the holy things as they are being covered, lest they die.'

Lev. vi, 5, 6, the fire on the Altar of sacrifice was never allowed to be extinguished. But in all probability the command concerning the perpetual fire did not apply to the period of transit. Rashi says that the heavenly fire which descended on the Altar used to crouch beneath the wrappings like the figure of a lion at the times of the journeyings, and was rendered innocuous by means of an intervening plate of bronze.

20. as they are being covered. This translation of the Heb. כבלע את הקדש is quite uncertain and unsatisfactory. Better, as the sanctuary is being taken apart (Ehrlich). This explains the meaning of בלע to be, to divide, to take to pieces, to destroy; cf. Yoma 5a. The lower members of the priesthood are not to be present when the unity of the Sanctuary is being destroyed by being taken apart, as they would lose all reverence for the Sanctuary if they were to witness it.

BEMIDBAR

HOSEA II, 1-22

The opening words of the Haftorah compare the future numbers of the nation to the sand of the sea, and thus connect with the Sedrah which gives the numbers of the Israelites in the wilderness. For the times and message of Hosea, see pp. 118 and 135.

THE PARABLE OF A LIFE'S TRAGEDY

This Haftorah speaks in a strange imagery which is most puzzling to the ordinary reader. However, all difficulties disappear if we bear in mind that, in the opinion of the Rabbis, Hosea's domestic tragedy was ordained, and from the first intended, to make the Prophet realize, through personal suffering, Israel's unfaithfulness to God, and God's unending love of His people. Modern commentators (Ewald, W. R. Smith, Cheyne) similarly read our Haftorah in the light of the tragic experience of the Prophet, recorded in the opening chapter of the Book of Hosea which precedes our Haftorah, and in Chapter III which follows it.

Their interpretation is as follows. A heavy domestic sorrow darkened Hosea's life. He had married a woman called Gomer; and she rendered him deeply unhappy. He found that he had wasted his love on a profligate woman. She fled from the Prophet's house, and sank lower and lower until she became the slave-concubine of another. But Hosea's love was proof even against faithlessness and dishonour. He, the deeply aggrieved husband, buys her back from slavery, and brings her into his house—as a ward, pitied and sheltered, but subjected to a period of probation that shall show whether her better self can be awakened.

It seems that while this tragedy was taking place within his own home, Hosea began to feel as if his own individual experience was symbolic of the story of his nation. There, too, it might be said that a loving husband, as it were, had been deceived and abandoned by a wife—the wife being Israel and the husband God. God had chosen the poor down-trodden Israelites, the slaves of the Egyptians, to be His people; had allied Himself with them in love and faith; had showered His blessings upon them; had given them a national home, and made them a mighty people. And all these mercies Israel requited with blackest ingratitude. Instead of serving Him in purity and righteousness, they adopted the lascivious and cruel worship of the idolatrous Canaanites; and they forsook the true God, the Creator of heaven and earth, for the local godlings, the 'Baalim', of the heathens around them. But it is his feelings towards Gomer that led the Prophet to an overwhelming spiritual discovery:—if he could love a faithless wife so tenderly and patiently, what must the love of God be towards His people? And if he did not despair that love and patience would awaken Gomer's better nature, would not God's everlasting mercies redeem His sinning people and save it from the fate that would otherwise await it? Justice demanded that Israel suffer for his sins; and suffering and exile would inevitably overtake him. But God's dealings with His children were not guided by Justice alone. The suffering and exile, therefore, with which He visits Israel cannot be ends in themselves. The infinite love of God will, by means of this very suffering and exile, purify Israel, lead him to self-knowledge, and bring him back in perfect repentance to God. Israel's kingdom might fall, and all its outward structure totter into ruin; but Israel will live—because of the infinite love of God (Cassuto).

When the similarity between his wife's conduct and that of Israel dawned upon Hosea's mind, he felt that his marriage with the wayward Gomer must have been the will of God; nay, that his impulse to take this woman to wife was 'the beginning of God's speaking to him' (Hosea I, 2). He saw that it was God's will that he should come to realize Israel's faithlessness through the faithlessness of his wife; and God's love of Israel, through his own persistent love of Gomer. Hence, when he writes down this parable from his life, he represents it as if God had from the first ordered him to marry a woman who was 'light of love', and who would be faithless to her bond and her duty, in order by means of this parable to open the eyes of a blind and sinful people to their ingratitude and guilt (Montefiore). There is a perfect parallel to this in the Haftorah for Behar; see pp. 539 and 540.

Hosea tells us that of his unhappy marriage there were three children. When these children came, Hosea, it would appear, had already realized his wife's unworthiness, and the parable had already been borne in upon his soul. Hence, he feels constrained by a Divine command to give to their children symbolical names of terrible significance—names referring to that other wife's history and future, of which his own wife was the symbol and the image. The name of one is Jezreel (see on v. 2); of the second, Lo-Ruhamah ('Unpitied')—the dreadful message to his generation that the sin of Israel was too great to be forgiven; and the name of the third, Lo-Ammi, 'Not-my-people.' Israel was no longer God's covenant people.

CHAPTER II

CAP. II. ב

1. Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass that, instead of that which was said unto them: 'Ye are not My people,' it shall be said unto them: 'Ye are the children of the living God.' 2. And the children of Judah and the children of Israel shall be gathered together, and they shall appoint themselves one head, and shall go up out of the land; for great shall be the day of Jezreel. 3. Say ye unto your brethren: ¹'Ammi'; and to your sisters: ²'Ruhamah.'

4. Plead with your mother, plead;
For she is not My wife, neither am I her husband;

¹ That is, My people. ² That is, That hath obtained compassion.

א וְהָיָה מִסְפַּר בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל כְּחֹל הַיָּם אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יִמָּדד וְלֹא

HOSEA II, 1-22

The background that is essential for the understanding of the Haftorah is given on the preceding page.

1-3. ISRAEL'S DESTINY AND GLORIOUS FUTURE

1. yet the number. Yet, i.e. in contrast to the severe judgment just pronounced in the names of the three children.

ye are not My people. lit. 'ye are Lo-Ammi.'

2. gathered together. By the union of the two divided kingdoms of Israel and of Judah.

out of the land. i.e. of their Exile (Targum and Kimchi).

Jezreel. The name of the Plain stretching from Mt. Carmel across the whole width of Palestine to the Jordan. In the preceding chapter (v. 4), Jezreel was the name given to the first son of Hosea to recall the massacre by Jehu in that Plain. It is an ominous sound, a knell rung in the ears of the house of Jehu to awaken the sense of guilt and the presentiment of retribution for the blood shed by its founder. But in the restoration now promised, Jezreel receives another and better significance based on its literal meaning: 'God will sow.' He will sow again His scattered people, and great will be that day of Israel's regeneration.

3. say ye unto your brethren, Ammi. The baleful names of the children are now reversed. Lo-Ammi becomes Ammi, My people; and Lo-Ruhamah becomes Ruhamah, i.e. she who obtains compassion.

4-15. ISRAEL'S DARK PRESENT

4-6. By one of those swift transitions that reflect the conflicting emotions by which his sensitive soul is torn—profound love for his people and anguish at their moral decay and the destruction it was precipitating—Hosea now arraigns Israel under the image of the faithless wife. Bright as is Israel's future, even so dark and despairing is the present. There must be a radical break with idolatries and disloyalties.

4. plead with your mother. The 'mother' is collective Israel, and since this is addressed to the Israelites individually, it is equivalent to saying, Plead with one another (Kimchi).

she is not My wife . . . husband. An ancient formula for divorcing a wife (Cassuto). God is casting Israel off, because she deserted Him for Baal-worship.

harlotries. The imagery appropriate to a dissolute woman is continued. The false teachers and corrupt worship of the surrounding nations are meant (Kimchi). Let her put these things away, and in repentance return to God.

5. Lest I strip her naked, And set her as in the day that she was born,
And make her as a wilderness,
And set her like a dry land,
And slay her with thirst.

6. And I will not have compassion upon her children;
For they are children of harlotry.

7. For their mother hath played the harlot,
She that conceived them hath done shamefully;
For she said: 'I will go after my lovers,
That give me my bread and my water,
My wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink.'

8. Therefore, behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns,
And I will make a wall against her,
That she shall not find her paths.

9. And she shall run after her lovers, but she shall not overtake them,
And she shall seek them, but shall not find them;
Then shall she say: 'I will go and return to my first husband;
For then was it better with me than now.'

10. For she did not know that it was I that gave her
The corn, and the wine, and the oil,
And multiplied unto her silver and gold,
Which they used for Baal.

11. Therefore will I take back My corn in the time thereof,
And My wine in the season thereof,

5. strip her. In ancient societies, the woman convicted of faithlessness was stripped naked, and handed over to death. As applied to Israel, the simile means that the nation would be driven from its land and perish in the wilderness of exile.

the day that she was born. As in the beginning of her national history in Egypt, when she was without power or possessions.

6. I will not have compassion. Even as the innocent children suffer through their parents' faithlessness, so will the righteous in Israel be engulfed in the general calamity.

7. hath done shamefully. Through her worship of the Baalim, and the lascivious rites that accompanied such worship.

8-10. God separates Israel from the idols, so that Israel learns, through tribulation, their helplessness and vanity.

9. run after her lovers . . . not find them. Propitiation of the Baalim by supplication and sacrifices will not bring back her lost prosperity.

deities of the heathen Canaanites, or the adaptation of that cult by Jeroboam in the two golden calves he set up. These festivals were bacchanalian in character.

16-17. GOD'S LOVE OF ISRAEL

The bright promise of the Divine undying love now takes the place of threats. Hosea's consciousness of the greatness of the Divine love was such that he never pronounced a doom on his people, but immediately the mercy of God broke in upon him like a new dawn. Israel, the erring wife, has been sent away from the home of her Husband, but not from His heart. The punishments were but God's wooing of the misguided spouse so that she seek Him again.
He will never entirely repudiate her who gave Him the love of her youth. He will bring her into the wilderness, where they have loved each other;

He will console her; she will sing there as she did in the days when she came out of Egypt, and the Valley of Sadness shall become the Door of Hope.

His people in their distress.

17. valley of Achor. The reference is to Josh. vii, 26. Achor means 'troubling.' The valley in which Achan was punished for his sin that brought down punishment upon Israel on entering the Holy Land, shall become a Door of Hope and shall bring deliverance.
The punishment of exile would carry its hidden blessing: it would purge and purify the nation, and prove the door of hope leading to a better national future.

respond. i.e. to God's endearing call, as in the days of the first espousals. Perhaps an allusion to the Songs of Moses and Miriam, where the same word is used of Miriam's responding refrain to the chant of Moses.

worship will be done away with; there will be security from the ravages of beast and man; and the second betrothal of Israel unto God, being founded on righteousness and loyal love, will last for ever.

18. Ishi. 'My husband,' with the underlying idea of affection and endearment.

no more Baali. Also a term for husband, lit. 'my master'; but the word was debased through its use of heathen gods. Also it has the underlying idea of ownership, and corresponding subservience on the part of the wife. The bond between God and Israel is to be one of enduring love.

20. will I make a covenant. A reversal of v. 14.

22. And I will betroth thee unto Me in faithfulness;
And thou shalt know the LORD.

An assurance of the security awaiting both land and people under a striking poetical figure of immunity from hostile elements in Nature (cf. Isa. xi, 6-9), and from hostile man, whose weapons of warfare would be broken for ever (cf. Isa. ii, 4).

21. I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness . . . know the LORD. Betrothal was always accompanied by a gift. God will endow Israel, His bride, with righteousness, lovingkindness, and faithfulness—that she had lost. The bride's gift will be 'knowledge of God'—recognition that God is a God of righteousness, lovingkindness and faithfulness, and that in these things He delights. Such a betrothal is everlasting.

4 21. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 22. 'Take the sum of the sons of Gershon also, by their fathers' houses, by their families; 23. from thirty years old and upward until fifty years old shalt thou number them: all that enter in to wait upon the service, to do service in the tent of meeting. 24. This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, in serving and in bearing burdens: 25. they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tent of meeting, its covering, and the covering of sealskin that is above upon it, and the screen for the door of the tent of meeting; 26. and the hangings of the court, and the screen for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, and whatsoever there may be to do with them, therein shall they serve. 27. At the commandment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burden, and in all their service; and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burden. 28. This is the service of the families of the sons of the Gershonites in the tent of meeting; and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest. ¶ 29. As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them by their families, by their fathers' houses; 30. from thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them, every one that entereth upon the service, to do the work of the tent of meeting. 31. every one that entered in to do the work of service, and the work of bearing burdens in the tent of meeting, 48. even those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand and five hundred and fourscore. 49. According to the commandment of the LORD they were appointed by the hand of Moses, every one to his service, and to his burden; they were also numbered, as the LORD commanded Moses. *iii.

CHAPTER V

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2. 'Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every leper, and every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is unclean by the dead; 3. both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camp, in the midst whereof I dwell.' 4. And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp; as the LORD spoke unto Moses, so did the children of Israel. ¶ 5. And the Lord spoke unto Moses, saying: 6. Speak unto the children of Israel: ¶ When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to commit a trespass against the LORD, and that soul be guilty; 7. then they shall confess their sin which they have done; and he shall make restitution for his guilt in full, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him in respect of whom he hath been guilty.

49. according . . . Moses. Keil translates this verse as follows: According to the commandment of the LORD, they appointed them by the hand of Moses (i.e. under his direction), each one to his service and his burden, and his mustered things; i.e. the things assigned to him at the time of the mustering as his special charge (see Exod. xxxviii, 21).

CHAPTER V

1-4. REMOVAL OF UNCLEAN PERSONS FROM THE CAMP

2. put out of the camp every leper. After detailing the arrangement of the camp and the ordering of the march, there follows the injunction that the ceremonial purity of the camp is to be safeguarded. Three classes of unclean persons are to be excluded: (1) the leper; (2) one that hath an 'issue' (see Lev. xv); and (3) one who has become polluted by contact with the dead (Num. xix, 11-22). According to the Rabbis, the first was to be excluded from the whole camp. Those afflicted with issues were excluded from the Sanctuary proper (מחנה שכינה) and the Levite encampment (מחנה לוי) around the Sanctuary. One who had had contact with the dead was only a trespass against the LORD. Breach of trust or wrongful misappropriation of the property of another; see Lev. v, 14 f. The laws there laid down in regard to restitution and the bringing of guilt offering are here repeated, with further provisions in v. 7 regarding public confession, and in v. 8 regarding the property of a wronged person who died without leaving any kinsman to whom restitution might be made.

7. shall make restitution for his guilt. i.e. he shall restore that which he guiltily holds in his possession.

9. heave-offering of all the holy things. The priest's due from any contribution brought to the Altar. It constituted his maintenance and was regarded as his legal property.

10. every man's hallowed things shall be his. Every man who brings a gift to the Altar may allocate it to any priest he chooses, and no fellow-priest may dispute his right to it.

11-31. ORDEAL OF JEALOUSY

This ordinance was intended to remove the very suspicion of marital unfaithfulness in the midst of Israel. As such crime is destructive of the foundations of social order, it was necessary to arrive at certainty in cases of doubt, and at the same time to afford protection to the innocent wife against unreasonable jealousies. If a husband suspect his wife of unfaithfulness, he may bring her to the Sanctuary for an oath of purgation and the drinking of 'the water of bitterness'. If she is innocent, no injuries result; if guilty, the combined oath and ordeal produce physical effects that proclaim her guilt to the world. This law is the only explicit instance in Scripture of trial by ordeal, an institution that was well-nigh universal in antiquity and a regular feature of Western European life down to the late Middle Ages. In Israel, the Ordeal of Jealousy was abolished by Johanan ben Zakkai soon after the Destruction of the Temple. From that time, divorce alone was customary in cases of well-proved faithlessness.

12. if any man's wife go aside. From the right path and become suspect in the eyes of her husband. By a slight change of punctuation the Heb. verb can be translated, 'if any man's wife commit folly,' and the Rabbis base thereon the saying, 'No one sinneth unless the spirit of folly has entered into him.'

13. she being defiled secretly. Even the presence of one witness to such defilement ruled out the Ordeal procedure. She was then tried on the evidence.

14. spirit of jealousy. i.e. an uncontrollable impulse. The Rabbis required the husband first to prohibit the woman, in the presence of witnesses, to hold any further communication with the man suspected; and then only, in case of the wife's disobedience, could the husband subject her to the Ordeal. The Ordeal could not be made use of if there was any connivance on the part of the husband; see also on v. 28.

15. and shall bring her offering for her. i.e. on her account; the offerings required in her case.

her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is a meal-offering of jealousy, a meal-offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance. 16. And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the LORD. 17. And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel; and of the dust that is on the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water. 18. And the priest shall set the woman before the LORD, and let the hair of the woman's head go loose, and put the meal-offering of memorial in her hands, which is the meal-offering of jealousy; and the priest shall have in his hand the water of bitterness that causeth the curse. 19. And the priest shall cause her to swear, and shall say unto the woman: 'If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness, being under thy husband, be thou free from this water of bitterness that causeth the curse; 20. but if thou hast gone aside, being under thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man have lain with thee besides thy husband—21. then the priest shall cause the woman to swear with the oath of cursing, and the priest shall say unto the woman—the LORD make thee a curse and an oath among thy people, when the LORD doth make thy thigh to fall away, and thy belly to swell; 22. and this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels, and make thy belly to swell,

And he shall make the woman drink the water of bitterness that causeth the curse; and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her and become bitter. 25. And the priest shall take the meal-offering of jealousy out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the meal-offering before the LORD, and bring it unto the altar. 26. And the priest shall take a handful of the meal-offering, as the memorial-part thereof, and make it smoke upon the altar, and afterward shall make the woman drink the water. 27. And when he hath made her drink the water, then it shall come to pass, if she be defiled, and have acted unfaithfully against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall fall away; and the woman shall be a curse among her people. 28. And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be cleared, and shall conceive seed. 29. This is the law of jealousy, when a wife, being under her husband, goeth aside, and is defiled; 30. or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon a man, and he be jealous over his wife; then shall he set the woman before the LORD, and the priest shall execute

22. Amen. Its original meaning is 'So be it!' A solemn affirmation to a preceding statement. Whosoever answers Amen to an oath, it is as if he had himself pronounced that oath.

In later times, Amen becomes in the Synagogue—as distinct from the Temple—the regular liturgical response of the worshippers. It was often doubled at the end of a psalm or prayer. Great spiritual value was attached by the Rabbis to the reverent response of Amen in prayer. 'Whosoever says Amen with all his strength, to him the gates of Paradise shall be opened.' Amen is now one of the commonest words of human speech. Three great Religions have brought it into the daily lives of men of all races, climes, and cultures.

23. in a scroll. On anything that can receive writing (Mishnah). In Roman times, a royal proselyte to Judaism, Queen Helena, donated a tablet of gold to the Temple, with the chapter of the Ordeal of Jealousy written on it, and the priests would transcribe the oath from that tablet.

24. make the woman drink. This is said by anticipation, because she did not really drink it till after the offering; v. 26. The translation should read, 'and when he shall make the woman to drink the water that brings the guilt to light, the water that brings the guilt to light shall enter into her and become bitter.' The solemnity of the oath, and the awe-inspiring ritual which accompanied it, might of themselves deter a woman from taking it, unless she were supported by the consciousness of innocence (Speaker's Bible).

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ When either man or woman shall clearly utter a vow, the vow of a Nazirite, to consecrate himself unto the LORD, 3. he shall abstain from wine and strong drink: he shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat fresh grapes or dried. 4. All the days of his Naziriteship shall he eat nothing that is made of the grape-vine, from the pressed grapes even to the grape-stone. 5. All the days of his vow of Naziriteship there shall no razor come upon his head; until the days be fulfilled, in which he consecrateth himself unto the LORD, he shall be holy, he shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow long. 6. All the days that he consecrateth himself unto the LORD he shall not come near to a dead body. 7. He shall not make himself unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die; because his consecration unto God is upon his head.

shall bear her iniquity. Should she be proved guilty.

CHAPTER VI

THE LAW OF THE NAZIRITE

The previous chapter provided for the exclusion of certain forms of guilt and defilement from the pale of God's people. The present chapter offers an opening to the life of the devotee who, not content with observing what is obligatory, seeks austere modes of self-dedication. The Nazirite vow includes three things: (1) the hair to remain unshorn during the period of the vow; (2) abstinence from intoxicants; (3) avoidance of contact with a dead body. The Nazirite vow was often taken by men and women alike purely for personal reasons, such as thanksgiving for recovery from illness, or for the birth of a child. The minimum period of the vow was thirty days, but we have instances of Nazirite vows extending over repeated periods of seven years. Scripture records also life-long Nazirites, who, however, were not bound by all the regulations of the temporary Nazirite. Mention is also made of the Rechabites, who abstained from wine (Jer. xxxv), and, in later times, the Essenes, whose life was semi-monastic. The institution disappeared in its entirety with the destruction of the Temple.

2. Nazirite. That is, one separated or consecrated. Heb. Nazir; cf. Judges xiii, 5, 7.

3. wine. The priest had to refrain from wine during service in the Sanctuary (Lev. x, 9), and the Nazirite's whole life was conceived as service of God; see, however, on v. 11.

strong drink. A comprehensive term for intoxicating liquors other than wine.

vinegar. Any preparation made from any intoxicant that has gone sour.

liquor of grapes. Made by soaking grape-skins in water.

4. pressed grapes. Pressed grapes from which the wine has already been extracted (Talmud).

5. no razor come upon his head. The hair was regarded as the symbol of the vital power at its full natural development; and the free growth of the hair on the head of the Nazirite represented the dedication of the man with all his strength and powers to the service of God.

holy. Here signifying separated, detached from ordinary mundane pursuits by leading a life of self-denial and self-dedication to God.

7. unclean for his father. In respect to contact with a dead body, the ordinary Nazirite was as

8. All the days of his Naziriteship he is holy unto the LORD. 9. And if any man die very suddenly beside him, and he defile his consecrated head, then he shall shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it. 10. And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tent of meeting. 11. And the priest shall prepare one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make atonement for him, for that he sinned by reason of the dead; and he shall hallow his head that same day. 12. And he shall consecrate unto the LORD the days of his Naziriteship, and shall bring a he-lamb of the first year for a guilt-offering; but the former days shall be void, because his consecration was defiled. ¶ 13. And this is the law of the Nazirite, when the days of his consecration are fulfilled: he shall bring it unto the door of the tent of meeting; 14. and he shall present his offering unto the LORD, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin-offering, and one ram without blemish for peace-offerings, 15. and a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers spread with oil, and their meal-offering, and their drink-offerings. 16. And the priest shall bring them before the LORD, and shall offer his sin-offering, and his burnt-offering. 17. And he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, with the basket of unleavened

18. and shall take the hair. As the Nazirite had during his vow worn his hair unshorn in honour of God, so when the time was complete it was natural that the hair, the symbol of his vow, should be cut off at the Sanctuary. In the times of the Mishnah, a special room was assigned to the Nazirites for that purpose in one of the Temple courts.

22-27. THE PRIESTLY BLESSING

The simple and beautiful threefold petition which follows in v. 24-26 is known as בְּרַכַּת כֹּהֲנִים, 'The Priestly Blessing.' It is as it were the crown and seal of the whole sacred order by which Israel was now fully organized as the people of God, for the march to the Holy Land. The Heb. text consists of three short verses, of three, five, and seven words respectively. 'It mounts by gradual stages from the petition for material blessing and protection to that for Divine favour as a spiritual blessing, and in beautiful climax culminates in the petition for God's most consummate gift, shalom, peace, the welfare in which all material and spiritual well-being is comprehended' (Kautzsch). The fifteen words that constitute these three verses contain a world of trust in God and faith in God. They are clothed in a rhythmic form of great beauty, and they fall with majestic solemnity upon the ear of the worshipper. The Priestly Blessing was one of the most impressive features of the Service in the Temple at Jerusalem, and holds a prominent place in the worship of the Synagogue. In the Temple it was pronounced from a special tribune (duchan; hence the current name 'duchaning') after the sacrifice of the daily offering, morning and evening. In the Synagogue, it was early introduced into the daily Amidah (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 53). Its pronouncement by the Priests is in Ashkenazi communities limited, as a rule, to Festivals when not falling on Sabbaths. The ancient melody that accompanies its pronouncement by the Priests is in its original form weird and most impressive. Since the Reformation, the Priestly Blessing is a constituent of the service in many Protestant Churches.

23. on this wise ye shall bless. The Rabbis based on these words their specific regulations as to the manner in which alone the Blessing was to be pronounced. Only a priest, and not 'a stranger', was to pronounce it; it was to be done standing, and with outspread hands; the priest must be sober when blessing; and it must be given in the Hebrew tongue. These prescriptions have deep spiritual implications for all time. A stranger cannot bless; blessing requires knowledge and loving understanding of the person or cause to be blessed. Furthermore, to bless others is a difficult task, requiring children of Israel; ye shall say unto them:

 ¶ 24. The LORD bless thee, and keep thee;
 ¶ 25. The LORD make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; ¶ 26. The 24 כה יברכה יְהוָה וְיִשְׁמְרֶהָ: ׀ יֵאָר יְהוָה וּפָנָיו אֵלֶיךָ

 26 וְיַחֲנֹךְ: ׀ יֵשֶׂא יְהוָה וּפָנָיו אֵלֶיךָ וְיִשֶּׂם לָךְ שָׁלוֹם: ׀ readiness for sacrifice and prayerfulness. And, unless the blessing is to prove a blight, he that blesses must be quite 'sober'—the fanatic or he whose judgment is beclouded by hatred or prejudice can never truly bless anyone. The requirement as to the language of the Blessing is as vital as any. As far as the Jew is concerned, every measure on his behalf must be in the Sacred Tongue—i.e. translatable into Hebrew terms, and in line with Jewish history and Jewish ideals.

24. THE GUARDIANSHIP OF GOD

24. the LORD bless thee. With life, health, prosperity.

thee. Why is the singular used? A current explanation is: as the prerequisite of all blessing for Israel is unity, all Israel is to feel as one organic body.

and keep thee. Or, 'guard thee'; grant thee His Divine protection against evil, sickness, poverty, calamity. The LORD is the Keeper of Israel. He delivers our souls from death, keeps our eyes from tears, and our feet from stumbling. The Rabbis gave a wide application to these three Heb. words: May God bless thee, with possessions; and keep thee, from these possessions possessing thee. May God guard thee from sin, and shield thee from all destructive influences (מן המזיקין) that so often follow in the wake of earthly prosperity.

25. THE GRACE OF GOD

25. His face to shine upon thee. Light in Scripture is the symbol not only of happiness and purity, but also of friendship. To cause the face to shine upon one is the Biblical idiom for to be friendly to him. When God's 'face' is said to be turned towards man and to shine upon him, it implies the outpouring of Divine love and salvation (Ps. LXXX, 20). In contrast to this, we have the prayer, 'Hide not Thy face from me.'

The Rabbis interpret the words, 'make His face to shine upon thee,' in a purely spiritual sense, to imply the gift of knowledge and moral insight. 'May He give thee enlightenment of the eyes, the light of the Shechinah; may the fire of Prophecy burn in the souls of thy children; may the light of the Torah illumine thy home' (Sifri).

gracious unto thee. This is more than 'keep thee' in the preceding verse. May He be beneficent unto thee, and graciously fulfil thy petition. The Rabbis understand וְיַחֲנֹךְ in the sense of 'May He give thee grace in the eyes of thy fellow-men'; i.e. may He make thee lovable, and beloved in the eyes of others. Rabbi Chanina ben Dosa said: 'He in whom his fellow-creatures take delight, in him the All-present takes delight.'

26. THE PEACE OF GOD

26. lift up His countenance upon thee. Or, 'turn His face unto thee'; turn His attention, His loving care unto thee.

give thee. lit. 'set thee,' establish for thee. The Heb. is not וְיִתֵּן but וְיִשֶּׂם.

peace. 'Peace in thy coming in, peace in thy going out, peace with all men. Great is peace, for it is the seal of all blessings' (Talmud). The Heb. shalom means not only freedom from all disaster, but health, welfare, security, and tranquillity; 'the peace which alone reconciles and strengthens, which calms us and clears our vision, which frees us from restlessness and from the bondage of unsatisfied desire, which gives us the consciousness of attainment, the consciousness of permanence even amid the transitoriness of ourselves and of outward things' (Montefiore).

'Peace, say the Rabbis, is one of the pillars of the world; without it the social order could not exist. Therefore let a man do his utmost to promote it. Thus it is that the greatest Sages made a point of being the first to salute passers-by in the street. Peace is the burthen of the prayer with which every service in the synagogue concludes: 'May He who maketh peace in His high heavens grant peace unto us!' And so a twofold duty is indicated. We are not only to be peaceful ourselves, but to help others to be peaceful also. Peace is not only a personal, but a national ideal. There are, doubtless, occasions when war is defensible as a less evil than a disastrous and dishonourable peace. There are worse things, it is true, than war; but the worst of them is the belief that war is indispensable. Such a belief is fatal to the ultimate establishment of universal peace. The Jew who is true to himself will labour with especial energy in the cause of peace. The war-loving Jew is a contradiction in terms. Only the peace-loving Jew is a true follower of his Prophets, who set universal brotherhood in the forefront of their pictures of coming happiness for mankind, predicting the advent of a Golden Age when nation should not lift up sword against nation, nor learn war any more' (Morris Joseph).

Peace is no negative conception and is not the equivalent of inactivity. Whether for the individual or for society, it is that harmonious co-operation of all human forces towards ethical and spiritual ends which men call the Kingdom of God. The Prophets longed for a Messianic peace that should pervade the universe, and include all men, all peoples—that should include also the beasts of the field; Isaiah xi, 6-10.

17. peace-offerings. Were an expression of the of this symbolization.

18. prince of Issachar. "The tribe of Issachar had good claims to be among the first to offer sacrifices, for this tribe devoted itself to the study of the Torah, so that the great scholars in Israel were among them; and then, too, it was this tribe that had proposed to the others the bringing of the dedication offerings. As this was the tribe of erudition, its gifts symbolized things appearing to the Torah. The silver charger and the silver bowl corresponded to the Written and to the Oral Torah; and both vessels alike are filled thankful communion with God. The offerings of the princes were a favourite theme for the later Rabbinical homilists. They held that, though the offerings of all the princes were identical, these had a different significance for each tribe. From the time of Jacob, who foretold it to them, every tribe knew his future history to the time of the Messiah; hence, at the dedication of the Altar, each prince brought such offerings as symbolized the history of his tribe. Apart from the significance that the offerings had for each tribe respectively, they were held also to symbolize the history of the world from the time of Adam to the erection of the Tabernacle. The following comments on the gifts of the princes of Issachar (v. 18), of Reuben (v. 30), and on v. 84 f are fair samples of this symbolization.

joyous gratitude of the worshipper to God. Hence they were, in these instances, the most multiplied, as befitting an occasion of joy and of thankful communion with God.

CHAPTER VII

Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. ¶ 27. So shall they put My name upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them. *iv 5, v a.

1. And it came to pass on the day that Moses had made an end of setting up the tabernacle, and had anointed it and sanctified it, and all the furniture thereof, and the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them and sanctified them; 2. that the princes of Israel, the heads of their fathers' houses, offered—these were the princes of the tribes, these are they that were over them that were numbered. 3. And they brought their offering before the Lord, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen: a wagon for every two of the princes, and for each one an ox; and they presented them before the tabernacle. 4. And the Lord spoke unto Moses, saying: 5. 'Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tent of meeting; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.' 6. And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites. 7. Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service. 8. And four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari.

27. put My name. Announce to the children of Israel the blessed and beneficent nearness of the living God. In this prayer on behalf of Israel, the priests pronounced over the people the Ineffable Name of God. Outside the Temple, Adonay was invariably substituted for the Tetragrammaton.

and I will bless them. i.e. the children of Israel. The Israelites say, 'Why didst Thou order the priest to bless us? We want Thy blessing only. And God replies, It is I who stand by the priests and bless you (Talmud). The priest was no Mediator; and no priest could say, I bless the children of Israel. God is the source of, and He alone can give effect to, the blessing pronounced by the priests. They were merely the channel through which the blessing was conveyed to the Israelites.

THE OFFERINGS OF THE PRINCES

In this chapter we have the narrative of the presentation of identical gifts by the princes of the census; see i, 4 f.

each of the twelve tribes at the dedication of the Altar. This presentation took place at the time when Moses, after having completed the erection of the Tabernacle, anointed and sanctified it as well as the Altar and all the vessels connected with it (Lev. viii, 10, 11). Chronologically the present chapter follows immediately after Lev. viii. The offerings consist of gifts for the transport of the Tabernacle, and golden and silver vessels for the service of the Sanctuary, with sacrificial animals for the dedication ceremony. They were offered on twelve separate days. The narrative, describing each in unaltered language, reflects the stately solemnity that marked the repetition of the same ceremonial day by day. 'None among the princes wished to out rival the others, but such harmony reigned among them, and such unity of spirit, that God valued the service of each as if he had brought not only his own gifts, but also those of his companions' (Midrash).

This was the offering of Nethanel the son of Zuar. ¶ 24. with fine flour, for the two Laws are not antagonistic, but form a unity and contain the loftiest teachings. The fine flour was mingled with oil, just as knowledge of the Torah should be accompanied by good deeds; for he who occupies himself with the Torah, who works good deeds, and keeps himself aloof from sin, fills his Creator with delight. The golden spoon of ten shekels symbolizes the Two Tables on which God wrote the Ten Commandments, and which contained between the Commandments all the particulars

84. 'The gifts of the twelve princes of the tribes were equal in number as well as in the size and width of the objects bestowed. None among them wished to outrival the others; and such harmony and unity of spirit reigned among them, that God valued the service of each as if he had brought not only his own gifts but also those of his companions. The sum total of the gifts of the twelve princes of the tribes had also a symbolical significance. The twelve chargers correspond to the twelve constellations; the twelve bowls to the twelve months; the twelve spoons to the twelve guides of men, which are: the heart, the kidneys, the mouth, the palate, the windpipe, the esophagus, the lungs, the liver, the spleen, the crop, and the stomach. "All the silver of the vessels that weighed two thousand and four hundred shekels," corresponded to the years that had passed from the Creation of the World to the advent of Moses in the fortieth year of his life. All the gold of the spoons, the weight of which was an hundred and twenty shekels, corresponded to the years of Moses' life' (Midrash).

89. he heard the Voice speaking unto him. lit. 'he heard the Voice making itself as speaking'; i.e. Moses was audibly addressed by a Voice, not as before on the peak of Sinai far away, but in the Sanctuary that was now in the midst of Israel: Exod. xxv, 22.

'Moses in his humility felt that his mission as leader of the people ended with the erection of the Tabernacle, as Israel could now satisfy all their spiritual needs without his aid. But God said, As truly as thou livest, I have for thee a far greater task than any thou hast yet accomplished, for thou shalt instruct My children about "clean and unclean", and shalt teach them how to offer up offerings to Me. God hereupon called Moses to the Tabernacle, to reveal to him there the laws and teachings. The Voice that called Moses was as powerful as at the revelation at Sinai, still it was audible to none but Moses. Not even the angels heard it, for the words of God were destined exclusively for Moses' (Midrash).

CHAPTER XIII

2. And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah; and his wife was barren, and bore not. 3. And the angel of the LORD appeared unto the woman, and said unto her: 'Behold now, thou art barren, and hast not borne; but thou shalt conceive, and bear a son. 4. Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing. 5. For, lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and no razor shall come upon his head; for the child shall be a Nazirite unto God from the womb; and he shall begin to save Israel out of the hand of the Philistines.' 6. Then the woman came and told her husband, saying: 'A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of the angel of God, very Samson lived in the days of the Judges, that dark age in Bible history when there was no king in Israel and each one did that which was right in his own eyes. Deborah and Gideon and Jephthah were foremost amongst those 'Judges', i.e. champions who rescued their brethren from the slavery and degradation of the alien oppressor. And now the people had again been in bondage for over forty years to the Philistines, the most powerful and best organized of Israel's foes in the struggle for the possession of Canaan. They occupied the Maritime Plain and the hill-country between the sea and mountains of Judea, from Gaza northwards to Joppa. Unlike the Midianites and Moabites, who merely came to plunder, the Philistines conquered in order to rule. They disarmed the Israelites, and reduced them to a condition of abject submission. They remained a mortal menace to Israel until their power was broken by David.

Samson, whose birth is foretold and announced in this Haftorah, brought a temporary deliverance from the Philistine yoke. But he was utterly alone, and he wrought his intermittent feats of private revenge and daring alone, supported neither by enthusiasm for the national cause nor by active help from his people. He was a man, strong physically but weak morally, who suffered shipwreck through following 'the desire of the eyes', and permitting himself to be ensnared by a heathen woman. His life came to nothing. Blinded by his enemies, he buried his enemies and himself in the ruins of the idolatrous temple in which the Philistines had gathered to feast over his miseries. 'The story of Samson and his vain struggles fitly closes the period of the Judges, while presaging the more ominous times when the tribes will seek and find, in union under a central monarchy, their freedom and their future' (Garstang).

Samson was to be a Nazirite from birth. Hence the selection of this chapter as Haftorah for the Sedrah which contains the regulations governing the life of the Nazirite.

2. Zorah. Identified with the modern Sur'ah, about 17 miles to the west of Jerusalem. Is it without religious significance that Israel's new champion was to arise from Dan, at that time the least powerful of the tribes?

was barren. 'The child in such a case was a special gift of God, and marked out for a special career' (Cooke).

4. any unclean thing. In order that self-control, which must distinguish all those consecrated to a higher service, might be implanted in him even during the pre-natal period (Ralbag). Samson was thus predestined for his career.

5. begin to save Israel . . . Philistines. No one before him attempted to shake their power. His exploits against them were the first steps towards their final subjugation by David. Samson began to save Israel.

Then Manoah entreated the LORD, and said: 'Oh, Lord, I pray Thee, let the man of God whom Thou didst send come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.' 9. And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field; but Manoah her husband was not with her. 10. And the woman made haste, and ran, and told her husband, and said unto him: 'Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me that day.' 11. And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him: 'Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman?' And he said: 'I am.' 12. And Manoah said: 'Now when thy word cometh to pass, what shall be the rule for the child, and what shall be done with him?' 13. And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah: 'Of all that I said unto the woman let her beware. 14. She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the grape-vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing; all that I commanded her let her observe.' 15. And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD: 'I pray thee, let us detain thee, that we may make ready a kid for thee.' 16. And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah: 'Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread; and if thou wilt make ready a burnt-offering, thou must offer it unto the LORD.' For Manoah knew not that he was the angel of the LORD. 17. And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD: 'What is thy name, that when thy words come to pass we may do thee honour?' 18. And the angel of the LORD said unto him: 'Wherefore askest thou after my name, seeing it is hidden?' 19. So Manoah took the kid with the meal-offering, and offered it upon the rock unto the LORD; and [the angel] did wondrously, and Manoah and his wife looked on. 20. For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the LORD ascended in the flame of

25. to move him. i.e. to great and powerful action from time to time (Rashi). 'The spirit of the LORD' is represented as an impulse stirring him from within. The Heb. root denotes the sounding of a bell. The story of Samson is full of sadness. It reveals a nation utterly deteriorated and disintegrated, and a man who through self-indulgence weakens and eventually loses his God-given power to deliver his people. The time was, alas, to come when Scripture would record of him, 'he knew not that the LORD was departed from him' (xvi, 20).

Milton's Samson Agonistes is a wonderful commentary on his life. So is Watts' Samson. 'Watts paints him in serious thoughtful mood, with a far-away look in his eyes that yet seem to see nothing, feeling how far short he has come of his great consecration; how the Spirit's power has been to him a gift endowing him at times with supernatural strength, but not a sanctifying grace always abiding in him and transforming his nature. And perhaps this was a more common mood with him, though he does not give way to it, than the joyousness which overflowed in mirthful tricks and plays upon words which is associated with him. His story, if we rightly consider it, was pathetic and tragic in the highest degree' (Macmillan).

THE MENORAH

VIII, 1-4. The making of the Menorah is described in Exod. xxv. The command to light the lamps in the Tabernacle had been given briefly in Exod. xxv, 37; and in Exod. xxvii, 21 Aaron and his sons are specially entrusted with that duty.

2. when thou lightest the lamps. lit. 'when thou causest the lamps to go up'; i.e. when thou causest the flame of the lamps to go up.

'Why does this command follow immediately after the consecration of the Altar?' asks the Midrash. The answer is: when Aaron saw the rich gifts which the princes offered on that occasion, his heart grew faint that neither he nor his tribe had a part in that consecration. Thereupon the Holy One, blessed be He, reassured him in the words, 'By thy life, thine is greater glory than theirs, for thou lightest the Menorah.' There is a further Rabbinical saying: 'The Sanctuary will on another occasion also be dedicated by kindling the lights, and then it will be done by thy descendants, the Hasmoneans. Thus greater glory is destined for thee than for the princes. Their offerings to the Sanctuary will be employed only as long as it endures, but the lights of the Chanukah festival shall shine for ever.'

give light in front of the candlestick. Aaron is here bidden to arrange the wicks of the seven lamps in such a way that they shall give out one combined blaze of light over against the central shaft of the candelabrum itself (Talmud). Israel said before God: 'LORD of the Universe, Thou commandest us to illumine before Thee; art Thou not the Light of the world, and with Whom light dwelleth?' 'Not that I require your light,' was the Divine reply, 'but that you may perpetuate the light which I conferred on you as an example to the nations of the world' (Talmud).

The Menorah is one of the favourite symbols of Judaism. Through its association with Chanukah, the Menorah has come to typify spiritual conquest, and that spiritual conquest is achieved neither by might nor by power, but by God's spirit (see the Haftarah, which is the same as for the Sabbath of Chanukah). Israel, as the Servant of the LORD, is to perform his Divine task without violence. He is not to strive nor cry: 'a bruised reed shall he not break, and the dimly burning wick shall he not quench' (Isa. xlii, 3). The image employed by Isaiah to describe Israel's mission is the gentle agency of light, with its irresistible illumination of the surrounding darkness. 'This is among the loftiest conceptions of all human thought. How new an idea it was, is measured by the length of time it has taken before the idea began slowly to make its way that force cannot conquer spirit' (Moulton).

5-26. DEDICATION OF THE LEVITES

The choice of the Levites for the service of the Sanctuary is given in III, 5-10 and their duties are detailed in IV. In view of the impending break-up of the camp, it was now necessary formally to dedicate them to the duties upon which they were about to enter.

6. take the Levites. 'With kind words. Say unto them, Happy are ye inasmuch as ye have been found worthy to be servants to the Omnipresent' (Rashi). 'For God elevates no man to an office unless He has tried him and found him worthy of his calling. He did not say, "and the Levites shall be Mine," before He had tried this children of Israel, and cleanse them. 7. And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: sprinkle the water of purification upon them, and let them cause a razor to pass over all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and cleanse themselves. 8. Then let them take a young bullock, and its meal-offering, fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin-offering. 9. And thou shalt present the Levites before the tent of meeting; and thou shalt assemble the whole congregation of the children of Israel. 10. And thou shalt present the Levites before the LORD; and the children of Israel shall lay their hands upon the Levites. 11. And Aaron shall offer the Levites before the LORD for a wave-offering from the children of Israel, that they may be to do the service of the LORD. 12. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks; and offer thou the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, unto the LORD, to make atonement for the Levites. 13. And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for a wave-offering unto the LORD. 14. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be Mine.*ii. 15. And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tent of meeting; and thou shalt cleanse them, tribe, and found them worthy. In Egypt none but the tribe of Levi observed the Torah, and clung to the token of the Abrahamic covenant; while the other tribes, abandoning both Torah and token of covenant, like the Egyptians, practised idolatry. In the desert, also, it was this tribe alone that did not take part in the worship of the Golden Calf. Justly, therefore, did God's choice fall upon this godly tribe, who on this day were consecrated as the servants of God and His sanctuary' (Midrash).

cleanse them. Purify them from ritual uncleanness.

7. sprinkle. The Heb. is the infinitive. It does not, therefore, denote an act which Moses is ordered to perform himself—an act that would have taken one person many months—but an act which he is to order to be performed (Ehrlich).

water of purification. lit. 'water of sin'; i.e. water which removes sin; according to Rashi, it was the water used in the rites connected with the ordinance of the Red Heifer (xix, 9) for the removal of defilement due to contact with a dead body. Among the large number of Levites to be consecrated some must have required such purification.

and let them wash their clothes. An act enjoined in Scripture as a preparation for any special religious service; Gen. xxxv, 2; Exod. xix, 10. This ceremonial cleansing symbolized the inward purity required of those who bore the vessels of the Sanctuary.

10. before the LORD. Before the Altar of sacrifice.

lay their hands upon the Levites. The representatives of the Israelites laid their hands upon the representatives of the Levites, in order to indicate that the whole community offered them to the service of God; cf. Lev. i, 4.

a wave-offering. The Levites were probably led backwards and forwards by Aaron in the direction of the Holy of Holies, or he may have only waved his hand over them. The idea underlying was unmistakable. This is: having been given by the Israelites to God, the Levites were given back to the Israelites, whose servants they were to be in all matters appertaining to the Sanctuary.

12. and the Levites. i.e. the chosen representatives of the Levites.

and offer them for a wave-offering. 16. For they are wholly given unto Me from among the children of Israel; instead of all that openeth the womb, even the first-born of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto Me. 17. For all the first-born among the children of Israel are Mine, both man and beast; on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt I sanctified them for Myself. 18. And I have taken the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel. 19. And I have given the Levites—they are given to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the tent of meeting, and to make atonement for the children of Israel, that there be no plague among the children of Israel, through the children of Israel coming nigh unto the sanctuary.' 20. Thus did Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the Levites; according unto all that the LORD commanded Moses touching the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them. 21. And the Levites purified themselves, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them for a sacred gift before the LORD; and Aaron made atonement for them to cleanse them. 22. And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tent of meeting before Aaron, and before his sons; as the LORD had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them. ¶ 23. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 24. 'This is that which pertaineth unto the Levites: from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to perform the service in the work of the tent of meeting; 25. and from the age of fifty years they shall return from the service of the work, and shall no plague. The explanation is indicated in Rashi's comment, which in effect states: 'I have appointed the Levites to take over the service of the Sanctuary from the children of Israel, upon whom it had hitherto devolved, and thereby to prevent a plague amongst the latter; because if they came near the Sanctuary there would certainly be a plague amongst them, since they have proved themselves unworthy of the priestly office.'

CHAPTER IX

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying: 2. 'Let the children of Israel keep the passover in its appointed season. 3. In the fourteenth day of this month, at dusk, ye shall keep it in its appointed season; according to all the statutes of it, and according to all the ordinances thereof, shall ye keep it.' 4. And Moses spoke unto the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover. 5. And they kept the passover in the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at dusk, in the wilderness of Sinai; according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel. 6. But there were certain men, who were unclean by the dead body of a man, so that they could not keep the passover on that day; and they came before Moses and before Aaron on that day. 7. And those men said unto him: 'We are unclean by the dead body of a man; wherefore are we to be kept back, so as not to bring the offering of the LORD in its appointed season among the children of Israel?' 8. And Moses said unto them: 'Stay ye, that I may hear what the LORD will command concerning you.' ¶ 9. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 10. 'Speak unto the children of Israel, saying: If any man of you or of your generations shall keep the charge. Assist in dismantling and erecting the Tent of Meeting at the beginning or end of a journey (Rashi). A superannuated life need not be a useless life.

IX, 1-14. THE SECOND PASSOVER

A supplementary Passover on the same day in the second month for persons prevented by uncleanness and absence from participating in the Paschal sacrifice in Nisan.

1. in the first month of the second year. This date is earlier by one month than the date with which the Book of Numbers opens. 'You learn hereby that the narratives of Scripture are not given in strict chronological sequence' (Sifri). From Exod. xii, 25, xiii, 5-10, it appears that the Passover there ordained was for celebration after the settlement in Canaan. Special direction was, therefore, required for a Passover in the Wilderness.

2. in its appointed season. 'Even if the Passover falls on the Sabbath' (Sifri).

3. at dusk. Better, towards even (Friedländer); lit. 'between the two evenings'; see on Exod. xii, 6.

5. and they kept the passover. According to Tradition, that was the only Paschal sacrifice offered in the Wilderness.

7. wherefore are we to be kept back? lit. 'why should we be made less?' Why should we, owing to accidental and temporary defilement, be made inferior to the rest of Israel by not being able to participate in the Festival celebration?

10. or be in a journey afar off. So that he cannot reach the Sanctuary in time for the slaughtering of the sacrifice.

be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the LORD; 11. in the second month on the fourteenth day at dusk they shall keep it; they shall eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs; 12. they shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break a bone thereof; according to all the statute of the passover they shall keep it. 13. But the man that is clean, and is not on a journey, and forbearth to keep the passover, that soul shall be cut off from his people; because he brought not the offering of the LORD in its appointed season, that man shall bear his sin. 14. And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the LORD: according to the statute of the passover, and according to the ordinance thereof, so shall he do; ye shall have one statute, both for the stranger, and for him that is born in the land.*15. ¶15. And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up the cloud covered the tabernacle, even the tent of the testimony; and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until morning. 16. So it was always: the cloud covered it, and the appearance of fire by night. 17. And whenever the cloud was taken up from over the Tent, then after that the children of Israel journeyed; and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel encamped. 18. At the commandment of the LORD the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the LORD they encamped: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they remained encamped. 19. And when the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the LORD, and journeyed not. 20. And sometimes the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the LORD they remained encamped, and according to the commandment of the LORD they

15-23. THE FIERY CLOUD UPON THE TABERNACLE

This section connects with Exod. xl, 34. It was the invariable custom to start on the march when the Cloud rose from the Tabernacle, and to halt when and as long as it rested.

15. the cloud covered the tabernacle. As the manifestation of the Divine Presence in the midst of Israel. It covered only that part of it in which the Ark was placed.

at even. The manifestation of the Divine Presence had the appearance of fire.

17. and whenever the cloud was taken up. This verse and the following to the end of the chapter are an amplification of Exod. xl, 36-8.

18. at the commandment of the LORD. The Israelites were uncertain as to the duration of their sojourn in any place; but, looking upon the Cloud as the symbol of the Divine Presence, they considered the Cloud's movements as orders from on High, which they invariably obeyed.

journeyed. 21. And sometimes the cloud was from evening until morning; and when the cloud was taken up in the morning, they journeyed; or if it continued by day and by night, when the cloud was taken up, they journeyed. 22. Whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, abiding thereon, the children of Israel remained encamped, and journeyed not; but when it was taken up, they journeyed. 23. At the commandment of the LORD they encamped, and at the commandment of the LORD they journeyed; they kept the charge of the LORD, at the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

CHAPTER X

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2. 'Make thee two trumpets of silver; of beaten work shalt thou make them; and they shall be unto thee for the calling of the congregation, and for causing the camps to set forward. 3. And when they shall blow with them, all the congregation shall gather themselves unto thee at the door of the tent of meeting. 4. And if they blow but with one, then the princes, the heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee. 5. And when ye blow an alarm, the camps that lie on the east side shall take their journey. 6. And when ye blow an alarm the second time, the camps that lie on the south side shall set forward; they shall blow an alarm for their journeys. 7. But when the assembly is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm. 8. And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets; and they shall be to you for a statute for ever throughout your generations. 9. And when ye go to war in

X, 1-10. CLARIONS OF SILVER

They were for summoning the congregation or the princes to the Sanctuary, as well as signals to begin the journey or in times of war. The clarions were long and narrow, with an expanded mouth, as distinct from the Shofar, or ram's horn of the Jubilee (Lev. xxv, 9). There is an illustration of these clarions among the spoils of the Temple, on the Arch of Titus.

2. of beaten work. Made out of a single plate of silver.

3. all the congregation. i.e. the representatives of the congregation, and the heads of families.

4. but with one. A blast on one clarion was the signal for an assembly of only the princes of the tribes; on both, for all the congregation.

your land against the adversary that oppresseth you, then ye shall sound an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the LORD your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies.

10. Also in the day of your gladness, and in your appointed seasons, and in your new moons, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; and they shall be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the LORD your God.*v.

9. remembered before the LORD your God. The music of these clarions, by infusing both courage and cheerfulness in the hearers, will be the means of invoking the Divine aid against the foe; and thus shall Israel in his hour of danger 'be remembered' of God and saved. That the usage of trumpets in war was viewed from this spiritual standpoint is attested by II Chron. XIII, 12-16, as well as I Macc. IV, 40; V, 33.

10. day of your gladness. Any public rejoicing, such as after a victory. Tradition here confines the term to Sabbaths.

B. FROM SINAI TO MOAB

(CHAPTERS X, 11-XXI)

X, 11-34. THE DEPARTURE FROM SINAI

Ten months and nineteen days after the arrival at Sinai, the journeying towards Moab and the Holy Land began. Guided by the Cloud they, in due course, encamped in the wilderness of Paran.

12. their stages. As in XXXIII, 2. Most Jewish commentators take it to mean the order in which the journeying took place.

abode in the wilderness. As a sign that they were to halt there.

Paran. North of the Sinai Peninsula. Its eastern border is a line drawn from the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Akaba, apparently corresponding to the modern et-Tih. Paran formed an important stage in the wanderings across the wilderness. Before it was reached, there were two halting places, at the 'Graves of Lust' (XI, 34-5) and Hazeroth (XII, 16).

17. was taken down. i.e. used to be taken down, and apart, for the journey; the fabric of it, the boards, curtains, and other heavy portions that were packed upon the six wagons provided for the purpose (VII, 3-9).

And the standard of the camp of Reuben set forward according to their hosts; and over his host was Elizur the son of Shedeur. 19. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Simeon was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai. 20. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad was Eliasaph the son of Deuel. 21. And the Kohathites the bearers of the sanctuary set forward, that the tabernacle might be set up against their coming. 22. And the standard of the camp of the children of Ephraim set forward according to their hosts; and over his host was Elishama the son of Ammihud. 23. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh was Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur. 24. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin was Abidan the son of Gideon. 25. And the standard of the camp of the children of Dan, which was the rearward of all the camps, set forward according to their hosts; and over his host was Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai. 26. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Asher was Pagiel the son of Ochran. 27. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Naphtali was Ahira the son of Enan. 28. Thus were the journeyings of the children of Israel according to their hosts.—And they set forward.*^{v18}. ¶29. And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law: 'We are journeying unto the place of which the LORD said: I will give it you; come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for the LORD hath spoken good concerning Israel.' 30. And he said unto him; 'I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.' 31. And he said: 'Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou shalt

25. the rearward. The work of such a rearguard would consist in collecting stragglers, in taking charge of such as had fainted by the way, and in finding and restoring lost articles.

29–32. HOBAB

Moses requests his father-in-law to remain with them and act as their guide.

29. Hobab, the son of Reuel. According to Rabbinic tradition, Hobab is identical with Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses. Reuel was the father of Jethro, or Hobab. Exod. ii, 18, where the daughters of Jethro call Reuel their father, presents no difficulty. The Rabbis rightly explain that children oft-times call their grandfather 'father'.

31. instead of eyes. As Midian bordered on Sinai and Paran, he was thoroughly familiar with that desert. The Cloud, ix, 15 f, was not a guide; it only indicated the times of breaking up and of resting. Hobab's answer is not given; but it may be inferred from Judges i, 16, iv, 11 that he yielded, and consented to be 'eyes' unto them in the desert.

And they set forward from the mount of the LORD three days' journey; and the ark of the covenant of the LORD went before them in the three days' journey, to seek out a resting-place for them. 34. And the cloud of the LORD was over them by day, when they set forward from the camp. *v. 35. ¶ 35. And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said: 'Rise up, O LORD, and let Thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate Thee flee before Thee.' 36. And when it rested, he said: 'Return, O LORD, unto the ten thousands of the families of Israel.'

three days' journey. 'When God commanded Israel to set out from Sinai, where they had received many laws, and continue their march, the Israelites were glad. Instead of making a day's march from Sinai as God had commanded them, they marched incessantly for three days. They behaved like a boy who runs quickly away after dismissal from school, that his teacher might not call him back' (Midrash).

the ark. On this special occasion only, when they started the journey, did the Ark go in front, in order to inspire them with confidence and courage (Ibn Ezra). Otherwise the Ark and its appurtenances were carried by the Kohathites in the middle of the line of march.

went before them in the three days' journey. This is the rendering of the AV (and Sforzo, Luzzatto), and is a departure from the AJ which omits the words 'in the', and thereby attaches an impossible meaning to the text.

34. was over them by day. This phrase, taken in conjunction with Psalm cv, 39, 'He spread a cloud for a screen,' would seem to indicate that the Cloud not only served the purpose of a signal but also of a shade, protecting the wanderers from the burning heat of the sun.

35-36. INVOCATION PRAYERS

These verses preserve the invocation prayers in connection with the going forward and the resting of the Ark in the wilderness; and we still feel the thrill of sacred enthusiasm that animated the men of old on hearing them. They are used to this day at the opening and closing of the Ark, whenever the Torah is read in the synagogue. These two verses are enclosed in inverted Nuns, to indicate either that they are not here in their original place (Talmud); or that they are taken from another source (possibly from 'the Book of the Wars of the LORD', see xxi, 14) and form a distinct section, scroll, or even 'book' of the Torah. Some of the Rabbis thought of the Book of Numbers as consisting of three parts (i-x, 34; x, 35, 36; xi-xxxvi), and, in consequence, counted seven books of the Torah. Thus, according to Rabbi Johanan, 'Wisdom hath hewn out her seven pillars' (Prov. ix, 1) referred to the Seven Books of the Torah.

35. when the ark set forward. The Ark going forward at the head of Israel's tribes typified God in front of His people protecting and helping them, and leading them on to final victory. 'Through the wilderness Israel went, not knowing from what quarter the sudden raid of a desert people might be made. Swiftly, silently, as if springing out of the very sand, the Arab raiders might bear down upon the travellers. They were assured of the guardianship of Him whose eye never slumbered' (Expositor's Bible).

said. i.e. would say; the tense is the so-called 'frequentative'.

rise up . . . be scattered. 'The impressive war-cry of truth against error, of righteousness against sin' (Abrahams). God's enemies are the enemies of Israel. When God arises against the hosts of Israel's enemies, they scatter as the darkness before the sunlight.

36. unto the ten thousands of the families of Israel. Heb. רַבְבוֹת אֶלְפֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל. The second 'thousands' is here equivalent to 'families' or 'clans'. Ehrlich takes the whole phrase as a synonym of God—and renders, 'O Thou Who art the ten thousands of the thousands of Israel'—a most appropriate invocation addressed to God as the Ark returned from victory; cf. II Kings ii, 12, where Elijah is addressed as 'the chariot of Israel, and the horseman thereof'; or the Divine title, 'the LORD of Hosts.'

'Long after those desert days, a psalmist laid

And the people were as murmurers, speaking evil in the ears of the LORD; and when the LORD heard it, His anger was kindled; and the fire of the LORD burnt among them, and devoured in the uttermost part of the camp. 2. And the people cried unto Moses; and Moses prayed unto the LORD, and the fire abated. 3. And the name of that place was called ¹Taberah, because the fire of the LORD burnt among them. ¶4. And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting; and the children of Israel also wept on their part, and said: 'Would that we were given flesh to eat! 5. We remember the fish, which we were wont to eat in Egypt for nought; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic; 6. but now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all; we have nought save this manna to look to.'—7. Now the manna was like coriander seed, and the appearance thereof as the appearance of bdellium. 8. The people went about, and gathered it, and hold of the old prayer and offered it, as not antiquated yet by the thousand years that had intervened. "Let God arise, let His enemies be scattered; and let them that hate Him flee before Him" (Psalm LXVIII, 2). We too may take up the immortal though ancient words, and, at the beginnings and endings of all our efforts, offer this old prayer—the prayer which asked for a Divine Presence in the incipency of our efforts, and the prayer which asked for a Divine Presence on the completion of our work' (Maclaren).

CHAPTER XI

MURMURINGS AND REBELLIONS

This and the following three chapters deal with the successive rebellions of the People after their departure from Sinai that resulted in their being excluded from the Promised Land.

1-3. AT TABERAH

1. as murmurers. Rebellious and complaining, instead of bearing their troubles in a spirit of trustful dependence upon God.

the fire of the LORD. The punishment was swift and terrible. It may either have been lightning (Job i, 16), a miraculous outburst of flame (Lev. x, 2) or an ordinary conflagration.

2. unto Moses; and Moses prayed. The Midrash says, 'It may be likened unto an earthly king who was angry with his son. What did the son do? He went to his father's friend, saying, Go and seek mercy from my father for me.'

abated. Went out.

3. Taberah. i.e. 'Burning.'

4-35. 'THE GRAVES OF LUST'

4. and the mixed multitude. The Heb. form is a contemptuous term denoting a number of people gathered together from all quarters, a rabble, or riff-raff. It is identical with the mixed multitude (Exod. xii, 38) of aliens who had attached themselves to the Israelites and accompanied them out of Egypt.

fell a lusting. Began to have a strong craving for flesh food.

the children of Israel also wept. Discontent, like sin, is contagious. 'They were not so much suffering as seeking for some pretext for grumbling' (Sifri).

5. we remember. 'The natural dainties of Egypt are set forth in this passage with the fullness and relish which bespeak personal experience' (Speaker's Bible). These words enable us clearly to see into those slave souls who preferred the garlic of Egypt to the bread of freedom.

for nought. Classical writers attest that in Egypt fish was to be had in abundance and was incredibly cheap.

7. coriander seed. About the size of a peppercorn; Exod. xvi, 31.

as the appearance of bdellium. See Gen. ii, 12. The manna is said to have been white. The comparison probably turns on the shining or sparkling nature of the bdellium.

8. as the taste of a cake baked with oil. lit. 'something juicy made with oil.' In Exod. xvi, 31, it is said to have tasted like wafers made with honey, the 'oily' taste no doubt coming to it after it had been ground and beaten.

ground it in mills, or beat it in mortars, and seethed it in pots, and made cakes of it; and the taste of it was as the taste of a cake baked with oil. 9. And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.—10. And Moses heard the people weeping, family by family, every man at the door of his tent; and the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; and Moses was displeased. 11. And Moses said unto the LORD: 'Wherefore hast Thou dealt ill with Thy servant? and wherefore have I not found favour in Thy sight, that Thou layest the burden of all this people upon me? 12. Have I conceived all this people? have I brought them forth, that Thou shouldest say unto me: Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing-father carrieth the sucking child, unto the land which Thou didst swear unto their fathers? 13. Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they trouble me with their weeping, saying: Give us flesh, that we may eat. 14. I am not able to bear all this people myself alone, because it is too heavy for me. 15. And if Thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray Thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in Thy sight; and let me not look upon my wretchedness.' ¶16. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Gather unto Me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tent of meeting, that they may stand there with thee. 17. And I will come down and speak with thee there; and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone. 18. And say thou unto the people: Sanctify yourselves against to-

10-15. MOSES' DISCOURAGEMENT AND COMPLAINT

10. family by family. The weeping was general and unconcealed.

11. wherefore have I not found favour in Thy sight. 'This is the language of despair, not the murmuring of unbelief' (Keil).

15. my wretchedness. i.e. the failure of his hopes and efforts; cf. the despairing complaint of Elijah in 1 Kings xix, 4 and of Jeremiah in Jer. xv, 10. 'My wretchedness: his failure to fulfil the task which he cannot abandon because God-given—a feeling of woe that arises whenever a spiritual leader toils vainly and wearily with the dull masses, to whom he is tied by feelings of love and duty' (Holzinger).

16-30. THE SEVENTY ELDERS

16. whom thou knowest to be the elders. Ripe in years as well as qualified by their wisdom to share the burdens of leadership.

Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days; 20. but a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you; because that ye have rejected the LORD who is among you, and have troubled Him with weeping, saying: 'Why, now, came we forth out of Egypt?' 21. And Moses said: 'The people, among whom I am, are six hundred thousand men on foot; and yet Thou hast said: I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month! 22. If flocks and herds be slain for them, will they suffice them? or if all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, will they suffice them?' 23. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Is the LORD's hand waxed short? now shalt thou see whether My word shall come to pass unto thee or not.' ¶ 24. And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the LORD; and he gathered seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the Tent. 25. And the LORD came down in the cloud, and spoke unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and put it upon the seventy elders; and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, but they did so no more. 26. But there remained two men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad; and the spirit rested upon them; and they were of them that were recorded, but had not gone out unto the Tent; and they they prophesied. A feeling of spiritual ecstasy and exaltation possessed them, causing them to break out into praises of God, and declaring His will and His goodness. By prophecy is here meant, not prediction of the future, but the power of instructing and admonishing the people with an authority that was recognized as having its source in God.

but they did so no more. 'They prophesied that day but never after' (Sifri). They were not intended to be permanent sharers with Moses in his task of leadership. Maimonides compares the recipients of Divine revelations to men whose night is illumined by flashes of lightning. 'To some it is given to behold the lightning flashes in rapid succession; they seem to be in perpetual light, and their night is as clear as day. This was the degree of prophetic excellence obtained by Moses, the greatest of the Prophets. Others perceive the prophetic flash at long intervals; this is the degree of most of the Prophets. By still others a flash of lightning is perceived only once during the whole night. This is the case of those of whom we are told, "They prophesied, but they did so no more."' prophesied in the camp. 27. And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said: 'Eldad and Medad are prophesying in the camp.' 28. And Joshua the son of Nun, the minister of Moses from his youth up, answered and said: 'My lord Moses, shut them in.' 29. And Moses said unto him: 'Art thou jealous for my sake? would that all the LORD's people were prophets, that the LORD would put His spirit upon them!' *¹ 30. And Moses withdrew into the camp, he and the elders of Israel. ¶ 31. And there went forth a wind from the LORD, and brought across quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, about a day's journey on this side, and a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, and about two cubits above the face of the earth. 32. And the people rose up all that day, and all the night, and all the next day, and gathered the quails; he that gathered least gathered ten heaps; and they spread them all abroad for themselves round about the camp. 33. While the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the anger of the LORD was kindled against the people, and the LORD smote the people with a very great plague. 34. And the name of that place was called 'Kibroth-hattaavah, because there they buried the people that lusted. 35. From Kibroth-hattaavah the people journeyed unto Hazeroth; and they abode at Hazeroth.

29. would that all the LORD'S people were prophets. This one saying proves the incomparable greatness of Moses' character. He loves his people more than himself. When a man is really great and good he longs that all should be as he is, and better. So far from being displeased with Eldad and Medad, he yearned for all Israel, elders or not, without the camp or within, to receive the Divine spirit. 'Moses expresses the conviction which is true for all time, that the possession of the spirit is not confined to particular persons or classes' (McNeile).

CHAPTER XII

MIRIAM AND THE VINDICATION OF MOSES

Moses bore with resignation the complaints and murmurings of his People, and—as we shall see—their alternate cowardice and foolhardiness. His foes were also of his own household. This chapter tells how his only brother and only sister offended against him.

1. And Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses because of the Cushite woman whom he had married; for he had married a Cushite woman. 2. And they said: 'Hath the LORD indeed spoken only with Moses? hath He not spoken also with us?' And the LORD heard it.—3. Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men that were upon the face of the earth.—4. And the LORD spoke suddenly unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam: 'Come out ye three unto the tent of meeting.' And they three came out. 5. And the LORD came down in a pillar of cloud, and stood at the door of the Tent, and called Aaron and Miriam; and they both came forth. 6. And He said: 'Hear now My words: if there be a prophet among you, I the LORD do make Myself known unto him in a vision, I do speak with him in a dream. 7. My servant Moses is

v. 3. עניו ק'

1. spoke against Moses. Miriam seems to have been the instigator of the evil speaking against Moses. The story of Miriam in Scripture is brief, but memorable. She first appears during the Oppression in Egypt, guarding the ark of bulrushes in which Moses was saved from destruction. Then many years later at the crossing of the Red Sea, she led the women's refrain, 'Sing unto the LORD, for He hath triumphed gloriously.' Because of the merit of Miriam—says Jewish legend—a Well accompanied the Israelites on their wanderings till the day of her death. It is a spiritual tragedy that such a prophetic soul should have been guilty of an offence deserving the dire punishment recorded in this chapter.

the Cushite woman. Probably Zipporah, a native of Midian, which is a synonym of Cushan (Hab. iii, 7), the home of the North Arabian people called 'Kusi'. Others take the word Cushite in the usual sense of 'Ethiopian'. In that case, (the second) marriage of Moses with a South Egyptian woman was the occasion of complaint by Miriam and Aaron. Further details are not given, which fact led legend to step in and fill in the gap, and supply a reason that would serve as the connection between v. 1 and 2. (Guedemann traces the growth of that legend in a masterly study in the Monatsschrift for 1870).

2. only with Moses. Having spoken ill of Moses and thus belittled his importance, they asked, 'Has Moses a monopoly of Divine communications? Can we not claim equality with him?'

and the LORD heard it. God said, Moses is very meek and pays no heed to the injustice meted out to him. I will therefore defend him (Midrash).

3. now the man Moses was very meek. These words explain how it was that Moses took no steps to vindicate himself.

'There is about these words, as also about the passages in which Moses no less unequivocally records his own faults (xx, 12 f; Exod. iv, 24 f; Deut. i, 37), that simplicity which is witness at once to their genuineness and inspiration. The Heb. word for meek (עניו) occurs frequently in the Psalms, and as here is applied by the writers to themselves; cf. Psalm x, 17, and Psalm xxii, 27' (Speaker's Bible).

4. suddenly. Reproof and retribution followed without delay.

5. both came forth. They were separated from Moses, because a man's whole praise may only be uttered in his absence (Sifri). This praise is given in v. 7, 8.

6. if there be a prophet among you. Better, if there be a prophet of the LORD among you. I the LORD do make. Better, I make.

in a vision . . . dream. 'With some of the higher Prophets, such as Jeremiah, dreams as a source of revelation fell into complete disrepute' (Gray).

7. trusted in all My house. Found worthy of God's confidence in everything appertaining to the guidance of the House of Israel. Moses is pre-eminent among the Prophets. While other Prophets chiefly warned their own generation and comforted them with blessings in the remote future, Moses addresses all times, communicating to them everlasting statutes and laws for all generations.

not so; he is trusted in all My house; 8. with him do I speak mouth to mouth, even manifestly, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the LORD doth he behold; wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against My servant, against Moses?" 9. And the anger of the LORD was kindled against them; and He departed. 10. And when the cloud was removed from over the Tent, behold, Miriam was leprous, as white as snow; and Aaron looked upon Miriam; and, behold, she was leprous. 11. And Aaron said unto Moses: 'Oh my lord, lay not, I pray thee, sin upon us, for that we have done foolishly, and for that we have sinned. 12. Let her not, I pray, be as one dead, of whom the flesh is half consumed when he cometh out of his mother's womb.' 13. And Moses cried unto the LORD, saying: 'Heal her now, O God, I beseech Thee,' *^m. ¶14. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'If her father had but spit in her face, should she not hide in shame seven days? let her be shut up without the camp seven days, and after that she shall be brought in again.' 15. And Miriam was shut up without the camp seven days; and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again. 16. And afterward the people journeyed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

8. mouth to mouth. The same as 'face to face' (Deut. xxxiv, 10). These phrases denote figuratively 'the clearest, most direct, and most simple communication, the figure being taken from the way in which men communicate to each other things which they desire to be clearly understood and to leave no doubt as to their truth or meaning' (Friedländer).

not in dark speeches. The Talmud expresses this distinction by comparing the vision received by Moses to the reflection given out by a bright mirror (אספקלריא מאירה), whilst the visions of other Prophets were like the blurred images produced by a dim mirror.

the similitude of the LORD. Not the essential nature of God, which no man can see, but the similitude in which for the time it pleased Him to veil His glory; as e.g. the burning bush.

9. He departed. As a judge departs after trying and convicting evil-doers.

10. Miriam was leprous. Aaron was exempted from punishment, as he was merely drawn into this attack on his brother. Leprosy was regarded as the Providential punishment for slander (מצורע, מוציא שם רע).

11. Oh my lord. Aaron now feels humbled and speaks to Moses as to a superior.

lay not, I pray thee, sin upon us. Do not bring upon us the consequences of our sin.

heal her, O God, I beseech thee. This prayer is a model of brevity. It says so much in five of the simplest, shortest Hebrew words!

14. hide in shame seven days. Would not a father's putting his daughter to shame before all the world entail her retirement for seven days at least? How much more, when her Heavenly Father has seen fit to inflict a public punishment upon Miriam, should she be shut away for at least a similar period!

15. without the camp. As was the case with lepers.

till Miriam was brought in again. This was done out of deference to Miriam. 'Miriam waited for her brother Moses one hour, as it is said, "And his sister stood afar off, to know what would be done to him" (Exod. ii, 4). In return for this sisterly act, the people of Israel waited for Miriam seven days in the desert' (Talmud).

Zechariah was one of the exiles who returned from Babylon when Cyrus promulgated his decree of Restoration in the year 537. He began his prophecies about 17 years afterwards. Disastrous seasons and the hostility of neighbours had discouraged the people, and all operations in connection with rebuilding the Temple had long ceased.

At this juncture the Prophets Haggai and Zechariah appeared, roused the people from their despondency and fired them to resume the work which had been suspended.

In our Haftorah, Zechariah assures the people of the Divine assistance in their work of rebuilding the Temple and of national rehabilitation. Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the LORD of Hosts—these words of Zechariah may be said to proclaim the lesson of all Jewish history; it is certainly the Prophetic teaching of the Maccabean Festival, with which his name is linked in the synagogue service.

The Prophet's vision of the 'candlestick all of gold' in chap. iv, with its teaching that God alone is the Source of all light, connects with the Sedrah, which opens with the command concerning the Menorah.

14. I will dwell in the midst of thee. Through the visible symbol of the restored Temple.

17. be silent. All hostile efforts directed against the rebuilding of the Temple, and later any human opposition to God's ultimate purpose, shall fail.

CHAPTER III

Zechariah's messages are chiefly conveyed by means of visions. The object of the vivid visions, so dramatically described in the remainder of the Haftorah, is to banish the disturbing thoughts and fears which were depressing the people.

1. Joshua. The first high priest after the Restoration. He was prominently associated with Zerubbabel, the then Governor of Judah, in the erection of the Second Temple. Zerubbabel was the grandson of Jehoiachin, the last independent king of Judah, who had been carried away captive to Babylon in the year 597.

Satan. One who opposes with false accusations. Satan accuses Joshua and the people of sinfulness, and that they are, therefore, unworthy to rebuild the Temple. Perhaps a similar feeling, arising out of their disappointments, depressed the people. But Satan is rebuked, and the returned exiles are assured that their fears are groundless.

2. a brand plucked out of the fire. Something precious (in this case, the Returned Remnant of Israel) snatched from destruction.

3. filthy garments. Symbolizing the iniquities of the people that retard the completeness of the Redemption.

filthy garments from off him.' And unto him he said: 'Behold, I cause thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with robes.' 5. And I said: 'Let them set a fair mitre upon his head.' So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments; and the angel of the LORD stood by. 6. And the angel of the LORD forewarned Joshua, saying: 7. 'Thus saith the LORD of hosts: If thou wilt walk in My ways, and if thou wilt keep My charge, and wilt also judge My house, and wilt also keep My courts, then I will give thee free access among these that stand by. 8. Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou and thy fellows that sit before thee; for they are men that are a sign; for, behold, I will bring forth My servant the Shoot. 9. For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone are seven facets; behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts: And I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. 10. In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig-tree.'

6. forewarned. i.e. solemnly assured.

the Shoot. According to Rashi, Zechariah here means Zerubbabel, who as the civic leader will complete, with Joshua as the spiritual leader, the rehabilitated state. A comparison with vi, 12 supports this interpretation.

9. for behold the stone. The coping-stone of the Temple (see last verse of the Haftarah, 'top stone') which in this vision is set before Joshua to symbolize the certainty of the rebuilding.

upon one stone are seven facets. i.e. upon every stone in the Temple there shall be 'seven eyes', conveying the idea of the very special watchfulness and care that God will exercise over His house (Kimchi).

The same commentator quotes the interesting opinion of his father that in the number 'seven' we may see a reference to the seven great leaders of the period to whom the Jewish rebirth was due: Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zerubbabel, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi.

I will engrave the graving thereof. As the engraving completes and beautifies a work, so God assures the people that the Temple will be completed to every detail (Kimchi).

I will remove the iniquity of that land. Sin, the chief cause of sorrow and suffering, will be removed with the coming of the new Temple.

And I said: 'I have seen, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and its seven lamps thereon; there are seven pipes, yea, seven, to the lamps, which are upon the top thereof; 3. and two olive-trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.' 4. And I answered and spoke to the angel that spoke with me, saying: 'What are these, my lord?' 5. Then the angel that spoke with me answered and said unto me: 'Knowest thou not what these are?' And I said: 'No, my lord.' 6. Then he answered and spoke unto me, saying: 'This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying: Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the LORD of hosts. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain before Zerubbabel? thou shalt become a plain; and he shall bring forth the top stone with shoutings of Grace, grace, unto it.'

IV. SHELACH LECHA

(CHAPTERS XIII-XV)

THE SPIES AND THEIR REPORT

According to some scholars, the victory of the Israelites over the king of Arad in the extreme south of Canaan, recorded in XXI, 1-3, took place at this stage. The Israelites inflicted an annihilating defeat on the enemy, and called his territory Hormah, lit. 'utter destruction'. So striking had been their success, that Moses deemed the moment ripe for undertaking the conquest of the Holy Land from this advanced station of their march. As reported in Deut. i, 22, the Israelites then came to Moses, saying, 'Let us send men before us, that they may search the land for us.' And they would have succeeded in forcing their way into the heart of Canaan, if they had been animated by the high courage required for such an enterprise. This and the following chapter relate that such was far from being the case. Twelve men are sent to explore the land, and learn its character and that of the inhabitants. After forty days they return. The 'majority report,' which is entirely against the possibility of conquest, threatens to demoralize the people by fear.

The incident of the Spies is the turning-point in the lives of all those that had been born in slavery. By the cowardice and murmurings with which they receive the report of the Spies, they show themselves unfit for the tasks of a free nation. They must die in the Wilderness. During thirty-eight years of wandering, a new generation that knew not Egypt was to be reared, in hardship and freedom, for the conquest and possession of the Promised Land.

And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them: 'Get you up here into the South, and go up into the mountains; 18. and see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they are strong or weak, whether they are few or many; 19. and what the land is that they dwell in, whether it is good or bad; and what cities they are that they dwell in, whether in camps, or in strongholds; 20. and what the land is, whether it is fat or lean, whether there is wood therein, or not. And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land.'—Now the time was the time of the first-ripe grapes.*11.—21. So they went up, and spied out the land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, at the entrance to Hamath. 22. And they went up into the South, and came unto Hebron; and Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were there.—Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.—23. And they came unto the valley of Eshcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bore it upon a pole between two; they took also of the pomegranates, and of the figs.—24. That place was called the valley of ¹Eshcol, because of the cluster which the children of Israel cut down from thence.—25. And they returned from spying out the Hoshea signifies, 'He has helped.' Moses, by prefixing to it a letter of the Divine Name, changed it to Joshua, Heb. Yehoshua, i.e. 'He will help', at the same time indicating the Source of salvation. According to the Midrash, however, Moses here pronounced over Joshua the prayer, 'May God deliver thee from the counsel of the Spies.'

And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Paran, to Kadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and showed them the fruit of the land. 27. And they told him, and said: 'We came unto the land whither thou sentest us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it. 28. Howbeit the people that dwell in the land are fierce, and the cities are fortified, and very great; and moreover we saw the children of Anak there. 29. And Caleb stilled the people toward Moses, and said: 'We should go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it.' 31. But the men that went up with him said: 'We are not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we.' 32. And they spread an evil report of the land which they had spied out unto the children of Israel, saying: 'The land, through which we have passed to spy it out, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of great stature. 33. And there we saw the Nephilim, the sons of Anak, who come of the Nephilim; and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.'

26. Kadesh. Was for many years the seat of encampment for the tribes during the wanderings, and the starting-point for the final march into Canaan. It has been identified with the modern Ain Kadis ('Holy Spring'). 'Out from the barren and desolate stretch of the burning desert-waste we had come with magical suddenness into an oasis of verdure and beauty, unlooked for and hardly conceivable in such a region. Running water gurgled under the waving grass' (Trumbull).

28. howbeit. Now comes the announcement of the impossibility of its conquest.

30. Caleb stilled the people. In the next chapter (xiv, 6, 30), Joshua is associated with Caleb in his opposition to the ten faithless men. Being the attendant of Moses, he may have given place to Caleb as the one more likely to be listened to in the then temper of the people.

And Moses said unto the Lord: 'When the Egyptians shall hear—for Thou broughtest up this people in Thy might from among them—14. they will say to the inhabitants of this land, who have heard that Thou Lord art in the midst of this people; inasmuch as Thou Lord art seen face to face, and Thy cloud standeth over them, and Thou goest before them, in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night; 15. now if Thou shalt kill this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of Thee will speak, saying: 16. Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which He swore unto them, therefore He hath slain them in the wilderness. 17. And now, I pray Thee, let the power of the Lord be their defence. lit. 'their shadow'; a common metaphor of great significance in a hot country (McNeile).

The word לחם—('our bread') may refer to the manna, and לחם lit. 'their shadow' is removed from over them, to the melting of the manna at noonday (Exod. xvi, 21). The meaning of the passage would then be: 'Fear not the people of the land, for they are like the manna when the shadows pass, i.e. when the sun has come out. There is then no manna left. The Lord is with us: our enemies shall melt away—fear them not' (Ephraim Lenzic).

12. destroy them. The Heb. root has this meaning in Exod. xv, 9.

make of thee a nation. Moses would be a second Abraham, and thus the oath sworn to the Patriarchs that their seed should inherit the land would be fulfilled.

13. Egyptians shall hear. Moses, the faithful shepherd, leaves an unsurpassed example of self-denial to the children of men. He refuses a glorious future for himself and his descendants, solely because Israel would have no share in it. He begs God to spare His people out of regard for His own Honour. The nations would misunderstand the destruction of Israel, and attribute it to His want of power to lead them into the land He promised them.

17. let the power of the LORD be great. Show, in the sight of all the nations, the greatness of Thy power in forbearing with sinners and forgiving sin. 'In God's mercy is also revealed His power. He triumphs by His love and gentleness over the follies and frailties of men, and even in spite of themselves, they must at last fulfil the chosen and holy purposes of God' (Montefiore). Moses then pleads with God to spare His people out of regard for His own self-revealed Thirteen Attributes of Divine Mercy and Forgiveness, enumerated in Exod. xxxiv, 6-7 and reproduced here; see pp. 364-5. In Exod. God is spoken of as רחם רחם 27, 'abundant in goodness and truth,' to teach mortals that in our dealings with fellow mortals 'goodness' must precede 'truth'. Speak the truth to your fellow men by all means, but be quite sure that you speak it in love. Even more instructive is the wording in v. 18, רחם 27, 'plentiful in loving-

And wherefore doth the LORD bring us unto this land, to fall by the sword? Our wives and our little ones will be a prey; were it not better for us to return into Egypt?' 4. And they said one to another: 'Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.' 5. heighten the effect of their description of the invincibility of the sons of Anak (W. H. Green), so we were in their sight. Or, 'so must we have been in their sight.' Those who are in their own eyes as grasshoppers assume, and rightly so, that others have a similar estimate of them.

The spies traversed the entire land from south to north. The length of the Holy Land is about 180 miles, and its average breadth between the Mediterranean Sea and the River Jordan about 40 miles. The country may be regarded as consisting of three strips running north and south. There is (1) the Maritime Plain—extending inwards from the coast to a distance of from 4 to 15 miles. It is very fertile. It includes the famous Plain of Sharon and the Lowlands of the Philistines. (2) Behind this Maritime Plain, and parallel to it, rises the 'Hill Country', the backbone of the Holy Land. On the east, it falls precipitously down to (3) the Valley of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. Across these lie the Highlands of Gilead and Moab, the modern Transjordan.

In the monumental records, the country is called 'the land of the Canaanites', or the 'land of the Amorites', from which it may be inferred that these were the tribes originally inhabiting it. At a very early period the Hittites, who formed a powerful kingdom to the north, established themselves in Canaan. At the time of the Israelitish Conquest the land was inhabited by a mixture of tribes. Of these, the principal were the Canaanites (i.e. probably 'Lowlanders'), dwelling in the Maritime Plain and the Valley of the Jordan: the Hittites and the Jebusites

It was then decreed that the Temple be destroyed on this same day, the ninth day of Ab; so that it became forever a day of tears' (Talmud).

4. let us make a captain. Heb. וְנָסַח לָנוּ; also in Neh. ix, 17. Ehrlich is inclined to see in this phrase an idiomatic expression like לִיךְ לָנוּ, and he translates, 'let us set our mind to return to Egypt.'

And the LORD said: 'I have pardoned according to thy word. 21. But in very deed, as I live—and all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD—22. surely all those men that have seen My glory, and My signs, which I wrought in Egypt and in the wilderness, yet have put Me to proof these ten times, and have not hearkened to My voice; 23. surely they shall not see the land which I swore unto their fathers, neither shall any of them that despised Me see it. 24. But My servant Caleb, because he had another spirit with him, and hath followed Me fully, him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; and his seed shall possess it. 25. Now the Amalekite and the Canaanite dwell in the Vale; to-morrow turn ye, and get you into the wilderness by the way to the Red Sea.'*^{1v}. ¶ 26. And the LORD spoke unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying: 27. 'How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, that keep murmuring against Me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel, which they keep murmuring against Me. 28. Say unto them: As I live, saith the LORD, surely as ye have spoken in Mine ears, so will I do to you: 29. your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness, and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, ye that have murmured against Me; 30. surely ye shall not come into the land, concerning which I lifted up My hand that I would make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun. 31. But your little ones, that ye said would be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land which ye have rejected. 32. But as for you, your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness. 33. And your children shall be wanderers in the wilderness forty years, and shall bear your strayings, until your carcasses be consumed in the wilderness. 34. After the number of the days in which ye spied out the land, even forty days, for every day a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know My displeasure. 35. I the LORD have spoken, surely this will I do unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against Me; in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.' 36. And the men, whom Moses sent to spy out the land, and who, when they returned, made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing up an evil report against the land, 37. even those men that did bring up an evil report of the land, died by the plague before the LORD. 38. But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, remained alive of those men that went to spy out the land. 39. And Moses told these words unto all the children of Israel; and the people mourned greatly. 40. And they rose up early in the morning, and got them up to the top of the mountain, saying:

28. as ye have spoken. Your wish, expressed in the words 'Would we had died in this wilderness,' shall be fulfilled.

29. numbered of you. In the census detailed in Chap. I.

30. I lifted up My hand. 'I have taken an oath.'

33. bear your strayings. Although the children were to be spared the fate of their sinning parents, they would not altogether escape the consequences of that falling away from God. 'Strayings' is a departure from the RV, which gives the lit. translation of the Heb. זָנוּת, the metaphor of marital infidelity used in Scripture to express Israel's disloyalty to God through the worship of strange gods.

34. My displeasure. Or, 'the revoking of my promise' (RV Margin).

37. died by the plague. By a sudden visitation from God.

40-45. Instead of obeying the Divine injunction to turn southwards (v. 25), the people in self-willed defiance make a frantic effort to enter Canaan without delay.

40. the top of the mountain. Probably some mountain slope in the Negeb.

'Lo, we are here, and will go up unto the place which the LORD hath promised; for we have sinned.' 41. And Moses said: 'Wherefore now do ye transgress the commandment of the LORD, seeing it shall not prosper? 42. Go not up, for the LORD is not among you; that ye be not smitten down before your enemies. 43. For there the Amalekite and the Canaanite are before you, and ye shall fall by the sword; forasmuch as ye are turned back from following the LORD, and the LORD will not be with you.' 44. But they presumed to go up to the top of the mountain; nevertheless the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and Moses, departed not out of the camp. 45. Then the Amalekite and the Canaanite, who dwelt in that hill-country, came down, and smote them and beat them down, even unto Hormah.

CHAPTER XV

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying:
2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ When ye are come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you, 3. and will make an offering by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, or a sacrifice, in fulfilment of a vow clearly uttered, or as a freewill-offering, or in your appointed seasons, to make a sweet savour unto the LORD, of the herd, or of the flock; 4. then shall he that bringeth his offering present

41. wherefore now do ye transgress. Your enterprise is contrary to the will of God, nor does the Ark accompany you. The commandment of the LORD in v. 42 is given more fully in Deut. i, 42. 'Go not up, neither fight; for I am not among you; lest ye be smitten before your enemies.'

44. but they presumed. Their self-confidence rendered futile all the attempts of Moses to induce them to desist.

45. even unto Hormah. lit. 'unto the Hormah'. They suffer a crushing defeat and are driven back to the Hormah which they had only recently conquered. Their direct march northwards is now definitely barred. Henceforth they can enter Canaan only by passing through—and if that is impossible, around—the territories situated to the south and east of the Dead Sea, till they have arrived north of the Dead Sea and can cross the Jordan into Western Palestine. It will be some thirty-eight years before a fresh military enterprise is undertaken. 'In estimating the historical value of this story, we must remember that no nation gratuitously invents or accepts accounts of defeats it has never experienced. If Hebrew history tells us that the Israelites on attempting to enter the land they subsequently inhabited met with an overthrow so annihilating

CHAPTER XV

The priestly and ritual laws mentioned in this chapter seem to be supplementary to the sacrificial code of the Book of Leviticus. They were promulgated during the years of wandering in the desert.

1-16. MEAL OFFERINGS AND LIBATIONS

2. when ye are come into the land. These instructions, coming as they did immediately after the doom pronounced upon the generation in the Wilderness, were a welcome intimation that their children should possess the Land of Promise.

Or for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meal-offering two tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour mingled with the third part of a hin of oil; 7. and for the drink-offering thou shalt present the third part of a hin of wine, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.*v. 8. And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt-offering, or for a sacrifice, in fulfilment of a vow clearly uttered, or for peace-offerings unto the LORD; 9. then shall there be presented with the bullock a meal-offering of three tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour mingled with half a hin of oil. 10. And thou shalt present for the drink-offering half a hin of wine, for an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD. 11. Thus shall it be done for each bullock, or for each ram, or for each of the he-lambs, or of the kids. 12. According to the number that ye may prepare, so shall ye do for every one according to their number. 13. All that are home-born shall do these things after this manner, in presenting an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD. 14. And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever may be among you, throughout your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD; as ye do, so he shall do. 15. As for the congregation, there shall be one statute both for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you, a statute for ever throughout your generations; as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the LORD. 16. One law and one ordinance shall be both for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.*v1. ¶ 17. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 18. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ When ye come into the land whither I bring you, 19. then it shall be, that, when ye eat of the bread of the land,

xxv, 2. It is here used in a wide sense to mean a gift in general.

20. of the first of your dough. This offering is called חלה Challah. The Rabbis, however, laid it down that the dough in order to become subject to the law of Challah must consist of at least one omer of flour (about three quarts). The portion for Challah must be 1/24th of the dough of a private householder, and 1/48th of that of a baker.

as . . . of the threshing floor. This offering of bread from the home is as obligatory as the offering of grain from the threshing-floor at the annual harvest.

21. unto the LORD. i.e. unto the priest; 'ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, to cause a blessing to rest on thy house' (Ezek. XLIV, 30.)

According to v. 18, the law of Challah applied only to Palestine. But in order that this institution should not be forgotten, the Rabbis ordained that it remain in force beyond Palestine and for all time. It is still kept in observant Jewish households where bread is baked. The חלה is, however, thrown into the fire, and is not given to the 'priest', because Kohanim are to-day precluded from observing the laws of priestly purity, and hence are disqualified from eating anything that is in the nature of a holy sacrifice.

22-28. SIN-OFFERING FOR UNINTENTIONAL SINS

22. all these commandments. According to the Talmud, the reference in the present passage is to the sin of idolatry committed unintentionally. That sin, involving as it does apostasy from the fundamental doctrines of Judaism, is equivalent to breaking all the commandments of the Torah. Other commentators, like Nachmanides, are inclined to refer these words to any comprehensive breach of the ordinances of the Torah.

24. in error. Heb. בשגגה; opposed to sins committed in wilful defiance of God's commandments; see v. 30.

shall offer. The whole community is to bring a common sacrifice.

26. all the congregation shall be forgiven. This verse is solemnly recited thrice before the opening of the evening service on Kol Nidre night. And rightly so; because it may be said to be the keynote of the Day of Atonement and its message of forgiveness for all sins, and not only of involuntary transgressions. By the sincere repentance which Yom Kippur demands, the sinner shows that his wilful sins also were largely due to ignorance; and hence they are treated by God as if they were done 'in error' (בשגגה); see p. 484.

of all the people it was done in error.*vii. ¶ 27. And if one person sin through error, then he shall offer a she-goat of the first year for a sin-offering. 28. And the priest shall make atonement for the soul that erreth, when he sinneth through error, before the LORD, to make atonement for him; and he shall be forgiven, 29. both he that is home-born among the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them: he shall have one law for him that doeth aught in error. 30. But the soul that doeth aught with a high hand, whether he be home-born or a stranger, the same blasphemeth the LORD; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people. 31. Because he hath despised the word of the LORD, and hath broken His commandment; that soul shall utterly be cut off, his iniquity shall be upon him. ¶ 32. And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man gathering sticks upon the sabbath day. 33. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation. 34. And they put him in ward, because it had not been declared what should be done to him. 35. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'The man shall surely be put to death; all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp.' 36. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died, as the LORD commanded Moses.*m. ¶ 37. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 38. 'Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them through-and remember. The Tzitzis are to be a constant reminder to the Israelite of all his duties to God, and of the special relationship in which the Israelite stands to God, whose 'colours' he wore. The blue thread in the Tzitzis, say the Rabbis, resembles the sea, the sea resembles the heavens, and the heavens resemble the Throne of Glory. Thus, the outward act of looking upon the Tzitzis was to the Israelite an inward act of spiritual conformity with the precepts of God. It was such fine spiritualization of ceremonial that led to the beautiful verses of Psalm xxxvi ('How precious is Thy lovingkindness, O God, and the children of men take refuge in the shadow of Thy wings. For with Thee is the fountain of life; in Thy light do we see light') being recited by the worshipper on putting on the Tallis.

after your own heart. The heart and the eyes are the agents of Sin—the eye seeth, the heart desireth, and the person executeth (Talmud).

The true Israelite, however, arrayed in the sacred covering, reminding him of the Divine Presence, does not stray after the satisfaction of bodily pleasures; but is mindful that he is a member of a 'holy' People, dedicated unto God and holiness; see next v.

to go astray. See on xiv, 33.

40. and be holy unto your God. The aim of this precept is thus distinctly stated to be the furtherance of holiness in the life of the individual and the nation.

In later generations, the law of the fringes was carried out by means of the Arba Kanfos and the Tallis. The former is an undergarment consisting of a rectangular piece of cloth, about three feet long and one foot wide, with an aperture in the centre sufficient to let it pass over the head. To its four corners are fastened the Tzitzis.

The Tallis is a woollen or silken mantle worn over the garments during worship by day (except on the eve of Atonement, when it is put on some minutes before nightfall).

'By the thirteenth century it had become unusual for Jews to mark their ordinary outward garments by wearing fringes. But the fringed garment had become too deeply associated with Israel's religious life to be discarded entirely at the dictate of fashion in dress. Pope Innocent III in 1215 compelled the Jew to wear a degrading badge; the fringed garment became all the more an honourable uniform, marking at once God's love for Israel and Israel's determination to "remember to do all God's commandments and be holy unto his God"' (I. Abrahams).

CAP. II. ב

1. And Joshua the son of Nun sent out of Shittim two spies secretly, saying: 'Go view the land, and Jericho.' And they went, and came into the house of a harlot whose name was Rahab, and lay there. 2. And it was told the king of Jericho, saying: 'Behold, there came men in hither to-night of the children of Israel to search out the land.' 3. And the king of Jericho sent unto Rahab, saying: 'Bring forth the men that are come to thee, that are entered into thy house; for they are come to search out all the land.' 4. And the woman took the two men, and hid them; and she said: 'Yea, the men came unto me, but I knew not whence they were;

The Sedrah recounts the story of the twelve Spies sent by Moses to report on Canaan, Joshua himself being one of their number: the Haftorah tells us of the two men sent by Joshua on a similar errand to Jericho. But whereas the report of the former, with its fears and exaggerations, was followed by the tragic consequences of unbelief, the latter, with their inspiring declaration, 'The LORD hath delivered into our hands all the land,' thrilled the people with the assurance of victory that awaited them.

The Book of Joshua records the conquest of Canaan by Israel, the settlement of the Israelite tribes in the land, and the beginning of their consolidation into a nation. Joshua himself is one of the outstanding characters in Scripture; the faithful servant, the victorious soldier, the intrepid general, the wise ruler; and the man of deep faith and humility—his last addresses reviewing the past do not contain a word of his own achievements. The final words of his farewell exhortation to his people to stand firm in their allegiance to God are among the great utterances of history: 'Choose you this day whom ye will serve—but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD' (Joshua XXIV, 15).

secretly. i.e. unbeknown to the children of Israel, as Joshua fears a possible repetition of what took place in the Wilderness. It cannot refer to the inhabitants of Jericho; otherwise there was no need for Scripture to state it (Ehrlich). The Heb. root חרש also denotes earthenware; hence the Midrash paraphrases, 'disguised as potters, or sellers of earthenware.'

and Jericho, i.e. and particularly Jericho.

Jericho. Jericho was at least 1,000 years old when the Israelites prepared to attack this city that barred their route to the whole Western plateau. It was the gateway to the Promised Land, and its capture was of the greatest importance to the Israelites. Garstang's excavations in 1931 on the site of ancient Jericho make an epoch in Biblical studies. Among other results, he has now definitely fixed the date of the capture of Jericho as 1407, and therefore that of the Exodus as 1447 B.C.E.

Rahab. According to Rabbinical tradition, she became a sincere convert to the religion of Israel after the fall of Jericho.

2. of the children of Israel. The spies entered the city without at first attracting attention. The inhabitants were evidently accustomed to the passing to and fro of Bedouin and other visitors from beyond the Jordan.

3. the king of Jericho. Ever since the finding of the Tel-el Amarna tablets (discovered in Egypt in 1887) we have confirmation of the existence of local 'kings' in Canaanite cities of this period.

4. and hid them. lit. 'and hid him'; an idiomatic use of the singular for the plural to indicate that she hid each one separately. She was faithful to the Oriental conception of hospitality, which demands protection for the guest at whatever cost.

I knew not. i.e. when they came to me.

5. and it came to pass about the time of the shutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out; whither the men went I know not; pursue after them quickly; for ye shall overtake them.' 6. But she had brought them up to the roof, and hid them with the stalks of flax, which she had spread out upon the roof. 7. And the men pursued after them the way to the Jordan unto the fords; and as soon as they that pursued after them were gone out, the gate was shut. 8. And before they were laid down, she came up unto them upon the roof; 9. and she said unto the men: 'I know that the LORD hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land melt away before you. 10. For we have heard how the LORD dried up the water of the Red Sea before you, when ye came out of Egypt; and what ye did unto the two kings of the Amorites, that were beyond the Jordan, unto Sihon and to Og, whom ye utterly destroyed. 11. And as soon as we had heard it, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more spirit in any man, because of you; for the LORD your God, He is God in heaven above, and on earth beneath. 12. Now therefore, I pray you, swear unto me by the LORD, since I have dealt kindly with you, that ye also will deal kindly with my father's house—and give me a true token— 13. and save alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death.' 14. And the men said unto her: 'Our life for yours, if ye tell not this our business; and it shall be, when the LORD giveth us the land, that we will deal kindly and truly with thee.' 15. Then she let them down by a cord through the window; for her house was upon the side of the wall, and she dwelt upon the wall. 16. And she said unto them: 'Get you to the mountain, lest the pursuers

And the men said unto her: 'We will be guiltless of this thine oath which thou hast made us to swear. 18. Behold, when we come into the land, thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window which thou didst let us down by; and thou shalt gather unto thee into the house thy father, and thy mother, and thy brethren, and all thy father's household. 19. And it shall be, that whosoever shall go out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we will be guiltless; and whosoever shall be with thee in the house, his blood shall be on our head, if any hand be upon him. 20. But if thou utter this our business, then we will be guiltless of thine oath which thou hast made us to swear.' 21. And she said: 'According unto your words, so be it.' And she sent them away, and they departed; and she bound the scarlet line in the window. 22. And they went, and came unto the mountain, and abode there three days, until the pursuers were returned; and the pursuers sought them throughout all the way, but found them not. 23. Then the two men returned, and descended from the mountain, and passed over, and came to Joshua the son of Nun; and they told him all that had befallen them. 24. And they said unto Joshua: 'Truly the LORD hath delivered into our hands all the land; and moreover all the inhabitants of the land do melt away before us.'

V. KORACH

(CHAPTERS XVI-XVIII)

THE GREAT MUTINY

In the last Sedrah we had seen the people threatening to appoint a chieftain who was to take them back to Egypt. It was ominous of further serious revolt. When the rebellion broke out, it was widespread though not homogeneous. On the one hand, there were those who were discontented with the leadership of Moses. These were led by Dathan and Abiram, of the tribe of Reuben, the tribe that once possessed but had now lost the 'birthright' in Israel, and was, it seems, chafing for the recovery of that primacy. On the other hand, there were Korah—himself a Levite—and his followers, who were aggrieved with Aaron, to whose family all priestly privileges were now confined. These two groups of malcontents worked separately, and they were in the end cut off by entirely different acts of God (v. 32 and 35). Their punishment was signal, since the vindication of Moses and Aaron had to be complete. Otherwise, anarchy would soon have destroyed national unity; and, in its trail, there would have followed the total frustration of whatever Divine Mission was in store for Israel on the arena of history.

The general drift of the story of Korah and his companions is thus quite clear, though we cannot follow all the details. The unprejudiced student finds nothing improbable in the story of such a revolt; and he knows that if it did arise, it could only have taken place in the Desert. During that period alone, the tribes of Reuben and Levi marched side by side, their joint conspiracy growing out of their proximity to one another at that time. 'The two tribes afterwards became entirely parted asunder in their characters and fortunes; the one was incorporated into the innermost circle of the settled civilization of Palestine; the other hovered on the very outskirts of the Holy Land and Chosen People, and dwindled away into a Bedouin tribe. But the story of Korah belongs to a time when Levi was still fresh from the great crisis in Sinai, by which that tribe had been consecrated and divided from the rest; when the recollection of the birthright of Reuben still lingered in the minds of his descendants' (Stanley).

KORAH

The great Mutiny sank deep into the memory of after-generations in Israel. To the Rabbis, this whole movement, of which Korah was the principal spokesman, became typical of all controversies that had their origin in personal motives—'not in the Name of Heaven'—and that could not therefore lead to any beneficent results (Ethics of the Fathers, v. 20). In Rabbinic legend, Korah was consumed by jealousy of his kinsman Moses. 'He has passed me by in the appointment of all the high offices'—he is made to exclaim; 'therefore, I will stir up rebellion against him, and overthrow the institutions founded by him.' Korah—the Rabbis state—began by attempting to make Moses appear ridiculous in the eyes of the people. He had garments made entirely of blue wool for his two hundred and fifty men; and, thus arrayed, he and his company appeared before Moses and asked him whether these garments required fringes. Moses answered, 'Yes.' Korah replied: 'The blue wool of which the entire garment is made does not make it ritually correct; yet, according to your direction, four threads would!' Again he asked: Does a house filled with books of the Torah require a mezuzah? Moses answered, 'Yes.' Then Korah said: 'The presence of the whole Torah does not fulfil the command, yet thou sayest that the few verses thereof contained in the mezuzah do make the house fit for human habitation!'

Then Korah undertook to show that the laws instituted by Moses were hard beyond endurance. He told the following parable: 'A poor widow had a field. When she came to plough it, Moses forbade her to plough it with an ox and an ass together; when she began to sow, Moses forbade her to sow it with mingled seeds. At the time of the harvest, Moses ordered her to leave unreaped the corners of the field and not to gather up the gleanings, but to leave them for the poor. He furthermore demanded the heave-offering for the priests, and the tithe for the Levites. The woman sold the field and purchased ewes, in the hope that she might live undisturbed. However, when the firstling of the sheep was born, Aaron appeared and demanded it as his due. At shearing-time Aaron reappeared and demanded "the first of the fleece of the sheep", which, according to Moses' Law, was his. He reappeared again and again with new demands, till the long-suffering woman slaughtered the sheep, and in her anger consecrated it to the Sanctuary. Thereupon it all fell to Aaron.' 'Such men,' Korah concluded, 'are Moses and Aaron!'

In brief, Korah was a demagogue, and recoiled from no weapon that would discredit Moses. Perhaps the best judgment on the man and the Cause he sought to destroy is contained in the following curious rabbinic legend. Rabbah bar Bar Chanah—the Munchausen of the Talmud—narrates that, while he was travelling in the desert, an Arab showed him the place where Korah and his companions had been engulfed. There was at the spot a crack in the ground, and on putting his ear to the crack he heard voices cry, 'Moses and his Torah are true, and we are liars.'

1. Now Korah, the son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, with Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, and On, the son of Peleth, sons of Reuben, took men; 2. and they rose up in face of Moses, with certain of the children of Israel, two hundred and fifty men; they were princes of the congregation, the elect men of the assembly, men of renown; 3. and they assembled themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them: 'Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the LORD is among them; wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the assembly of the LORD?' 4. And when Moses heard it, he fell upon his face. 5. And he spoke unto Korah and unto all his company, saying: 'In the morning the LORD will show who are His, and who is holy, and will cause him to come near unto Him; even him whom He may choose will He cause to come near unto Him. 6. This do:

V. KORACH

(CHAPTERS XVI-XVIII)

CHAPTER XVI

1-15. REBELLION OF KORAH, DATHAN, ABIRAM, AND ON

1. now Korah . . . took men. In the Heb. Text, took is not followed by an object. Most versions follow Ibn Ezra and supply the word 'men'.

sons of Izhar, the son of Kohath. Korah was thus cousin to Moses and Aaron.

with Dathan and Abiram. They were leading men in the tribe of Reuben, who could not forget that theirs was the eldest tribe and from it—they held—should the rulers of Israel be recruited. The men of Levi and Reuben came to join hands—the Rabbis say—because they always marched next each other (ii, 16, 17; x, 18, 21), illustrating the old proverb, 'Woe to the wicked, woe to his neighbour.'

On, the son of Peleth. He is not mentioned again either in this chapter or elsewhere. Legend represents him as saved from destruction by his wife. 'When On told his wife that he had joined Korah's rebellion, she said to him, "What benefit shalt thou reap from it? Either Moses remains master and thou art his follower, or Korah becomes master and thou art his follower." It was Korah's wife who through her inciting words plunged her husband into destruction, and it was to his wife that On owed his salvation; as it is written in the Book of Proverbs, every wise woman buildeth her house; but the foolish plucketh it down with her own hands' (Midrash).

2. of the congregation. Hailing not from one tribe only, but from all Israel, summoned for consultation as need arose.

men of renown. Distinguished and influential men.

3. all the congregation are holy. With the instinct of the true demagogue, Korah posed as the champion of the People against the alleged dictatorship of Moses and Aaron, the two brothers who usurped all power and authority in Israel.

4. he fell upon his face. Either an expression of despair at this sinful rebellion, or of prayer for guidance; v. 22.

5. who are His . . . holy. God will reveal which tribe He has chosen to be nearest unto Him, and who in that chosen tribe is fitted to be High Priest.

6. take you censers. Moses here addresses Korah and those Levites who were envious of the higher privileges of the priesthood. He challenges them to test their claims to equality with Aaron by undergoing a species of ordeal. They are to assume, for once, the functions of priesthood, and God would show whether or not He approved of such assumption.

take you censers, Korah, and all his company; 7. and put fire therein, and put incense upon them before the LORD to-morrow; and it shall be that the man whom the LORD doth choose, he shall be holy; ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi.' 8. And Moses said unto Korah: 'Hear now, ye sons of Levi: 9. is it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to Himself, to do the service of the tabernacle of the LORD, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them; 10. and that He hath brought thee near, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee? and will ye seek the priesthood also? 11. Therefore thou and all thy company that are gathered together against the LORD—; and as to Aaron, what is he that ye murmur against him?' 12. And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab; and they said: 'We will not come up; 13. is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land flowing with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, but thou must needs make thyself also a prince over us?'*¹¹. 14. Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land flowing with milk and honey, nor given us inheritance of fields and vineyards; wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will not come up.' 15. And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the LORD: 'Respect not Thou their offering; I have

11. v. תלינו ק'

7. ye take too much upon you. Indignantly he retorts upon the rebels in their own words.

8–11. Moses upbraids Korah and the Levites for their discontent with the position already assigned to them.

8. unto Korah. While Moses deals with Korah and his group, Dathan and Abiram stand in the background with their grievance; v. 12.

11. that ye murmur against him. Aaron was not self-appointed. God Himself had called him to his office, and his duties and privileges were duly assigned to him. As a result of this appeal by Moses, some of the Levites—the children of Korah among them—seem to have been detached from the body of rebels. Furthermore, we learn from I Chronicles vi, 22, that in the line of Korah's descendants appeared leaders of sacred song. Several of the Psalms are attributed to the 'Sons of Korah'. See on xxvi, 11.

12–15. Dathan and Abiram contemptuously refuse Moses' summons to attend before him, accuse him of misleading the people, and charge him with playing the prince over the People on the strength of promises he cannot fulfil.

13. a land flowing with milk and honey. Insolently—and ironically—they apply to Egypt the very words by which Moses described the Promised Land.

14. not brought us. Probably a satiric reference to the disaster that overtook the Israelites when, despite the warning of Moses, they attempted to enter Canaan, recorded in xiv, 45. Wickedly Dathan and Abiram now by insinuation shift the blame for that disaster on Moses! (Wiener).

put out the eyes. Are you trying to blind us to the true facts?

not taken one ass. 'They accuse me of tyranny. But I have never so far abused my power and position as to accept even the meanest gift from any one of them!' In I Sam. viii, 11–17, we read what an autocrat of early times had it in his power to do.

not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.' 16. And Moses said unto Korah: 'Be thou and all thy congregation before the LORD, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow; 17. and take ye every man his fire-pan, and put incense upon them, and bring ye before the LORD every man his fire-pan, two hundred and fifty fire-pans; thou also, and Aaron, each his fire-pan.' 18. And they took every man his fire-pan, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood at the door of the tent of meeting with Moses and Aaron. 19. And Korah assembled all the congregation against them unto the door of the tent of meeting; and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the congregation. *III. ¶ 20. And the LORD spoke unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying: 21. 'Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.' 22. And they fell upon their faces, and said: 'O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt Thou be wroth with all the congregation?' ¶ 23. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 24. 'Speak unto the congregation, saying: Get you up from about the dwelling of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.' 25. And Moses rose up and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Israel followed him. 26. And he spoke unto the congregation, saying: 'Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be swept away in all their sins.' 27. So they got them up from the dwelling of

16-19. KORAH AND HIS COMPANY ACCEPT MOSES' CHALLENGE

16. Moses said unto Korah. To be ready on the morrow and put his claim to the test.

19. assembled all the congregation. The rebellion was indeed a serious matter. Korah's demagoguery, in addition to his rallying round him the ambitious leaders, had won over to his banner large sections in all the tribes.

20-24. MOSES' INTERCESSION

21. from among this congregation. As the whole congregation, favouring Korah, had rendered itself worthy of extermination.

22. God of the spirits of all flesh. He who made all hearts can be trusted to distinguish between the guilty and those misled by the guilty.

shall one man sin. Korah, the chief instigator who leads the masses astray; cf. Gen. xviii, 25 ('That be far from Thee . . . to slay the righteous with the wicked, that so the righteous should be as the wicked; that be far from Thee: shall not the Judge of all the earth do justly?').

wroth with all the congregation. The dupes of that one man and his misguided confederates.

25-34. DESTRUCTION OF THE REBELS

Nothing could now have prevented the complete disintegration of the People save the destruction of the instigators of the sedition. That destruction, moreover, had to be in so striking a way that it would clearly reveal the Divine purpose.

25. the elders of Israel. Ibn Ezra suggests that these were the 70 elders who, according to xi, 16, 17, were to assist Moses in bearing the burden of the people. These remain loyal during the upheaval.

26. in all their sins. On account of the great multitude of their sins.

27. Dathan and Abiram . . . stood at the door. With a brazen mien, reviling and blaspheming God (Rashi).

Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side; and Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood at the door of their tents, with their wives, and their sons, and their little ones. 28. And Moses said: 'Hereby ye shall know that the LORD hath sent me to do all these works, and that I have not done them of mine own mind. 29. If these men die the common death of all men, and be visited after the visitation of all men, then the LORD hath not sent me. 30. But if the LORD make a new thing, and the ground open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down alive into the pit, then ye shall understand that these men have despised the LORD.' 31. And it came to pass, as he made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground did cleave asunder that was under them. 32. And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their households, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods. 33. So they, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit; and the earth closed upon them, and they perished from among the assembly. 34. And all Israel that were round about them fled at the cry of them; for they said: 'Lest the earth swallow us up.' 35. And fire came forth from the LORD, and devoured the two hundred and fifty men that offered the incense.

And Eleazar the priest took the brazen fire-pans, which they that were burnt had offered; and they beat them out for a covering of the altar, 5. to be a memorial unto the children of Israel, to the end that no common man, that is not of the seed of Aaron, draw near to burn incense before the LORD; that he fare not as Korah, and as his company; as the LORD spoke unto him by the hand of Moses. ¶ 6. But on the morrow all the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying: 'Ye have killed the people of the LORD.' 7. And it came to pass, when the congregation was assembled against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the tent of meeting; and, behold, the cloud covered it, and the glory of the LORD appeared. 8. And Moses and Aaron came to the front of the tent of meeting. *iv. 9. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 10. 'Get you up from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.' And they fell upon their faces. 11. And Moses said unto Aaron: 'Take thy fire-pan, and put fire therein from off the altar, and lay incense thereon, and carry it quickly unto the congregation, and make atonement for them; for there is wrath gone out from the LORD: the plague is begun.' 12. And Aaron took as Moses 6-15. The disaffection had spread so far that many of the people resented the death of Korah and his followers, and held Moses responsible for it. This further shows that the complete suppression of the rebellion was a question of To be or not to be for Israel. The people are visited by an outbreak of plague.

spoke, and ran into the midst of the assembly; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people; and he put on the incense, and made atonement for the people. 13. And he stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed. 14. Now they that died by the plague were fourteen thousand and seven hundred, besides them that died about the matter of Korah. 15. And Aaron returned unto Moses unto the door of the tent of meeting, and the plague was stayed.*v. ¶ 16. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 17. 'Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of them rods, one for each fathers' house, of all their princes according to their fathers' houses, twelve rods; thou shalt write every man's name upon his rod. 18. And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi, for there shall be one rod for the head of their fathers' houses. 19. And thou shalt lay them up in the tent of meeting before the testimony, where I meet with you. 20. And it shall come to pass, that the man whom I shall choose, his rod shall bud; and I will make to cease from Me the murmurings of the children of Israel, which they murmur against you.' 21. And Moses spoke unto the children of Israel; and all their princes gave him rods, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods; and the rod of Aaron was among their rods. 22. And Moses laid up the rods before the LORD in the tent of the testimony. 23. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses went into the tent of the testimony; and, behold, the rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and put forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and bore ripe almonds. 24. And Moses brought out all the rods from before the LORD unto all the children of Israel; and they looked, and took every man his rod.*vi.

13. between the dead and the living. Aaron hastens and takes up a position in front of Wrath. All behind have died: those in front have not been touched; they are living. Thus it is that Aaron stands between the living and the dead, and stays the plague.

16-28. VINDICATION OF AARON

Moses deposits twelve wands for each of the twelve tribes, and an additional rod inscribed with the name of Aaron as head of the tribe of Levi. Ibn Ezra suggests that as the two tribes of the children of Joseph (Ephraim and Manasseh) were reckoned together (Deut. xxvii, 12), the total number of the rods did not exceed twelve. Next morning, Aaron's rod had budded and brought forth fruit, confirming the Divine choice of Levi. Henceforth, Aaron's right to the priesthood is unchallenged.

17. rods. Ordinarily carried by the princes as the symbol of tribal authority.

princes. Those named in chapters ii and vii.

18. Aaron's name. To indicate that God had appointed Aaron to be the prince of his tribe.

19. before the testimony. i.e. in front of the Ark that contained the two Tables of the Testimony.

20. I shall choose. For the special duties and privileges of the priesthood.

24. and they looked. Here was indeed Divine confirmation of the High Priesthood of Aaron.

¶ 25. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Put back the rod of Aaron before the testimony, to be kept there, for a token against the rebellious children; that there may be made an end of their murmurings against Me, that they die not.' 26. Thus did Moses; as the LORD commanded him, so did he. ¶ 27. And the children of Israel spoke unto Moses, saying: 'Behold, we perish, we are undone, we are all undone. 28. Every one that cometh near, that cometh near unto the tabernacle of the LORD, is to die; shall we wholly perish?'

CHAPTER XVIII

1. And the LORD said unto Aaron: 'Thou and thy sons and thy fathers' house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary; and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood. 2. And thy brethren also, the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou near with thee, that they may be joined unto thee, and minister unto thee, thou and thy sons with thee being before the tent of the testimony. 3. And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the Tent; only they shall not come nigh unto the holy furniture and unto the altar, that they die not, neither they, nor ye. 4. And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tent of meeting, whatsoever the service of the Tent may be; but a

27. behold, we perish. This and v. 28 form a transition to the next chapter, in which the Levites guard the Tent, lest any layman should perish by approaching it.

we are undone. A despairing outburst on the part of defeated and disheartened men. Korah, Dathan and Abiram and their company had perished, and furthermore a plague had swept away several thousands of the people. It looked as if the end had come to all!

28. shall we wholly perish? Better, shall we ever have finished dying?; 'have we not yet done expiring?' (Benisch). It was in response to this agonizing cry that Aaron and the Levites were bidden in XVIII to guard the Sanctuary against the approach of any 'stranger'.

For the tithe of the children of Israel, which they set apart as a gift unto the LORD, I have given to the Levites for an inheritance; therefore I have said unto them: Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.' ¶ 25. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 26. 'Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them: When ye take of the children of Israel the tithe which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall set apart of it a gift for the LORD, even a tithe of the tithe. 27. And the gift which ye set apart shall be reckoned unto you, as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the winepress. 28. Thus ye also shall set apart a gift unto the LORD of all your tithes, which ye receive of the children of Israel; and thereof ye shall give the gift which is set apart unto the LORD to Aaron the priest. 29. Out of all that is given you ye shall set apart all of that which is due unto the LORD, of all the best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof out of it.*m. 30. Therefore thou shalt say unto them: When ye set apart the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the threshing-floor, and as the increase of the winepress. 31. And ye may eat it in every place, ye and your households; for it is your reward in return for your service in the tent of meeting. 32. And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, seeing that ye have set apart from it the best thereof; and ye shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, that ye die not.'

24. no inheritance. Like the priests, they had no separate territory allotted to them. Their possessions consisted of 48 cities 'with the open land about them'; see xxxv, 7.

25-32. THE DUES OF THE PRIESTS FROM THE LEVITES

The Levites were to contribute to the priests a tithe of that which they had received from the people.

27. the corn of the threshing-floor. This tithe by you to the priests shall be regarded as though it were direct from your threshing-floor and winepress.

CAP. XI. יא

14. Then said Samuel to the people: 'Come and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there.' 15. And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king before the LORD in Gilgal; and there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings before the LORD; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced greatly.

CHAPTER XII

1. And Samuel said unto all Israel: 'Behold, I have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye said unto me, and have made a king over you. 2. And now, behold, the king walketh before you; and I am old and grey-headed; and, behold, my sons are with you; and I have walked before you from my youth unto this day. 3. Here I am; witness against me before the LORD, and before His anointed: whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? or whom have I op-

In the Sedrah, Korah and his associates complained unjustly of the rule of Moses: in the Haftorah, the people displayed ingratitude towards their devoted leader, Samuel, and clamoured for a king to take his place. Both Moses and Samuel protest their utter disinterestedness in the service of the people.

Samuel was the last and greatest of the Judges. The task he was called upon to accomplish was one of extraordinary difficulty. Moses created the nation: it had disintegrated in the wild, anarchic times of the Judges. Samuel had to re-create it, and rebuild it out of ruins. He found a loosely-knit body of tribes and left them a united people. Although himself opposed to monarchy, he made a national monarchy possible. But at the foundation of it, he laid firmly the Biblical conception of the responsibility of the ruler to God. This is one of the main differences between Israel and the other Eastern nations of antiquity. Whereas in Babylon, e.g., a limited monarchy would have been deemed a contradiction in terms, in Israel it is the people that is in possession of sovereign rights, and the king is under the law. The Jewish king was bound to respect the liberty, honour, and the property of his subjects, and his powers were strictly limited by the fundamental laws of the Torah (Deut. xvii, 14-20). Prophets, psalmists, and sages all conceived of the king as a shepherd of his people, whose sceptre should be a sceptre of peace, pity, and righteousness.

14-15. RECOGNIZING SAUL AS KING

14. Gilgal. Near Jericho. It already had sacred associations. It was the place of Israel's first encampment on crossing into the Holy Land to renew the kingdom there. This sacred place Samuel chose for the solemn consecration of Saul. Saul had proved his worthiness for the kingship, and the people were unanimous in accepting him as their ruler. They solemnly ratified the election by offering public sacrifices to God.

CHAPTER XII. SAMUEL'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Samuel, though he was still to retain his authority as Prophet, now resigned his office as Judge, and in doing so delivers a Farewell Address. The aged Prophet challenges the assembled people to impeach his official integrity; upbraids them with unbelief and ingratitude in demanding a king; and ends by consoling the people that God will not abandon Israel for His great Name's sake.

And they said: 'Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand.' 5. And he said unto them: 'The LORD is witness against you, and His anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found aught in my hand.' And they said: 'He is witness.' ¶ 6. And Samuel said unto the people: 'It is the LORD that made Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt. 7. Now therefore stand still, that I may plead with you before the LORD concerning all the righteous acts of the LORD, which He did to you and to your fathers. 8. When Jacob was come into Egypt, then your fathers cried unto the LORD, and the LORD sent Moses and Aaron, who brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and they were made to dwell in this place. 9. But they forgot the LORD their God, and He gave them over into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor, and into the hand of the Philistines, and into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them. 10. And they cried unto the LORD, and said: We have sinned, because we have forsaken the LORD, and have served the Baalim and the Ashtaroth; but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve Thee. 11. And the LORD sent Jerubbaal, and Bedan, and Jephthah, and Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every side, and ye dwelt in safety. 12. And when ye saw that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon came against you, ye said unto

5. and they said. The Heb. is in the singular, emphasizing the unanimity of the people's endorsement. Hence the tradition that a Heavenly Voice, Bath Kol, uttered these words, 'He, the LORD, is witness to Samuel's purity in regard to all matters hidden from man, even as you are testifying to his purity in regard to known things.'

The mention of Jephthah's name alongside of Samuel's gave rise to the Rabbinic saying that even the meanest person invested with authority must be treated with the respect that would be accorded to the worthiest occupant of that office: יפתח בדורו כשמואל בדורו 'Jephthah in his generation is like Samuel in his generation.'

Now therefore behold the king whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have asked for; and, behold, the LORD hath set a king over you. 14. If ye will fear the LORD, and serve Him, and hearken unto His voice, and not rebel against the commandment of the LORD, and both ye and also the king that reigneth over you be followers of the LORD your God—; 15. but if ye will not hearken unto the voice of the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD, then shall the hand of the LORD be against you, and against your fathers. 16. Now therefore stand still and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes. 17. Is it not wheat harvest to-day? I will call unto the LORD, that He may send thunder and rain; and ye shall know and see that your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king.' 18. So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD sent thunder and rain that day; and all the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel. 19. And all the people said unto Samuel: 'Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not; for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.' 20. And Samuel said unto the people: 'Fear not; ye have indeed done all this evil; yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart; 21. and turn ye not aside; for then should ye go after vain things which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain. 22. (CHAPTERS XIX-XXII, 1)

CHAPTER XIX. THE RED HEIFER

The law set forth in this chapter belongs to the group of commandments dealt with in Lev. XII-XV; see the introductory note, 'Laws of Purification,' p. 459.

It provides for the removal of defilement resulting from contact with the dead. A red heifer, free from blemish and one that had not yet been broken to the yoke, was to be slain outside the camp. It was then to be burned, cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet being cast upon the pyre. The gathered ashes, dissolved in fresh water, were to be sprinkled on those who had become contaminated through contact with a dead body.

This ordinance is the most mysterious rite in Scripture, the strange features of which are duly enumerated by the Rabbis. Thus, its aim was to purify the defiled, and yet it defiled all those who were in any way connected with the preparation of the ashes and water of purification. 'It purifies the impure, and at the same time renders impure the pure!' So inscrutable was its nature—they said—that even King Solomon in his wisdom despaired of learning the secret meaning of the Red Heifer regulations. To a high-placed Roman questioner, who expressed his amazement at the procedure in connection with the Red Heifer, Johanan ben Zakkai replied by referring him to a Pagan analogy: 'Just as a person afflicted by melancholy or possessed of an "evil spirit" is freed of his disease by taking certain medicines or by the burning of certain roots, in the same manner the ashes of the Red Heifer, prepared in the prescribed way and dissolved in water, drive away the "unclean spirit" of defilement resulting from contact with the dead.' The Roman was satisfied with the answer, and went his way. Thereupon the pupils of Johanan said to him: 'That man's attack thou hast warded off with a broken reed, but what answer hast thou for us?' 'By your lives,' said the Master, 'the dead man doth not make impure, neither do the ashes dissolved in water make pure: but the law concerning the Red Heifer is a decree of the All-holy, Whose reasons for issuing that decree it behoves not mortals to question.' In brief, the attitude of Judaism as to the meaning of this law is not merely a confession of ignorance, but the realization that we shall never know why such defilement should be removed in that specified manner ('ignorabimus').

Nevertheless there have been many attempts at explanation, at any rate of symbolization, of this law both by Jews and non-Jews. One of them is: The majestic cedar of Lebanon represents pride, and hyssop represents humility; uncleanness and sin and death are all associated ideas: the ceremony, therefore, is a powerful object-lesson, teaching the eternal truth that a holy God can be served only by a holy People.

2. statute of the law. Heb. חקת התורה. The word 'statute' is used in connection with all laws and ordinances whose reason is not disclosed to us; see p. 95. 'Because Satan and the heathens taunt Israel with this and similar commandments, Scripture uses in this connection the term חקת "statute", implying, "It is a decree from before Me, and you are not at liberty to cavil at My decrees"' (Rashi). This law served the generations in Israel as a pure instance of absolute obedience to the decrees of God.

red heifer. Heb. parah adumah; a young cow, not a calf or a full-grown cow. The early Jewish conception was that the sacrifice of the red heifer was an expiatory rite to atone for the sin of the Golden Calf תבא פרה ותכפר על מעשה העגל.

faultless. Faultlessly red; two hairs of another colour on its body were sufficient to disqualify it.

no blemish. Such as blindness and others referred to in Lev. XXII, 22-4, as rendering an animal unfit for sacrifice.

upon which never came yoke. A 'virgin' animal in the sense of never having been used for secular purposes.

3. unto Eleazar. 'As Aaron had made the Golden Calf, this rite was not to be carried out by him, because the prosecuting counsel cannot become the defending counsel'; i.e. Aaron, who had caused the sin, was not the fitting person

And the heifer shall be burnt in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall be burnt. 6. And the priest shall take cedar-wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer. 7. Then the priest shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he may come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even. 8. And he that burneth her shall wash his clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even. 9. And a man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place, and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel for a water of sprinkling; it is a purification from sin. 10. And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even; and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for a statute for ever. 11. He that toucheth the dead, even any man's dead body, shall be unclean seven days; purification from sin. Something that removes sin. The ashes of the heifer shall be a medium for the purification from sin; cf. 'water of purification', in viii, 7.

10. shall . . . be unclean. Everyone, priest or layman, who had something to do with the preparation of this water of purification became unclean.

A word must be said on the paradox of the parah adumah אֶת הַטָּמֵא וְטָמֵא אֶת הַטָּהוֹרִים, i.e. the simultaneous possession of sanctification and defilement. There have been great institutions and movements, in both Jewish and general history, that have sanctified others, and yet have at the same time tended to defile those that created or directed those institutions and movements. The very men who helped others to self-sacrifice and holiness, not infrequently themselves became hard and self-centred, hating and hateful; elevating others, and themselves sinking into inhumanity, impurity, and unholiness. It is a real, if disturbing, fact in the spiritual life of man.

the stranger that sojourneth among them. i.e. the proselyte who assumes the religious duties of Israel.

11-13. THE SPECIFIC PURPOSE OF THE WATER FOR PURIFICATION

11. even any man. Israelite or non-Israelite.

12. the same shall purify himself therewith on the third day and on the seventh day, and he shall be clean; but if he purify not himself the third day and the seventh day, he shall not be clean. 13. Whosoever toucheth the dead, even the body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himself—he hath defiled the tabernacle of the LORD—that soul shall be cut off from Israel; because the water of sprinkling was not dashed against him, he shall be unclean; his uncleanness is yet upon him. 14. This is the law: when a man dieth in a tent, every one that cometh into the tent, and every thing that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days. 15. And every open vessel, which hath no covering close-bound upon it, is unclean. 16. And whosoever in the open field toucheth one that is slain with a sword, or one that dieth of himself, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days. 17. And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the purification from sin, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel.*ii. 18. And a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched the bone, or the slain, or the dead, or the grave. 19. And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day; and on the seventh day he shall purify him; and he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean at even. 20. But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, because he hath that toucheth him. i.e. the person that has any contact with the person mentioned in the foregoing clause. This is a departure from the RV, which has 'that toucheth it'. According to the Rabbis, contact with a corpse is the primary source of ritual impurity (אבי אבות הטומאה). He that has contact with the person thus contaminated becomes a secondary source of impurity (אב הטומאה), which in diminishing intensity is transmitted to food and liquids.

until even. When he becomes 'clean', having bathed his body.

According to the Mishna, the ceremonial of the burning of a Red Heifer was enacted seven times; once by Moses, once by Ezra, and five times after Ezra. It naturally disappeared from Jewish life with the Destruction of the Temple.

Chapter XIX forms the reading for Sabbath Parah, one of the so-called four Extraordinary Sabbaths, on the fast Sabbath but one in Adar; or on the last, if the first day of Nisan falls on a Saturday. The reading is to commemorate the purification of the unclean by sprinkling them with the 'water of separation', so that they may be enabled to bring the Passover sacrifice in a state of purity. The Haftorah on Sabbath Parah is Ezek. xxxvi, 16-38, see p. 961.

CHAPTER XX

This chapter is, chronologically, the sequel of xiv, where it is related that the Israelites were condemned to wander forty years, and were foiled in an unauthorized attempt to enter Canaan from the south (xiv, 40-5). The events narrated in the present chapter belong to the last, the fortieth, year of the wanderings. As Ibn Ezra correctly points out, the history of the preceding thirty-eight years is a blank page in the Book of Numbers. And the reason is not far to seek. The men of that generation had been found wanting, and condemned to a dying life in the wilderness. Their story was, therefore, of no further spiritual value to the Israel of the future. And yet, 'the ages of silence in the history of the Hebrews were generally ages of growth. These thirty-eight almost uneventful years are one of those numerous gaps in the nation's history, during which real progress was made. From them Israel emerged transformed from a fugitive body of slaves into a nation; and it is an evidence of the greatness of the character of Moses, that he knew how to wait in silence, till his people were ready to advance to conquest in obedience to God's command' (Foakes-Jackson).

XX, 1. DEATH OF MIRIAM

1. into the wilderness of Zin. This, the third and last stage of the journey from Sinai to the Promised Land, started at Kadesh, was continued round the land of Edom (xxi, 4), and ended at the heights of Pisgah in the country of Moab, near the Dead Sea and the fords of the Jordan.

in the first month. Of the fortieth year of wandering.

Kadesh. See on xiii, 26.

Miriam died there. She died towards the end of the desert wanderings, and like her brothers did not reach the Promised Land. She is spoken of as one of the three good leaders of Israel (פרנסים טובים); and to her merit was due the Well, which, according to the legend, accompanied the children of Israel as long as she lived.

2-23. STRIKING OF THE ROCK. SIN OF MOSES AND AARON

Over and over again Scripture brings out, on the one hand, the fickleness of the people—their murmurings, mutinies, vehement repentance, and woeful self-assertion; and, on the other ness of Zin in the first month; and the people abode in Kadesh; and Miriam died there, and was buried there. 2. And there was no water for the congregation; and they assembled themselves together against Moses and against Aaron. 3. And the people strove with Moses, and spoke, saying: 'Would that we had perished when our brethren perished before the LORD! 4. And why have ye brought the assembly of the LORD into this wilderness, to die there, we and our cattle? 5. And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us unto this evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink.' 6. And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly unto the door of the tent of meeting, and fell upon their faces; and the glory of the LORD appeared unto them. *iii (ii). 7. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 8. 'Take the rod, and assemble the congregation, thou, and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes, that it give forth its water; and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock; so thou shalt give the congregation and their cattle drink.' 9. And Moses took the rod from before the LORD, as He commanded him. 10. And Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly together before the rock, and he said unto them: 'Hear now, ye rebels; hand, the marvellous constancy of Moses—his humility, faithfulness, generosity, and his sublime patience. Once only was his mighty spirit unable to stand the strain. The meaning of 'ye believed not in Me' (v. 12) does not make it quite clear whether the sin was a momentary presumptuousness, or disobedience to a Divine command. It is but a single blot in his career, and in any other man would have been unnoticed. 'Judaism teaches that the greater the man, the stricter the standard by which he is judged and the greater the consequent guilt and punishment, if there is a falling away from that standard' (S. R. Hirsch). For this sin, recorded in this chapter, Moses forfeits his right to enter the Promised Land.

3. when our brethren perished. In the revolt of Korah, or at other occasions of 'murmuring'.

4. and our cattle. "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast"; and the fact that these people, so near death, still considered the sufferings of their beasts, shows that they were, notwithstanding their attitude towards Moses and Aaron, really pious men. And in truth God did not take amiss their words against Moses and Aaron, for God holds no one responsible for words uttered in distress' (Midrash).

6. went from the presence of the assembly.

Abarbanel and other commentators understand this in the sense of fleeing from before the assembly, and see in this action the lack of faith for which Moses and Aaron were condemned.

8. take the rod. With which the miracles had been wrought in Egypt and the rock at Rephidim had been smitten, when likewise the people strove with Moses; Exod. xvii, 4 ('what shall I do unto this people? they are almost ready to stone me').

unto the rock. i.e. the first rock in front of them, and standing in their sight (Nachmanides).

9. took . . . the LORD. It had been deposited in the Tabernacle.

10. ye rebels. Heb. morim; the Midrash connects it with the Greek word for 'fools', and also with the Heb. word for 'teacher', and renders it, 'Hear now, ye who presume to teach your teachers'; i.e. ye who imagine yourselves to be wiser than your leaders! 'This impatience with the people was considered reprehensible in Divinely appointed leaders' (Maimonides).

shall we bring you forth. i.e. can we bring forth water out of this rock? In that moment of irritation and gloom, Moses gives expression to doubt in front of the masses as to the fulfilment of God's promise.

are we to bring you forth water out of this rock?" 11. And Moses lifted up his hand, and smote the rock with his rod twice; and water came forth abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their cattle. 12. And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron: 'Because ye believed not in Me, to sanctify Me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this assembly into the land which I have given them.' 13. These are the waters of ¹Meribah, where the children of Israel strove with the LORD, and He was sanctified in them.*iv. ¶ 14. And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom: 'Thus saith thy brother Israel: Thou knowest all the travail that hath befallen us; 15. how our fathers went down into Egypt, and we dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians dealt ill with us, and our fathers; 16. and when we cried unto the LORD, He heard our voice, and sent an angel, and brought us forth out of Egypt; and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border. 17. Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy land; we will not pass through field or through vineyard, neither will we drink of the

11. smote the rock. Carried away by anger, Moses still further forgot himself, and instead of speaking to the rock, as he had been commanded, he struck it twice. Had he merely spoken to the rock, the miracle would have been undeniable, and God's Name would then have been sanctified in the eyes of the unbelieving multitude.

12. because . . . in the eyes of the children of Israel. In what did the offence really consist for which Moses and Aaron were excluded from the Promised Land? Some commentators hold that Scripture intentionally does not specify the sin of Moses: his sin, like his grave, was to remain unknown to posterity. Such, however, is not the opinion of the Rabbis, who maintain that this sin is sufficiently indicated in v. 10 and 11. "Thou hast decreed"—said Moses—"that I die in the desert like the generation of the desert that angered Thee. I implore Thee, write in Thy Torah wherefore I have been thus punished, so that future generations may not say I had been like the generation of the desert." God granted his wish, and in several passages, Scripture sets forth the offence for which Moses was not to enter the Promised Land' (Midrash).

13. waters of Meribah. i.e. the waters of strife. There is a similar use of the word for a similar occasion in Exod. xvii, 7. To distinguish the two the later occurrence is frequently known as 'Meribath-Kadesh'.

was sanctified in them. God vindicated His Name by His giving water to the people, and by allowing justice to take its course, without respect of persons, in punishing Moses and Aaron (Talmud); cf. Lev. x, 3.

14-21. KING OF EDMO REFUSES PERMISSION TO PASS THROUGH HIS LAND

The Israelites, having failed to enter Canaan from the south, must now seek to enter it by a roundabout way from the east. The refusal of the king of Edom forced the Israelites to take a still more circuitous route round the southern portion of Edom. The journey was a terrible one.

all the travail. lit. 'the weariness.' The sufferings which the Israelites had undergone should have filled the Edomites with brotherly sympathy, and induced them to help their kinsfolk. The unnatural hostility of Edom towards Israel at a later period is the subject of the Book of Obadiah; see p. 137.

16. an angel. Here in the literal sense of 'messenger'. The reference is to Moses, the God-sent liberator and guide.

water of the wells; we will go along the king's highway, we will not turn aside to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy border.' 18. And Edom said unto him: 'Thou shalt not pass through me, lest I come out with the sword against thee.' 19. And the children of Israel said unto him: 'We will go up by the highway; and if we drink of thy water, I and my cattle, then will I give the price thereof; let me only pass through on my feet; there is no hurt.' 20. And he said: 'Thou shalt not pass through.' And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand. 21. Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border; wherefore Israel turned away from him.*v (iii). ¶ 22. And they journeyed from Kadesh; and the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, came unto mount Hor. 23. And the LORD spoke unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the border of the land of Edom, saying: 24. 'Aaron shall be gathered unto his people; for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against My word at the waters of Meribah. 25. Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto mount Hor. 26. And strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die there.' 27. And Moses did as the LORD commanded; and they went up into mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation. 28. And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there in the top of the mount; and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount. 29. And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they wept for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

'disciple of Aaron, loving peace and pursuing peace, loving his fellowmen and bringing them near to the Torah'. According to rabbinic legend, he would go from house to house, and whenever he found one who did not know how to recite the Shema, he taught him to recite it. He did not, however, restrict his activities to 'establishing peace between God and man', but strove to establish peace between man and his fellow. If he discovered that two men had fallen out, he hastened first to the one, then to the other, saying to each: 'If thou didst but know how he with whom thou hast quarrelled regrets his action!' Aaron would thus speak to each separately, until both the former enemies would mutually forgive each other, and as soon as they were again face to face greet each other as friends. This kindness of his led many a sinner to reform, who at the moment when he was about to commit a sin thought to himself, 'How shall I be able to lift up my eyes to Aaron's face, I, to whom Aaron was so kind!' When Aaron died, the angels lamented in the words: 'The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity' (Malachi ii, 6).

CHAPTER XXI

1-3. BATTLE WITH CANAANITES

1. Arad. A royal city of the Canaanites (Josh. xii, 14), situated on a hill now known as Tel Arad, 17 miles south of Hebron and 50 miles north-east of Kadesh.

the South. Or, 'the Negeb'; lit. 'the dryness,' was the southern district of Canaan that bordered on the desert and was itself largely desert.

of Atharim. Or 'of the spies' (Targum). As the territory of the king of Arad extended to the desert of Zin, he must have anticipated an invasion and sought to forestall it. Most commentators, however, regard the word as the name of a place.

2. utterly destroy. i.e. 'devote,' or place under a ban, dedicate wholly to the Deity.

3. Hormah. Heb. חרמה from the same root as חרם a ban, a devoted thing, i.e. a thing 'doomed' to destruction. The collective name of all the destroyed cities was Hormah, which was thus a district and not a single town; see on xiv, 45, and introductory note to xiii.

This incident cannot be assigned to the period when the Israelites had begun to compass the land of Edom, for they were nowhere in the neighbourhood of Arad. It therefore must precede that event. 'After leaving Sinai, the Israelites proceeded to Kadesh-barnea. From this base, they could march due north and invade Southern Palestine (the Negeb). This they did, and the result is given in the above three verses. It ended in the annihilation of the Canaanite ruler, and his chief city was henceforth called Hormah. Spies were thereupon sent out to explore Canaan proper, as related in Chapter xiii. But their report was unfavourable. On hearing it, the people lost heart, and it became clear that success could not be expected until a new generation had grown up. The order was therefore given to evacuate Kadesh, and proceed towards Edom. But the people suddenly veered round, and refused to obey. In defiance of the Divine command, they embarked on a campaign of conquest. The result was disastrous. They were utterly routed and chased to Hormah (xiv, 45), the scene of their former triumph' (Wiener).

4-9. THE BRAZEN SERPENT

4. by the way to the Red Sea. Forbidden to cut through Edom, they had to pass around it, by journeying in a southern direction until they reached Ezion-Geber, on the eastern gulf of the Red Sea, the Gulf of Akaba. They then turned eastwards to Mt. Seir; and thereafter northwards towards the steppes of Moab.

called 'Hormah. ¶ 4. And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way to the Red Sea, to compass the land of Edom; and the soul of the people became impatient because of the way. 5. And the people spoke against God, and against Moses: 'Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, and there is no water; and our soul loatheth this light bread.' 6. And the LORD sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died. 7. And the people came to Moses, and said: 'We have sinned, because we have spoken against the LORD, and against thee; pray unto the LORD, that He take away the serpents from us.' And Moses prayed for the people. 8. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole; and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he seeth it, shall live.' 9. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and set it upon the pole; and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he looked unto the serpent of brass, he lived.*vi. 10. And the children of Israel journeyed, and pitched in Oboth. 11. And they journeyed from Oboth, and pitched at Ije-abarim, in the wilderness which is in front of Moab, toward the sunrising. 12. From thence they journeyed, and pitched in the valley of Zered. 13.

* That is, Utter destruction.

5. light bread. Or, 'miserable bread,' the manna when compared with the appetizing diet of Egypt.

6. fiery serpents. lit. 'the serpents, the fiery ones,' whose sting caused violent inflammation.

7. Moses prayed for the people. 'Hence we learn,' says the Midrash, 'that when a man is asked to forgive, he must not cruelly refuse to do so. The people had spoken against Moses, but yet in the hour of their extremity Moses readily forgave, and prayed for their deliverance.'

8. make thee a fiery serpent. An image of a fiery serpent made out of brass (Ibn Ezra).

9. when he looked. 'Did then the brazen serpent possess the power of slaying or of bringing to life? No, but so long as the Israelites looked upwards and subjected their hearts to their Father in Heaven, were they healed. But when they refused, then were they destroyed' (Mishnah). The brazen serpent was 'a token of salvation to put them in remembrance of the commandments of Thy Law, for he that turned toward it was not saved because of that which was beheld but because of Thee, the Saviour of all' (Wisdom of Solomon).

This brazen serpent made by Moses was naturally preserved as an object of veneration by the Israelites. But when in the course of centuries which is in the wilderness. i.e. that part of it which is in the Wilderness.

13. on the other side of the Arnon. i.e. north of it.

'The Arnon is an enormous trench across the plateau of Moab. It is about 1,700 feet deep and two miles broad from edge to edge of the cliffs which bound it, but the floor of the Valley over which the stream winds is only forty yards wide. About nineteen miles from the Dead Sea, the trench divides into two branches, each of them again dividing into two. The whole plateau

From thence they journeyed, and pitched on the other side of the Arnon, which is in the wilderness, that cometh out of the border of the Amorites.—For Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites; 14. wherefore it is said in the book of the Wars of the LORD:

Vaheb in Suphah,
And the valleys of Arnon,
15. And the slope of the valleys
That inclineth toward the seat of Ar,
And leaneth upon the border of Moab.—

16. And from thence to ¹Beer; that is the well whereof the LORD said unto Moses: 'Gather the people together, and I will give them water.' 17. Then sang Israel this song:

Spring up, O well—sing ye unto it—
18. The well, which the princes digged,
Which the nobles of the people delved,
With the sceptre, and with their staves.

And from the wilderness to Mattanah; up to the desert is thus not only cut across, but up and down, by deep ravines, and a very difficult frontier is formed. All the branches probably carried the name Arnon' (G. A. Smith).

14. the book of the Wars of the LORD. The lines from that book quoted here support the statement that Arnon was the border of Moab. There is no further mention of this book in the whole of Scripture. Ibn Ezra says, 'It was an independent book, in which were written the records of the wars waged by God on behalf of those that fear Him. Many books have been lost and are no longer extant among us; e.g. the Words of Nathan and Iddo, and the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel.' Evidently it was a collection of ballads and songs. 'The Book of the Wars of the LORD, like the Sefer Hayashar (Josh. x, 13 and II Sam. I, 18) is a proof that there was no absence of literary activity in the days of Moses. It furthermore proves that the Torah is not the result of such literary activity, otherwise the alleged compiler could have indicated his sources as he has done in this instance' (S. R. Hirsch).

Vaheb. This name of an unidentified town is in the accusative, and requires some verb like 'we captured' to be understood before it.

in Suphah. Or, 'in storm.' Perhaps it is the same place as Suph, mentioned in Deut. I, 1.

15. of the valleys. Not valley, for the name Arnon covers a complex of wadies uniting in the long, deep trench that carried their waters to the Dead Sea.

Ar. Ar of Moab, in v. 28, which according to Deut. II, 18, lay on the Moabite frontier.

Zunz and Leiser translate v. 14 and 15 as follows: 'Therefore mention is made in the Book of the Wars of the LORD of Vaheb in Suphah, and of the brooks of Arnon, and the descent of the brooks, that turneth toward Shebeth-Ar and leaneth upon the border of Moab.' All these names occur in the Book of the Wars of the LORD, and are unknown to us now (Leiser).

16. Beer. i.e. 'Well-town'.

17. then sang Israel this song. The mention of this town and its well gave occasion for the citation of another short poem, celebrating the way in which the well was opened by the princes and nobles of the people.

sing ye unto it. lit. 'respond unto it', answer as a chorus; cf. Exod. xv, 21. From this arose the legend that it is the well that sang, and that the words of the princes and people were but the chorus to that song by the well.

'Let me pass through thy land; we will not turn aside into field, or into vineyard; we will not drink of the water of the wells; we will go by the king's highway, until we have passed thy border.' 23. And Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border; but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness, and came to Jahaz; and he fought against Israel. 24. And Israel smote him with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from the Arnon unto the Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon; for the border of the children of Ammon was strong. 25. And Israel took all these cities; and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, in Heshbon, and in all the towns thereof. 26. For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto the Arnon. 27. Wherefore they that speak in parables say:

the desert. Or, 'Jeshimon': the waste desolation north-west of the Dead Sea.

21-32. CONQUERING THE AMORITE KINGDOMS

In contrast to former pictures of murmuring and mutiny, we now get events which bring out the glad surprise of the new people as their strength is tried against the gigantic Sihon and Og, and the foes are utterly exterminated (Moulton).

21. Amorites. Denotes the inhabitants of Syria and Palestine before the time of the Exodus. But from v. 26 it would appear that Sihon and his people had but recently wrested from Moab the territory north of the river Arnon.

22. pass through thy land. Their objective being the fords of Jordan opposite Jericho.

the king's highway. See on xx, 17.

23. Jahaz. On the eastern border of Sihon's land.

24. the border of the children of Ammon was strong. Arnon was the southern limit of Sihon's kingdom, and Jabbok was the northern. The Ammonites lay to the east; but as their border fortresses were strong and impregnable, the Amorites had been unable to penetrate into their territory. The reason why the Israelites did not enter the land of the Ammonites is given in Deut. ii, 19.

25. Heshbon. The modern Hesban, 2,940 feet above the sea, 18 miles east of Jordan, opposite Jericho.

'The victory over Sihon was of incalculable importance to the Israelites; it strengthened their position and inspired them with self-reliance. They at once took possession of the conquered district and abandoned their nomadic life. The Israelites could now move about freely, being no longer incommoded by the narrow belt of the desert nor by the suspicions of unfriendly tribes' (Graetz).

the towns. lit. 'the daughters'; the villages near and dependent upon the capital, Heshbon. By a similar figure, we speak of 'a mother city'.

26-30. A HISTORICAL NOTE, WITH SONG OF VICTORY

27. wherefore. Explains that this song is quoted because of its association with the remark in v. 26 concerning the conquest of Moab by Sihon.

they that speak in parables say. Or, 'they that recite ballads say'; Heb. moshelim, 'they that speak the mashal,' which word might mean either proverb, parable, riddle, song, ode, or ballad. The moshelim were bards who expressed in pithy poetic snatches what was uppermost in the popular mind at important occasions in the national life. In the present instance we have a quotation from a popular ballad, referring to Come ye to Heshbon!

Let the city of Sihon be built and established!

28. For a fire is gone out of Heshbon,
A flame from the city of Sihon;
It hath devoured Ar of Moab,
The lords of the high places of Arnon.

29. Woe to thee, Moab!

Thou art undone, O people of Chemosh;
He hath given his sons as fugitives,
And his daughters into captivity,
Unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

30. We have shot at them—Heshbon is perished—even unto Dibon,
And we have laid waste even unto Nophah,

Which reacheth unto Medeba.

31. Thus Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorites. 32. And Moses sent to spy out Jazer, and they took the towns thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there.

33. And they turned and went up by the way of Bashan; and Og the king of Bashan went out against them, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei.*m. 34. And the Israel over the defeat of the Amorites.

come ye to Heshbon. This and the next two verses are the victory song of the Amorites when they in their day had wrested that land from the rulers of Moab. The poet invites the victorious Amorites to lose no time in entering upon and enjoying the greatest trophy in their victory, namely, the captured capital, Heshbon.

the city of Sihon. Let the capital which has fallen into your hands be built up in great splendour, making it worthy to be called City of Sihon (Rashi).

28. for a fire is gone out of Heshbon. A figurative way of saying that no sooner had Sihon gained possession of Heshbon than he was able to send forth destruction upon the other towns of Moab.

29. Chemosh. The national god of the Moabites.
he hath given . . . into captivity. An expression of half-ironical compassion for the Moabites, whom their idol Chemosh was unable to save.
The 'sons' and 'daughters' of Chemosh are his votaries, who looked to him as to a human father to save them in a time of trouble.

30. we have shot at them. This is the second part of the song; viz., the exultation of Israel over the defeat of the Amorites.

even unto Dibon. i.e. the inhabitants of all the places between Heshbon and Dibon have perished. Dibon was afterwards called 'Dibon-

Gad' and was situated four miles north of the Arnon. It was at Dibon that the so-called Moabite Stone was discovered in 1868—the most famous of all inscriptions bearing on Bible history. It is a contemporary document of the highest importance, giving the Moabite side of the conflict between Israel and Moab in the ninth pre-Christian century, the days of the Prophet Elijah and King Ahab.

Nophah. Unidentified.

Medeba. The modern Madeba, about four miles S.E. of Heshbon.

32. Jazer. In Isaiah xvi 8, 9 it is mentioned together with Heshbon. According to I Maccabees, v, 8, it was near the Ammonite border.

33-35. DEFEAT OF OG THE KING OF BASHAN

33. went up. Towards the north.

Bashan. Celebrated for its rich pastures, its healthy herds of cattle, and its oak forests. It extended from the border of Gilead on the south to Mount Hermon on the north.

Og the king of Bashan. In Hebrew folklore, Og is the last of the giants, an antediluvian of superhuman strength, who had survived the Flood many centuries before.

Edrei. The modern Edra'ah, situated on the southern border of Bashan, about 30 miles east of the Sea of Tiberias.

34. fear him not. Og was formidable, not only on account of his giant stature (cf. Deut. iii, 11) but also on account of the walled cities in his dominions.

LORD said unto Moses: 'Fear him not; for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heshbon.' 35. So they smote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him remaining; and they possessed his land.

JUDGES XI, 1-33

CHAPTER XI

1. Now Jephthah the Gileadite was a mighty man of valour, and he was the son of a harlot; and Gilead begot Jephthah. 2. And Gilead's wife bore him sons; and when his wife's sons grew up, they drove out Jephthah, and said unto him: 'Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house; for thou art the

The Haftorah is again from the Book of Judges, which describes the days of lawlessness in Israel; the frequent lapses into the heathenism and immorality of the neighbouring nations; the dire calamities that followed; and the new Judge and Deliverer who would arise and save Israel from bondage and the enemy. For eighteen years Israel had now groaned under the cruel yoke of the Ammonites (1128-1110 B.C.E.). Who and where is the man capable of leading his brethren against the Ammonites? Here the Haftorah opens. It tells the story of Jephthah, the rugged and ruthless warrior but noble patriot and tender-hearted father, whose victory over the enemy was shadowed by a terrible sorrow.

The Sedrah gives the account of Israel's clash with the Amorites. The Northern part of the Amorite kingdom had formerly, it is assumed, belonged to Ammon. This forms the connection between the Sedrah and Haftorah.

1-3. JEPHTHAH'S ANTECEDENTS

1. a harlot. Or, 'innkeeper' (Targum Jonathan); or, 'concubine' (Kimchi). In all probability the Heb. word is here used in its usual meaning. The Bible speaks the naked truth; it conceals nothing, whether concerning the individual or the nation. Here it teaches that a man of low, nay infamous, origin, whom his brothers despised, may yet be the destined instrument of deliverance for his people. Jephthah was the first Israelite leader to arise in Trans-jordania. Two centuries later, another leader, immeasurably the spiritual superior to Jephthah, namely, Elijah the Prophet, also came from the same region.

Gilead. The name of a man living in Gilead; cf. France as a family name in France.

son of another woman.' 3. Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tob; and there were gathered vain fellows to Jephthah, and they went out with him. ¶ 4. And it came to pass after a while, that the children of Ammon made war against Israel. 5. And it was so, that when the children of Ammon made war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob. 6. And they said unto Jephthah: 'Come and be our chief, that we may fight with the children of Ammon.' 7. And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead: 'Did not ye hate me, and drive me out of my father's house? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress?' 8. And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah: 'Therefore are we returned to thee now, that thou mayest go with us, and fight with the children of Ammon, and thou shalt be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.' 9. And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead: 'If ye bring me back home to fight with the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me, I will be your head.' 10. And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah: 'The LORD shall be witness between us; surely according to thy word so will we do.' 11. Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him head and chief over them; and Jephthah spoke all his words before the LORD in Mizpah. ¶ 12. And Jephthah sent messengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, saying: 'What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come unto me to fight against my land?' 13. And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah: 'Because Israel took away my land, when he they went out with him. On his raiding expeditions. Driven from home, he betook himself to a wild, marauding life on the borders of the tribe. In this way, Jephthah acquired the tactics of warfare, and the art of leading and governing men.

6. be our chief. The national emergency needed an intrepid hero, and the thoughts of men turned instinctively to Jephthah, whose reputation as a military leader was already established.

Mizpah. Not Mizpah in Benjamin, but in Gilead; the scene of a similar solemn compact in the life of the Patriarch Jacob; Gen. xxxi, 49.

12-27. JEPHTHAH'S NEGOTIATIONS

Before taking the field, Jephthah seeks by diplomatic means to arrive at a peaceable settlement.

13. Arnon . . . Jabbok. 'The district between the two rivers naturally lay exposed to the incursions of the Ammonites, who lived to the east of it (Num. xxi, 24); but there is no support for the Ammonites' claim to regard it as my land at the time of the Israelite invasion, when the territory in question was held by the Amorites' (Cooke).

And Jephthah sent messengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon; 15. and he said unto him: 'Thus saith Jephthah: Israel took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon. 16. But when they came up from Egypt, and Israel walked through the wilderness unto the Red Sea, and came to Kadesh; 17. then Israel sent messengers unto the king of Edom, saying: Let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land; but the king of Edom hearkened not. And in like manner he sent unto the king of Moab; but he would not; and Israel abode in Kadesh. 18. Then he walked through the wilderness, and compassed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the east side of the land of Moab, and they pitched on the other side of the Arnon, but they came not within the border of Moab, for the Arnon was the border of Moab. 19. And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon; and Israel said unto him: Let us pass, we pray thee, through thy land unto my place. 20. But Sihon trusted not Israel to pass through his border; but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought against Israel. 21. And the LORD, the God of Israel, delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Israel, and they smote them; so Israel possessed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country. 22. And they possessed all the border of the Amorites, from the Arnon even unto the Jabbok, and from the wilderness even unto the Jordan. 23. So now the LORD, the God of Israel, hath dispossessed the Amorites from before His people Israel, and shouldest thou possess them? 24. Wilt not thou possess that which Chemosh thy god giveth thee to possess? So whomsoever the LORD our God hath dispossessed from before us, them will we possess. 25. And now art thou anything better than Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab? did he ever strive against Israel, or did he ever fight against them? 26. While Israel dwelt in Heshbon 15-22. Jephthah proves that the Israelites in the wilderness made a wide detour to avoid the territory of the kinsmen of the Ammonites, the Moabites, who were then in occupation of the land in dispute. When the Israelites took the land, it belonged neither to Moab nor Ammon but to their Amorite conquerors; see Num. XX-XXI.

Amorites. As the children of Israel took the land from the Amorites, his claim was unfounded.

24. Chemosh. Was properly the god of the Moabites, with whom, however, the children of Ammon were a kindred people (Gen. XIX, 37-8).

23. the LORD . . . hath dispossessed the fight. 25. did he ever fight. i.e. did he ever dare to and its towns, and in Aroer and its towns, and in all the cities that are along by the side of the Arnon, three hundred years; wherefore did ye not recover them within that time? 27. I therefore have not sinned against thee, but thou doest me wrong to war against me; the LORD, the Judge, be judge this day between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon.' 28. Howbeit the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he sent him. ¶ 29. Then the spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah, and he passed over Gilead and Manasseh, and passed over Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he passed over unto the children of Ammon. 30. And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said: 'If Thou wilt indeed deliver the children of Ammon into my hand, 31. then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, it shall be the LORD's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.' 32. So Jephthah passed over unto the children of Ammon to fight against them; and the LORD delivered them into his hand. 33. And he smote them from Aroer until thou come to Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto Abel-cheramim, with a very great slaughter. So the children of Ammon were subdued before the children of Israel.

26. three hundred years. The different periods mentioned in the Book of Judges up to the beginning of the Ammonite oppression total 301 years.

31. and I will offer it up . . . burnt-offering. Kimchi, Ralbag and Abarbanel maintain that the 'and' before I will offer it should be rendered 'or', and the phrase read: 'It shall be the LORD's, or I will offer it up as a burnt-offering'; i.e. if it be an object permitted for sacrifice I will offer it; otherwise, it shall be dedicated, in some other way, to the LORD. (Support for this rendering is given in the verse 'He that smiteth his father and mother,' Exod. xxi, 15, where the obvious meaning is: 'He that smiteth his father or his mother'). There was thus an implicit reservation in the vow to offer the first living object that met him, namely, 'if it be proper for such purpose.' Jephthah therefore did not offer her up as a burnt-offering, but 'he made a house for her and brought her into it, and she was there separated from mankind and from the ways of the world' (Kimchi).

Whatever interpretation we place upon the tragedy of Jephthah's daughter, his strange unhallowed vow would have been impossible under settled religious conditions, such as preceded and followed the period of the Judges.

Legend represents the daughter seeking to prove to her father that the Torah speaks only of animal sacrifice, never of human sacrifices. In vain she cited the example of Jacob, who had vowed to give God a tenth of all his possessions, and yet did not attempt to sacrifice any of his sons. The Rabbis severely blame Jephthah for not having his entirely invalid vow 'annulled' (see Additional Note on Num. xxx). Phinehas the High Priest—who the Rabbis assume was still living at the time—could have absolved him from his criminal vow; and but for the rivalry between them would have done so. Phinehas said: 'I, the High Priest, should go to that ignoramus! Let him come to me.' And Jephthah said: 'I, the Prince of the land, should humiliate myself before one of my subjects!' Both were overtaken by punishment. Jephthah died a horrible death. And as for Phinehas, the Holy Spirit departed from him. The condemnation of Jephthah's vow by the Rabbis has been re-echoed in many tongues and many lands. A thousand years later, Dante wrote:

'Be strong

To keep your vow; yet be not perverse—
As Jephthah once, blindly to execute a rash resolve.

Better a man should say, I have done wrong,
Than keeping an ill vow, he should do worse.'
(Paradiso).

(CHAPTERS XXII, 2-XXV, 9)

THE BOOK OF BALAAM

The Israelites now enter upon the last stage of their journey to the Promised Land. They are within sight of their goal.

We see an irresistible People about to undertake the conquest of its national home, and a renowned heathen prophet giving solemn testimony to its sublime destiny. Such tribute to Israel's unique character is all the more impressive, as it is that of a stranger, speaking against his intention and interest, under the compulsion of a Higher Power. He proclaims the utter futility of all attempts on the part of man to foil the purposes of God in regard to that People; and in rapturous strains, he foretells the glorious future which awaits Israel. Such is the burden of chapters XXII-XXIV, probably known in ancient times as 'The Book of Balaam' ספר בלעם. (This is the reading found in the Munich Manuscript—the only complete manuscript—of the Talmud, instead of פרשת בלעם as in the printed editions; Baba Bathra, 15a.)

CHARACTER OF BALAAM

Balaam's personality is an old enigma, which has baffled the skill of commentators. It seems probable that he had from the first learned some elements of pure and true religion in his home in Mesopotamia, the cradle of the ancestors of Israel. He thus belongs, with Melchizedek, Job, and Jethro, to the scattered worshippers of the true God, who are unconnected with Israel. But unlike these, he is represented in Scripture as at the same time heathen sorcerer, true Prophet, and the perverter who suggested a peculiarly abhorrent means of bringing about the ruin of Israel. Because of these fundamental contradictions in character, Bible Critics assume that the Scriptural account of Balaam is a combination of two or three varying traditions belonging to different periods. This is quite unconvincing; it is as if we were to maintain that the current life-story of Francis Bacon, for example, was due to the combination of two or three traditions belonging to different periods of English history, since no one man could at the same time be an illustrious philosopher, a great statesman, and 'the meanest of mankind'. Such a view betrays a slight knowledge of the fearful complexity of the mind and soul of man. It is only in the realm of the Fable that men and women display, as it were in a single flash of light, some one aspect of human nature. It is otherwise in real life. 'The heart is deceitful above all things, and it is exceeding weak—who can know it?' (Jeremiah xvii, 9) is, alas, a far truer summary of human psychology.

In post-Biblical times, most Jewish authorities represent Balaam in an unfavourable, and often in a detestable, light. Although his utterances are a rhapsodic praise of Israel, they pay regard to his intention, which was to curse and not to bless. They therefore speak of him as בלעם הרשע, Balaam the Wicked. An evil eye, a haughty mind, and a proud spirit—they declare—mark his disciples. With Amalek and Haman, he is a permanent type of the enmity of the impious against Israel. All the more noteworthy is the fact that some Jewish opinions are decidedly and emphatically favourable. According to these opinions, he is as a prophet on a level with Moses; and his story is of such importance that it is given in the Law, the Prophets (Micah vi), and the 'Sacred Writings' (Neh. xiii). There was even a suggestion that the utterances of Balaam should find a place in the Shema. Although this was not done, one noted saying of his, מה טובו אהליך יעקב משכנותיך ישראל ('How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, thy dwellings, O Israel') forms the opening sentence of every Synagogue service.

In the early Church, the view taken of Balaam is one of unrelieved blackness: he is the embodiment of avarice and unholy ambition. Modern Christian theologians have depicted him as a warning example of self-deception, which persuades man in every case that the sin which he commits may be brought within the rules of conscience and revelation; and as the combination of the purest form of religious belief with a standard of conduct immeasurably below it. A violent reaction in his favour set in with Lessing and Herder, long before the rise of the Critical School; and among these newer estimates we may mention that of Kalisch, who considers Balaam faultless in character and his utterances unsurpassed for poetic beauty in the whole of Scripture: 'firm and inexorable like eternal Fate, he regards himself solely as an instrument of that Omnipotence which guides the destinies of nations by its unerring wisdom. Free from all human passion, he is like a mysterious spirit from a higher and nobler world.' Careful reading of chapters XXII-XXIV, however, shows that those who approve of everything Balaam says or does, are as from far a true estimate of him as those to whom he is a semi-diabolical being.

For the unique incident of the speaking ass, that has for centuries proved a source of merriment to the semi-educated, see introductory note to v. 22-34.

22 2. And Balak the son of Zippor saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites. 3. And Moab was sore afraid of the people, because they were many; and Moab was overcome with dread because of the children of Israel. 4. And Moab said unto the elders of Midian: 'Now will this multitude lick up all that is round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field.'—And Balak the son of Zippor was king of Moab at that time.— 5. And he sent messengers unto Balaam the son of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the River, to the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying: 'Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt; behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me. 6. VII. BALAK

XXII, 2-4. BALAK KING OF MOAB

The Israelites, fresh from victory over the Amorite kings, were now settled on the border of Moab, and filled both king and people of Moab with dread.

3. was overcome with dread. Or, 'loathed'; because they hated the children of Israel, they had a horror of them; cf. Exod. i, 12.

4. elders of Midian. Who conducted the general affairs of the desert tribes that had their origin in Midian, east of the Gulf of Akaba. There was no enmity on the part of Israel towards Moab (Deut. ii, 29). Neither did Israel in any way cross the path of the Midianites or harbour any ill-will against them. Moses had spent many years in Midian; and Jethro, the Midianite priest, was an honoured guest in Israel's tents. The plot of the Moabites and Midianites against Israel was thus the outcome of 'causeless hatred' (שנאת חנם), the source of the most terrible cruelties in human relations.

5-14. THE FIRST DEPUTATION TO BALAAM

They place their hope in Balaam, far-famed throughout the East as a soothsayer whose curse is irresistible. Balak sends messengers to Balaam inviting him to cast a baneful spell upon this rising People of the desert. In a vision, God forbids Balaam to accompany them.

5. Balaam. Heb. 'Bileam', probably a shortened form of בעל העם, 'lord of the people' (Kalisch).

Pethor. Pitru, a town in Mesopotamia, mentioned in Babylonian and Egyptian inscriptions. It was from the land of magic that the great magician was to be brought.

land of the children of his people. According to Heb. idiom this means Balaam's native land (Nachmanides). Midrash and Rashi, however, refer it to Balak, and deem him a foreign conqueror of Moab.

6. come now. The curse cannot be pronounced at a distance. The diviner must behold those whom he is to blight by his incantations.

curse me this people. 'The whole ancient world, Greece and Rome no less than the Near Eastern nations, had a firm belief in the real power of blessings and curses. This was especially so in Mesopotamia. Babylonian religion was rooted in demonology. It taught that certain persons had the power of directing or changing the decree of the gods, and could by their spells and incantations secure prosperity or call forth calamity. These masters of magic were employed to discover secrets, to foretell the future, to bless an undertaking, or to bring ruin upon an enemy.

too mighty for me. Cf. Exod. i, 9. Balak's phraseology, as well as his whole attitude, is reminiscent of Pharaoh—both illustrating the fatal madness of those who oppose God's purposes (Gray).

peradventure. 'Hesitancy and assurance, despondency and reckless courage, struggle in his uneasy and foreboding mind' (Kalisch).

whom thou blessest is blessed. An expression of Balak's profound belief in the efficacy of curses; also the language of flattery with the object of securing the expert soothsayer's services before he—Balak—undertakes to fight the Israelites.

therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me; peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land; for I know that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed.' 7. And the elders of Moab and the elders of Midian departed with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spoke unto him the words of Balak. 8. And he said unto them: 'Lodge here this night, and I will bring you back word, as the LORD may speak unto me'; and the princes of Moab abode with Balaam. 9. And God came unto Balaam, and said: 'What men are these with thee?' 10. And Balaam said unto God: 'Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent unto me [saying]: 11. Behold the people that is come out of Egypt, it covereth the face of the earth; now, come curse me them; peradventure I shall be able to fight against them, and shall drive them out.' 12. And God said unto Balaam: 'Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people; for they are blessed.'*ii (v). 13. And Balaam rose up in the morning, and said unto the princes of Balak: 'Get you into your land; for the LORD refuseth to give me leave to go with you.' 14. And the princes of Moab rose up, and they went unto Balak, and said: 'Balaam refuseth to come with us.' 15. And Balak sent yet again princes, more, and more honourable than they. 16. And they came to Balaam, and said to him: 'Thus saith Balak the son of Zippor: Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me; 17. for I will promote thee unto very great honour, and whatsoever thou sayest unto me I will do; come therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people.' 18. And Balaam answered and said unto the servants of Balak: 'If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I can-

7. the rewards of divination. lit. 'the instruments of the diviner's art'; here, the reward or pay to be given him (Samuel Hanaggid, the famous Spanish Talmudist, poet and statesman).

8. lodge here this night. Balaam is not disinclined to follow the invitation. The name 'Israel' has not even been mentioned. To judge by Balaam's surprise when he caught his first glimpse of the Israelites, his knowledge of them could not have been extensive.

as the LORD may speak unto me. Balaam is a prophet of the true God, in familiar intercourse with Him, and expects to receive some Divine communication in a dream or a vision of the night; cf. Gen. xx, 3. 'This recognition of God's revelation of His purposes concerning Israel to a non-Israelite is striking evidence of the universality of Judaism' (Stanley).

9. what men are these? A leading question (Ibn Ezra, Mendelssohn); cf. Gen. iii, 11.

13. the LORD refuseth. Balaam suppresses the fact that God had forbidden him to curse Israel.

Balak thought that the seer's motive for refusing was to elicit higher reward for his services.

And God came unto Balaam at night, and said unto him: 'If the men are come to call thee, rise up, go with them; but only the word which I speak unto thee, that shalt thou do.'*iii. 21. And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went

19. tarry ye also here this night. 'A thorough honest man would without hesitation have repeated his former answer, that he could not be guilty of so infamous a degradation of the sacred character with which he was invested, as to curse those whom he knew to be blessed. But instead of this, he desires the princes of Moab to tarry that night with him also; and for the sake of the reward deliberates whether he might not be able to obtain leave to do that which had been before revealed to him to be contrary to the will of God' (Joseph Butler).

that I may know. After God had distinctly said unto him 'thou shalt not curse this people,' what need was there for him to say, 'that I may know what the LORD will speak unto me more'? It is evident that he harboured evil thoughts in his heart (Ibn Ezra). 'Balaam said, Perhaps I may persuade Him, and He will agree that I should curse' (Rashi).

20. rise up, go with them. 'Audacity may prevail even before God. Balaam's steadfast insistence upon his wish wrested from God His consent to Balaam's journey to Moab. He warned him of its consequences, saying to him, I take no pleasure in the destruction of sinners, but if thou art bound to go to thy destruction, do so' (Talmud).

BALAAM AND THE ASS

We now come to the best-known episode in the story of Balaam; viz. the speaking ass. God makes the dumb animal rebuke the blindness and obstinacy of man. Balaam, like many a one before and after him, is saved from dishonour by unforeseen hindrance, and brought to reason through means which human pride despises.

Many expositors, both in ancient and modern times, take the account of the miracle in these verses literally. Nothing is impossible to Omnipotence, they hold; and a speaking ass is no more marvellous than a speaking serpent or any of the other miracles. In the Ethics of the Fathers, the mouth of the earth that swallowed Korah (xvi, 32), the mouth of the well (see note on xxi, 17), and the mouth of Balaam's ass, are classed among those strange and wonderful phenomena that had their origin in the interval between the close of the work of Creation and the commencement of the Sabbath. In this way the Rabbis gave expression to their conception of the miraculous in the scheme of things. Miracles, they held, were not interruptions of Nature's laws; for at Creation, God had provided for them in advance, as part of the cosmic plan. 'The Fathers of the Mishnah, who taught that Balaam's ass was created on the eve of the Sabbath, in the twilight, were not fantastic fools, but subtle philosophers, discovering the reign of universal law through the exceptions, the miracles that had to be created specially and were still a part of the order of the world, bound to appear in due time much as apparently erratic comets are' (Zangwill).

For over a thousand years, however, the literal has largely given place to other interpretations of this incident. One of these explanations—that of Saadyah and Maimonides—considers v. 22-34 as enacted in a dream, or vision of the night. This would account for the many incongruous things in these verses. Thus, Balaam appears with but two attendants, and travelling alone, without the brilliant accompaniment of princes and 'honourable' ambassadors. Again, he does not show the least astonishment at the startling fact of the ass speaking. In the light of this interpretation, v. 22-34 depict the continuance on the subconscious plane of the mental and moral conflict in Balaam's soul; and the dream-apparition of the angel and the speaking ass is but a further warning to Balaam against being misled through avarice to violate God's command. Another explanation holds that the Text nowhere states that the ass gave utterance to human sounds. Its weird behaviour in the presence of the angel, and its wild cries at the cruel beatings, were understood by Balaam to mean the words given in the Text (Luzzatto).

In brief, there is not in Judaism any one authoritative interpretation of the Book of Balaam; and 'in regard to its narrative, readers are free to think what they please' (Josephus). Therefore, those who do not deem any of the above interpretations acceptable, should feel too deeply the essential veracity of the story to be troubled overmuch with minute questions about its details. In whatever way we conceive of the narrative, its representation of the strivings of conscience is of permanent human and spiritual value.

with the princes of Moab. 22. And God's anger was kindled because he went; and the angel of the LORD placed himself in the way for an adversary against him.—Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him.—23. And the ass saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, with his sword drawn in his hand; and the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field; and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way. 24. Then the angel of the LORD stood in a hollow way between the vineyards, a fence being on this side, and a fence on that side. 25. And the ass saw the angel of the LORD, and she thrust herself unto the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall; and he smote her again. 26. And the angel of the LORD went further, and stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left. 27. And the ass saw the angel of the LORD, and she lay down under Balaam; and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with his staff. 28. And the LORD opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam: 'What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?' 29. And Balaam said unto the ass: 'Because thou hast mocked me; I would there were a sword in my hand, for now I had killed thee.' 30. And the ass said unto Balaam: 'Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden all thy life long unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee?' And he said: 'Nay.' 31. Then the LORD opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, with his sword drawn in his hand; and he bowed his head, and fell on his

21-35. THE JOURNEY

22. God's anger was kindled. This seems to contradict what is said in v. 20, that God gave him permission to go. But that permission was conditional. He might go, but he must speak only what is given him to say. Balaam gladly seized the opportunity of going, for he was hankering after the reward. For the present, he ignored the condition. In his heart he hoped to evade it and satisfy Balak. But God, who is the discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart, sees the double-mindedness of Balaam and lets him know that there must be no trifling (Dummelow).

angel of the LORD. 'This was an angel of mercy, who desired to restrain him from committing a sin and perishing' (Midrash). 'In many unforeseen, singular, and often homely ways, men are checked in the endeavour to carry out the schemes which ambition and avarice prompt.

The angel of the LORD who opposes one bent on a bad enterprise often appears in familiar guise. To some men their wives stand in their way, some are challenged by their children' (Expositor's Bible).

an adversary against him. i.e. against Balaam's evil self. The angel tried to save Balaam from rushing to his own destruction.

28. three times. 'The narrator of this tale had a heart full of pity for the groans of the poor creature' (Holzinger).

29. I had killed thee. 'At this, the ass laughed. He is intent on destroying a whole people by word of mouth; and to slay a poor ass he requires a sword' (Midrash).

32. wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass. 'I have been commissioned to demand restitution from thee for the injustice thou hast offered to face. 32. And the angel of the LORD said unto him: 'Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? behold, I am come forth for an adversary, because thy way is contrary unto me; 33. and the ass saw me, and turned aside before me these three times; unless she had turned aside from me, surely now I had even slain thee, and saved her alive.' 34. And Balaam said unto the angel of the LORD: 'I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me; now therefore, if it displease thee, I will get me back.' 35. And the angel of the LORD said unto Balaam: 'Go with the men; but only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak.' So Balaam went with the princes of Balak. 36. And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him unto Ir-moab, which is on the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost part of the border. 37. And Balak said unto Balaam: 'Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not unto me? am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?' 38. And Balaam said unto Balak: 'Lo, I am come unto thee; have I now any power at all to speak any thing? the word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak.' *lv(vi). 39. And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto Kiriath-huzoth. 40. And Balak sacrificed oxen and sheep, and sent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him. 41. And it came to pass in the morning that Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into Bamoth-baal, and he saw from thence the utmost part of the people.

the ass' (Midrash). This v. is a classical text for the preaching of humane treatment of animals. 'There is a rule laid down by our Sages, that it is directly prohibited in the Torah to cause pain to an animal, and that rule is based on the words Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass?' (Maimonides).

contrary. Or, 'headlong'; i.e. unto destruction.

34. I have sinned. In cruelly beating the animal. 'Balaam knew that Divine punishment could be averted only by penitence, and that the angels have no power to touch a man who, after sinning, says "I have sinned"' (Midrash).

I will get me back. Balaam was now convinced that it was useless hoping to bend God's will to his, and wished to have nothing more to do with Balak. But Balaam must now go as God's messenger and bless Israel.

35. So Balaam went. Resolved strictly to adhere to the Divine communications that were to be made to him. Having thus changed his disposition, he received God's revelation and was endowed with the Divine Spirit (Ewald).

36-40. ARRIVAL AND RECEPTION

36. unto Ir-Moab. Probably the same as the Ar mentioned in xx1, 15.

37. to promote thee. Balak seems surprised that his power to reward the prophet had not secured immediate compliance with his request. He is the type of worldly-minded man who thinks that blessings and curses, nay all things in heaven and on earth, can be bought, if only the buyer will pay a high enough price for them.

39. Kiriath-huzoth. Its site is unknown.

40. and sent to Balaam. As a sign of hospitality to his honoured guest.

CAP. XXIII. כג

1. And Balaam said unto Balak: 'Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks and seven rams.' 2. And Balak did as Balaam had spoken; and Balak and Balaam offered on every altar a bullock and a ram. 3. And Balaam said unto Balak: 'Stand by thy burnt-offering, and I will go; peradventure the LORD will come to meet me; and whatsoever He showeth me I will tell thee.' And he went to a bare height. 4. And God met Balaam; and he said unto Him: 'I have prepared the seven altars, and I have offered up a bullock and a ram on every altar.' 5. And the LORD put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said: 'Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.' 6. And he returned unto him, and, lo, he stood by his burnt-offering, he, and all the princes of Moab. 7. And he took up his parable, and said:

From Aram Balak bringeth me,
The king of Moab from the mountains of the East:

'Come, curse me Jacob,
And come, execrate Israel.'

8. How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed?

And how shall I execrate, whom the LORD hath not execrated?

the person for whom the divining was done.

the three words שאל פי י, 'to inquire of the

7-10. BALAAM'S FIRST PROPHECY

When Balaam returns to Balak and his princes, he can but break forth into unstinted blessing of Israel. 'It is a marvellous people, with a unique destiny!'

God.

9. from the top of the rocks I see him. Standing on the mountain peak, and looking not with the view he has of Israel below. Curse he cannot.

He feels compelled by an irresistible Divine from other peoples by its religious and moral instrument of a Divine purpose.

shall not be reckoned among the nations. The Heb. is in the Hithpael and occurs only here in Scripture; lit. 'does not reckon itself among the nations'. A notable alternative rendering was proposed by Marcus Jastrow. He showed that in Neo-Hebrew the Hithpael of the root חשב signifies 'to conspire' (see his Talmudic Dictionary, I, 508), and believes that this is the meaning intended here. 'Israel is a people that dwelleth alone; it does not conspire against the nations,' exclaims Balaam; why then shall he be cursed?

And from the hills I behold him:
Lo, it is a people that shall dwell alone,
And shall not be reckoned among the nations.

10. Who hath counted the dust of Jacob,
Or numbered the stock of Israel?
Let me die the death of the righteous,
And let mine end be like his!

11. And Balak said unto Balaam: 'What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.' 12. And he answered and said: 'Must I not take heed to speak that which the LORD putteth in my mouth?'^v 13. And Balak said unto him: 'Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them; thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all; and curse me them from thence.' 14. And he took him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered up a bullock and a ram on every altar. 15. And he said unto Balak: 'Stand here by thy burnt-offering, while I go toward a meeting yonder.' 16. And the LORD met Balaam, and put a word in his mouth, and said: 'Return unto Balak, and thus shalt thou speak.' 17. And he came to him, and, lo, he stood by his burnt-offering, and

13. v. הסר ה'

10. who hath counted the dust of Jacob. An expression of amazement at the mighty multitude he sees before him.

the stock. Heb. רֹבֶעַ; lit. 'fourth part'. Balaam's poetic parable is marked by parallelism or 'thought-rhythm' between the two parts of a verse. Now, neither 'stock' nor 'fourth part' corresponds to the word 'dust' in the first half of the verse. And yet the parallelism between the two halves of the verse is perfect: forty years ago, a wandering scholar called my attention to the fact that the true meaning of the word רֹבֶעַ is 'ashes', and that therefore the correct rendering of the verse is:—

'Who can count the dust of Jacob,
Or, by number, the ashes of Israel?'

This meaning of רֹבֶעַ is attested by the Samaritan Targum of 'I am but dust and ashes' in Gen. xviii, 27 (וְאֵנִי קֹטֵם וְרֹבֶעַ). In 1902, B. Jacob found that also in the Aramaic of the Palestinian Christians, the word רֹבֶעַ is a synonym of 'dust'. Nothing is, of course, more natural than that Balaam, the Aramean, should have made use of an Aramaism in his poetic outburst.

die the death of the righteous. That wish was not to be fulfilled; see xxxi, 8. It would have been better, had he said: 'Let me live the life of the righteous.' That is the only way to die their death.

11-17. NEW ARRANGEMENTS

What Balaam had seen of the camp of Israel had so impressed him with the numbers, power and unity of Israel that he found it impossible to curse them. The distracted king changes the seer's place of outlook, and to this Balaam consents.

15. here. Better, thus; Heb. כֹּה. Balaam shows Balak how to stand at the offering of the sacrifice (Daiches).

17. what hath the LORD spoken? Balak is impatient, and asks for the result as soon as Balaam returns.

18-24. BALAAM'S SECOND PROPHECY

The change of place has all been in vain. Balaam, despite himself, must confirm and even transcend his former blessing; God is unchangeable in His purpose to bless His people. There is neither iniquity nor perverseness in Israel, and no magical arts can avail against him. With God as Defender, Israel is certain to be victorious.

the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said unto him: 'What hath the LORD spoken?' 18. And he took up his parable, and said:

Arise, Balak, and hear;

Give ear unto me, thou son of Zippor:

19. God is not a man, that He should lie; Neither the son of man, that He should repent:

When He hath said, will He not do it?

Or when He hath spoken, will He not make it good?

20. Behold, I am bidden to bless;

And when He hath blessed, I cannot call it back.

21. None hath beheld iniquity in Jacob, Neither hath one seen perverseness in Israel;

The LORD his God is with him,

And the shouting for the King is among them.

22. God who brought them forth out of Egypt

18. arise, Balak. The soothsayer while giving his answer has to address the person for whom he divines (Daiches).

the son of man. Better, a son of man; i.e. a mere mortal.

repent. The Heb. denotes change of mind or purpose.

21. iniquity in Jacob. Israel is here, as in v. 10, spoken of ideally as a nation without spot or stain. Israel hath not committed any such wrong as would warrant God's withdrawal of His blessing from them, much less His permitting them to suffer destruction.

perverseness. This is the translation of Septuagint and Ibn Ezra; but the Heb. עָמַל means also calamity—and the phrase may indicate the absence of disasters in Israel. 'The Israelites are with God—hence there is among them no אָם, iniquity; and God is with the Israelites—therefore they are free from עָמַל, calamity' (Kalisch).

the LORD his God is with him. Israel enjoys the fellowship of God; and hence no weapon hurled against him can prosper.

the shouting for the King. Better, the trumpet-call of the King; i.e. they are constantly reminded of the dominion of their God, and summoned to His worship, by the solemn sound (תְּרוּעָה) of the Shofar, which they obey with a joyful readiness, proving the sincerity of their faith and devotion (Kalisch). All holy seasons were announced, and all public sacrifices accompanied, by the 'blast of the trumpet'.

22. brought them forth. lit. 'is bringing them forth', representing the Exodus as still in progress, and lasting up to the entrance of Canaan (Gray).

is for them . . . wild-ox. In consequence of God's presence, and of what He does for His people, Israel is as irresistible as the re'em—a species of buffalo, now extinct.

23. with Jacob. Or, 'in Jacob.' In Israel men do not resort to oracles, enchantments, or magic arts (Rashi). The next half-verse gives the reason. Some translate: 'no enchantment prevails against Jacob' (Mendelssohn, Luzzatto, Malbim), implying that the arts of the magician and all the ways of divination are powerless against Israel.

now. Heb. כֵּעַת; 'at the right time' (Septuagint); 'whenever required' (Rashi). Kalisch translates these two verses as follows:—

'In due time it is told to Jacob And to Israel what God doeth.'

what God hath wrought. This translation is that of the Septuagint, Rashi, Ibn Ezra, Rashbam. 'The poet reckons it among the advantages of Israel that whenever it is fitting, God causes to be announced what he intends to do' (Kuenen). Another translation is: 'Now one can only say concerning Israel, What hath God wrought!' i.e. everything concerning Israel is irrevocably settled by Divine Will, and one can only exclaim in wonder at God's dealings with His people (Dillmann).

Neither is there any divination with Israel;

Now is it said of Jacob and of Israel: 'What hath God wrought!'

24. Behold a people that riseth up as a lioness,

And as a lion doth he lift himself up; He shall not lie down until he eat of the prey,

And drink the blood of the slain.

25. And Balak said unto Balaam: 'Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all.'

26. But Balaam answered and said unto Balak: 'Told not I thee, saying: All that the LORD speaketh, that I must do?''*vi (vii).

27. And Balak said unto Balaam: 'Come now, I will take thee unto another place; peradventure it will please God that thou mayest curse me them from thence.' 28. And Balak took Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh down upon the desert. 29. And Balaam said unto Balak: 'Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks and seven rams.' 30. And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered up a bullock and a ram on every altar.

CHAPTER XXIV

1. And when Balaam saw that it pleased the LORD to bless Israel, he went not, as at the other times, to meet with enchantments, but he set his face toward the wilderness. 2. And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel dwelling tribe by tribe; and the spirit of God came upon him. 3. And he took up his parable, and said:

The saying of Balaam the son of Beor, And the saying of the man whose eye is opened;

24. riseth up as a lioness. Figurative description of an invincible hero (Gen. XLIX, 9), and general prediction of the strength that would mark Israel's progress in coming times.

XXIII, 25-XXIV, 2. REMONSTRANCES AND NEW PREPARATIONS

25. neither curse them at all. Balak abandons the hope of a curse, and would be satisfied if the prophet withheld his blessing from Israel. But hoping against hope, he invites Balaam to make a third attempt.

27. unto another place. Change of place, thought Balak, might mean a change of fortune!

28. the top of Peor. A mountain in the neighbourhood of Pisgah (Deut. III, 27-29).

CHAPTER XXIV

1. enchantments. Or, 'omens.' He would no longer, even outwardly, act the sorcerer and retire to a lonely mountain peak for his auguries. He would remain in the presence of Balak, and there and then speak as the Spirit of God moved him. 'He now rose from the character of heathen seer to that of true prophet' (Abarbanel).

his face toward the wilderness. i.e. towards the plain where the Israelites were encamped.

2. tribe by tribe. In orderly encampment. the spirit of God came upon him. His conscience is now stirred to its depths. He no longer addresses Balak, as he did when he announced the results of a divination: he speaks to the future, and to all mankind.

3-9. BALAAM'S THIRD PROPHECY

3. whose eye is opened. See note on next v.

4. The saying of him who heareth the words of God,

Who seeth the vision of the Almighty,
Fallen down, yet with opened eyes:

5. How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, Thy dwellings, O Israel!

6. As valleys stretched out,
As gardens by the river-side;
As aloes planted of the LORD,
As cedars beside the waters;

7. Water shall flow from his branches,
And his seed shall be in many waters;
And his king shall be higher than Agag,
And his kingdom shall be exalted.

8. God who brought him forth out of Egypt

Is for him like the lofty horns of the wild-ox;

He shall eat up the nations that are his adversaries,

And shall break their bones in pieces,
And pierce them through with his arrows.

9. He couched, he lay down as a lion,
And as a lioness; who shall rouse him up?
Blessed be every one that blesseth thee,
And cursed be every one that curseth thee.

10. And Balak's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he smote his hands together; and Balak said unto Balaam: 'I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three

4. fallen down, yet with opened eyes. Overpowered by the inrush of the Divine Spirit, which renders the recipient weak and unable to stand on his feet. It is spiritual ecstasy; when the bodily senses become numbed, and only the eyes of the mind are opened to see the Divine vision and to comprehend the Prophetic message.

5. how goodly are thy tents, O Jacob. He is swept away in rapt admiration of the Israelite encampments and homes arrayed harmoniously and peacefully, a picture of idyllic happiness and prosperity. According to the Rabbinic interpretation, the 'tents' are the 'tents of Torah', and the 'tabernacles' (lit. 'homes') are the Synagogues. There loomed up before Balaam's mental vision the school-houses and synagogues which have ever been the source and secret of Israel's spiritual strength.

6. as valleys. The encampment of Israel is like a series of vast fertile plains, stretching away into the far distance and watered by running streams.

9. lay down as a lion. This figure describes the majesty of Israel in time of peace, as XXIII, 24 described his terrific might in war.

times. 11. Therefore now flee thou to thy place; I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but, lo, the LORD hath kept thee back from honour.' 12. And Balaam said unto Balak: 'Spoke I not also to thy messengers that thou didst send unto me, saying: 13. If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the LORD, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; what the LORD speaketh, that will I speak?*' 14. And now, behold, I go unto my people; come, and I will announce to thee what this people shall do to thy people in the end of days.' 15. And he took up his parable, and said:

Balaam, having disappointed the king three times, is dismissed by him in anger. In parting, Balaam reveals to him the fate in store for Moab.

a star out of Jacob. The reference is probably to King David, the first monarch to reduce Moab to subjection; II Sam. VIII, 2. In the reign of the Emperor Hadrian, this verse was applied to Bar Cozeba, the leader of the last Jewish War of Independence, whose name was consequently changed to Bar Cocheba, 'the Son of a Star.' His most noted follower was Rabbi Akiba, and the entire Jewish Diaspora

18-24. ORACLES CONCERNING THE NATIONS

In prophetic ecstasy, Balaam now sees the foes of Israel fall helpless all around, until the vision fades away in the far horizon of history.

18. shall be a possession. i.e. shall be a conquered state. The reference is probably to David's subjugation of Edom. On this and the succeeding v. cf. The Book of Obadiah, p. 137.

¶ 23. And he took up his parable, and said:

And he also shall come to destruction.

XXV, 1-9. THE SIN OF BAAL-PEOR

Many Israelites accepted the invitation of the women of Moab and Midian to a sacrificial festival, and then joined them in the worship of Baal-Peor that was associated with, and partly consisted in, the most licentious rites. In xxxi, 16, we are told that it was Balaam who counselled the Midianites to take this evil course, in order to encompass the ruin of the Israelites by their own sins. There is nothing improbable in this heathen prophet, when his enthusiasm for Israel and righteousness had died away, sinking back into the old sorcerer, and telling the Moabites and Midianites that, though he could not curse the Israelites, he knew a way whereby the Israelites would curse themselves.

the anger of the LORD was kindled. God sent a plague amongst them.

The moral disintegration of which that shameless action, and at such a time, was a sign—a cynical disregard of law, order and common decency—was part of the plan adopted by the Midianites on the advice of Balaam.

8. into the chamber. The inner division of the large vaulted tents that were used as the apartment of the women.

camp was located in the southern side of the Israelitish encampment, in the vicinity of the Moabites, and hence was more exposed than were the others to the evil Moabitish influences.

CHAPTER V

CAP. V. ה

6. And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many peoples,
As dew from the LORD, as showers upon the grass,
That are not looked for from man,
Nor awaited at the hands of the sons of men.
7. And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the nations, in the midst of many peoples,
As a lion among the beasts of the forest,
As a young lion among the flocks of sheep,

וְהָיָה שְׁאֵרִית יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּקֶרֶב עַמִּים רַבִּים
כַּמָּטָל מֵאֵת יְהוָה כְּרִיבִים עַל־עֵשׂוֹב אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יִקְנֶה לְאִישׁ
7 וְלֹא יִתָּל לְבְנֵי אָדָם: וְהָיָה שְׁאֵרִית יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּקֶרֶב
עַמִּים רַבִּים כַּאֲרִיָּה בְּקִדְמוֹת יָעַר כַּכְפִּיר בְּעֶדְרֵי־צֹאן

Who, if he go through, treadeth down and teareth in pieces,
And there is none to deliver.

The Book of Micah, from which this Haftorah is taken, is one of the so-called Minor Prophets or, more appropriately, the Twelve Prophets (תרי עשר), which at an early date were counted as one book among the twenty-four of Holy Writ. Micah (750-690 B.C.E.) was a contemporary of Isaiah. He was village-born, and spoke as one of the oppressed peasantry, who were ground down by numerous exactions and oppressive treatment on the part of the grandees. He denounced the luxury and degeneracy of city-life, the land-grabbing of the social leaders and the venality of the religious teachers. The chief cities of Judah and Israel, that should have been centres of true religion and righteousness, were in his eyes fountains of irreligion and iniquity. Therefore, this Prophet of the poor proclaimed that, even as the Northern Kingdom fell to the Assyrian, Jerusalem would share the same fate. Nevertheless Micah does not doubt Israel's mission to humanity; and, like Isaiah, he foresees the time when the nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares and learn war no more. He has also given the world the noblest definition of true religion: 'What doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.'

The reference in the Haftorah to Balaam, who is the outstanding figure of the Sedrah, provides the connection between the two.

7-14. ISRAEL AMONG THE NATIONS

6. the remnant of Jacob. The faithful minority in Israel.

as dew. The night-mist in Palestine during the hot months is the only source of life and refreshment for the vegetation, and thus an exquisite image of Divine truth and teaching; Deut. xxxii, 2.

that are not looked for from man, nor awaited at the hands of the sons of men. Israel's message to the world is not from man. Like the dew, it is the gift of heaven.

7. as a lion. To those who oppose Israel's message.

8. Let Thy hand be lifted up above Thine adversaries,
And let all Thine enemies be cut off.

9. And it shall come to pass in that day,
saith the LORD,
That I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee,

And will destroy thy chariots;

10. And I will cut off the cities of thy land,
And will throw down all thy strongholds;

11. And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thy hand;

And thou shalt have no more sooth-sayers;

12. And I will cut off thy graven images and thy pillars out of the midst of thee;
And thou shalt no more worship the work of thy hands.

13. And I will pluck up thy Asherim out of the midst of thee;

And I will destroy thine enemies.

14. And I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the nations,
Because they hearkened not.

CHAPTER VI

Arise, contend thou before the mountains,

And let the hills hear thy voice.

CHAPTER VI

The section following is regarded as dating from the reign of king Manasseh—a period of appalling apostasy, when gruesome heathen rites were followed by prince and people alike. The Prophet enters into an argument with his countrymen, and seeks to wean them from their dreadful delusions as to what constitutes religion and goodness. v. 8, It hath been told thee, O man, what is good: only what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God, has been called the most important utterance in the Prophetic literature. It is in fact an epitome of the whole of Scripture. 'In opposition to the most awful mockery of religion is set the purest expression of it, and out of the corruption of the age there shines like a star the purest light of prophecy' (Montefiore).

1-5. GOD'S GREAT DEEDS ON BEHALF OF ISRAEL, AND THEIR NEGLECT OF HIM

And wherein have I wearied thee?

Testify against Me.

4. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt,

And redeemed thee out of the house of bondage,

And I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5. O My people, remember now what Balak king of Moab devised,

And what Balaam the son of Beor answered him;

From Shittim unto Gilgal,

That ye may know the righteous acts of the LORD.

6. 'Wherewith shall I come before the LORD,

And bow myself before God on high?

Shall I come before Him with burnt-offerings,

With calves of a year old?

7. Will the LORD be pleased with thousands of rams,

With ten thousands of rivers of oil?

Shall I give my first-born for my transgression,

The fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?

3. My people. As a term of affection and endearment. The whole tone of these verses is not that of rebuke but of affectionate appeal. 'God does not mention Israel's sins, but asks only what have been His faults!' (Horton).

what have I done unto thee? What has God done to deserve their neglect—have not His dealings with them been all for their welfare? (Rashi).

4. Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. Moses to instruct you in the Divine laws of righteousness and mercy; Aaron to show the way to atonement; Miriam to teach and guide the women (Targum).

5. devised. i.e. planned, with Balaam. Not by open attacks, but by insidious and pernicious ways Balak sought Israel's destruction.

and what Balaam answered. With blessings of Israel, instead of curses as Balak demanded. Continuing the retrospect of great Divine mercies, Shittim was the last halting-place in the wilderness, Gilgal their first station in the Promised Land. At Shittim the people sinned grievously; nevertheless, God's mercy did not weaken, but helped them to cross Jordan and enter Canaan.

6-7. ISRAEL SPEAKS

6. wherewith shall I come before the LORD. Impressed by these righteous and merciful acts of God, the people anxiously turn to the Prophet with the question 'What does God really require of us? We are willing to give everything—bullocks without number, oil in vast quantities, yea, our children'. But even in their search for God, the penitent people show their utter lack of understanding as to what is pleasing in God's sight.

7. thousands of rams . . . rivers of oil. It is thus not a question of quantity with the deluded people.

the fruit of my body. i.e. my children. 'Can I please God by even sacrificing my children?' Almost a rhetorical question; for human sacrifice was a horrible custom of the Canaanites. Israel's teachers did not rest till the whole people shared their horror of this hideous savage abomination.

8. THE WHOLE DUTY OF MAN

Over against their fantastic and gruesome ways of propitiating God, the Prophet solemnly states the Divine and tender simplicities of God's demands.

8. it hath been told thee. It is no new revelation which he—the Prophet—is announcing; he is merely echoing and restating the message of Abraham, Moses, Samuel, and Elijah.

O man. Heb. adam. The teachings of true religion are of universal appeal, and extend to all the children of men.

Ehrlich points out that adam means 'man', and not 'O man', as the vocative would have to be ha-adam. Consequently, he translates the Prophet's answer to the agonizing cry of the benighted worshipper who asks: 'Shall I offer my child as a sacrifice?' as follows: 'Man hath told thee that this is good: but what does the LORD require of thee? Nothing but to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God.'

to do justly. lit. 'to execute justice'. Justice implies reverence for the personality of every human being as the possessor, by virtue of his humanity, of inalienable rights to life, honour and the fruit of his toil. The whole machinery of the state must be set in motion to protect

8. It hath been told thee, O man, what is good,
And what the LORD doth require of thee:
Only to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.

8 בְּכוֹרֵי שְׁשָׁלִי פָרִי בִטְנִי חֲטָאת נַפְשִׁי: הִגִּיד לְךָ אָדָם מִדֶּטֶב וּמִי יְדוּהָ דִוְרָשׁ מִמֶּךָ כִּי אִם-עֲשׂוֹת מִשְׁפָּט

these inalienable human rights against outrage and injustice. It is heinous sin for any individual by his action to injure the life, honour and possessions of his fellow-man.

to love mercy. Heb. chesed, means kindness to the lowly, needy and miserable, as shown in all charitable acts, especially such as go with personal service. And man is 'to love mercy'. 'In regard to justice, it is sufficient to carry out its behests; but in regard to mercy, the deed alone is insufficient, even when it is the outcome of a clear sense of duty. Love is an essential accompaniment of every deed of mercy' (Hermann Cohen). The Rabbis translate 'to love mercy' by גְּמִילוּת חֲסָדִים—'the bestowal of lovingkindnesses'; i.e. clothing the naked, nursing the sick, comforting those that mourn, burying the dead. When the Temple fell, Johanan ben Zakkai declared: 'We have another means of expiation, equally efficacious, left us; namely, גְּמִילוּת חֲסָדִים, the bestowal of disinterested deeds of lovingkindness upon our fellow-men.' The Rabbis imbued the generations in Israel with a veritable passion for pity; and they denied that anyone who was devoid of pity could be a true descendant of Abraham.

to walk humbly with thy God. In fellowship and communion with God; not ostentatiously, but with inward devotion and noiseless acts of love (Margolis). Rabbi Phinehas ben Yair said: 'Holiness leads to humility; humility leads to the fear of sin; fear of sin leads to saintliness; saintliness leads to the Holy Spirit.' The insistence on humility distinguishes Jewish from Greek ethics. 'Everything heroic in man is insignificant and perishable, and all his wisdom and virtue unable to stand the crucial test, unless they are the fruits of humility. In this there is no exception—neither for any man, any people, or any age' (Hermann Cohen).

In the light of the above interpretation of v. 8, the cardinal virtues of human life are Justice, Mercy and Humility. It is questionable, however, whether to walk humbly is the correct translation of the Heb. הִצְנֹעַ לִכְת. A better and higher sense is obtained if we connect it with the later Hebrew צִנִּיעוּת, which denotes modesty, decency, chastity, personal holiness, purity; and translate the third portion of the Prophet's answer to walk in purity with thy God. The pillars of Religion are accordingly Justice, Mercy and Purity.

'Micah's ideal is not a minimum of religion, it is a maximum. He provides the great standards by which we may test our acting, our thinking, our religious practice. And this is why Micah's pronouncement has about it an air of finality. The Prophet seems to feel that what he is saying is an eternal truth; we seem to feel it as we read it or we hear it read. Men may come and go, but Micah's ideal must live for ever' (Singer).

'Take the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, from twenty years old and upward, by their fathers' houses, all that are able to go forth to war in Israel.' 3. And Moses and Eleazar the priest spoke with them in the plains of Moab by the Jordan at Jericho, saying: 4. These are the families of the Reubenites; and they that were numbered of them were forty and three thousand and seven hundred and thirty. 8. And the sons of Pallu: Eliab. 9. And the sons of Eliab: Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram. These are that Dathan and Abiram, the elect of the congregation, who strove against Moses and against Aaron in the company of Korah, when they strove against the LORD;

16-18. WAR DECLARED AGAINST THE MIDIANITES

17. harass the Midianites. i.e. count them as dangerous enemies and smite them. The Israelites, who had been seduced into sin, had been severely visited by God. And now, as was just, the Midianites too are to be punished; see xxxi, 1. No punishment is meted out to the Moabites—the Rabbis explain—because these had at least the excuse of fear for their infamous conduct towards the Israelites; whereas the Midianites were actuated by pure hatred.

XXV, 19-XXVI. THE SECOND CENSUS

Nearly forty years had passed since the first numbering of the Israelites, and a new census had become a necessity. The Land was shortly to be divided amongst the tribes for an inheritance; and the exact number of fighting men and families had to be known.

19. after the plague. It had seriously diminished the numbers of at least one of the tribes. 'The Divine command to number the Israelites at this juncture may be likened to the case of a shepherd whose flocks have been depleted by an inrush of wolves. When the catastrophe is over, the shepherd lovingly counts his sheep in order to know how many are left alive' (Rashi).

3. spoke with them. i.e. with the responsible chiefs of each tribe.

5-51. The census is taken of all the tribes, with the exception of Levi. The families are named for the most part after the descendants of Jacob enumerated in Gen. xlv, 8-27.

10. became a sign. A warning for all time to others.

These are the families of Naphtali according to their families; and they that were numbered of them were forty and five thousand and four hundred. ¶ 51. These are they that were numbered of the children of Israel, six hundred thousand and a thousand and seven hundred and thirty. *iii. ¶ 52. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 53. To the more thou shalt give the more inheritance, and to the fewer thou shalt give the less inheritance; to each one according to those that were numbered of it shall its inheritance be given. 55. Notwithstanding the land shall be divided by lot; according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit. 56. According to the lot shall their inheritance be divided between the more and the fewer.' ¶ 57. And unto Aaron were born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar. 61. And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange 51. numbered of the children of Israel. The Levites are excluded from this total of 601,730, which is 1,820 less than the total 38 years before. While the nation as a whole remained nearly stationary, the various tribes show many striking variations. Reuben, Simeon, Gad, Ephraim, and Naphtali decreased in numbers.

52-56. CONCERNING THE DIVISION OF THE LAND

The extent of each territory is to be proportionate to the size of the tribe to whom it is allotted.

55. divided by lot. In settling the geographical position of each tribe's inheritance, recourse was had to the 'lot', in order to refer the matter to God, unto Whom alone the land belonged. Thus jealousy and strife among the tribes would be prevented. See XXXIII, 54.

57-62. CENSUS OF THE LEVITES

A separate census was necessary, as the Levites were numbered from the age of one month, whilst the other tribes were counted from 20 years of age, as only to such was a parcel of land to be apportioned.

58. the families of Levi. The families enumerated in this verse are the issue of the three Levitical families, viz. the Gershonites, the Kohathites, and the Merarites, mentioned in the preceding verse. The Libnites were the descendants of the Gershonites (III, 21); the Hebronites were Kohathites (III, 19); and the Mahlites and Mushites, Merarites (III, 20, 33). Two other families, viz. the Shimeites (III, 21) and Uzzielites (III, 27), as well as a few others, are omitted in the present enumeration, possibly because they had died out.

61. offered strange fire. See Lev. x, 1-7.

62. were twenty and three thousand. This increase of only 1,000 over the former census (see III, 39) is surprisingly small. It is probable that the Levites suffered a large diminution in number on account of their participation in the rebellion of Korah.

fire before the LORD. 62. And they that were numbered of them were twenty and three thousand, every male from a month old and upward; for they were not numbered among the children of Israel, because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel. ¶ 63. These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the priest, who numbered the children of Israel in the plains of Moab by the Jordan at Jericho. 64. But among these there was not a man of them that were numbered by Moses and Aaron the priest, who numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai. 65. For the LORD had said of them: 'They shall surely die in the wilderness.' And there was not left a man of them, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

1. Then drew near the daughters of Zelophehad, the son of Hephher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of Manasseh the son of Joseph; and these are the names of his daughters: Mahlah, Noah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Tirzah. 2. And they stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the priest, and before the princes and all the congregation, at the door of the tent of meeting, saying: 3. 'Our father died in the wilderness, and he was not among the company of them that gathered themselves together against the LORD in the company of Korah, but he died in his own sin; and he had no sons. 4. Why should the name of our father be done away from among his family, because he had no son? Give unto us a possession among the brethren of our father.' 5. And Moses brought their cause before the CHAPTER XXVII. LAWS OF INHERITANCE.

JOSHUA THE SUCCESSOR OF MOSES

1-11. THE DAUGHTERS OF ZELOPHEHAD

Landed property was not to be alienated from the family or tribe to which it belonged. However, in the absence of a male heir to an estate, its legal possession by a female heir might on the latter's marriage cause such alienation. Hence the necessity for definite regulation of this question.

3. our father died in the wilderness. Prior to the arrival of the Israelites in the Plains of Moab. he died in his own sin. Like the rest of his generation, upon whom the general sentence was pronounced that they would die in the wilderness; xiv, 29.

4. be done away. Why should our father's rights be done away with because, instead of sons, he left daughters behind him?

among the brethren of our father. Accord unto us the same right of territorial possession as that which applies to the male members of our tribe.

5. before the LORD. He submitted their contention to the judgment of God, presumably by going into the 'tent of meeting' and awaiting the revelation of the Divine Will; Exod. xviii, 19. This is what the daughters of Zelophehad desired. They said: 'God's love is not like the love of a mortal father; the latter prefers his sons to his daughters, but He that created the world extends His love to all His children. His tender mercies are over all His works' (Midrash).

LORD.*iv. 6. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 7. 'The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them. 8. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying: If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter. 9. And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren. 10. And if he have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his father's brethren. 11. And if his father have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it. And it shall be unto the children of Israel a statute of judgment, as the LORD commanded Moses.' ¶ 12. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Get thee up into this mountain of Abarim, and behold the land which I have given unto the children of Israel. 13. And when thou hast seen it, thou also shalt be gathered unto thy people, as

7. the daughters of Zelophehad speak right. 'Happy is that mortal, whose words are acknowledged to be true by God' (Rashi).

8. if a man die, and have no son. A general statement of the law of inheritance is now promulgated. Land was in every case so to pass that the name and fame of the deceased might be, as far as possible, perpetuated.

11. statute of judgment. A fixed and authoritative custom; see further xxxvi.

The Order of Inheritance as developed by later Jewish Law is as follows: (1) sons and their descendants; (2) daughters and their descendants; (3) the father; (4) brothers and their descendants; (5) sisters and their descendants; (6) the father's father; (7) the father's brothers and their descendants; (8) the father's sisters and their descendants; (9) the great-grandfather and his collateral descendants; and so on. To this list, the Rabbis added another legal heir, the husband. Each of the sons of the deceased receives an equal share of the estate of his father or of his mother, except the first-born of the father, who receives a double share. In the case of the death of a son during his father's life, his children inherit his portion of the estate. The Rabbis, while denying the daughters a share in the inheritance where there are sons, still make ample provision for their maintenance and support, as long as they remain unmarried. The cost and provision of such maintenance constitute the first charge upon the estate of the deceased. In case the estate was small, the principle was laid down: 'The daughters must be supported, even if the sons are reduced to beggary.'

12-23. JOSHUA APPOINTED SUCCESSOR OF MOSES

Moses is commanded to view the Land of Promise, which he may not enter, and is given an intimation of his approaching death. This command is repeated in Deut. xxxii, and its fulfilment related in xxxiv, the last chapter of the Torah. In the interval, Moses delivered the laws contained in the remaining chapters of Numbers and the addresses that constitute the Book of Deuteronomy—besides the sacred war against Midian. The Midrash accounts for the insertion here of his summons to die in the following way: Moses had just received the Divine instructions concerning the ways in which the Promised Land was to be distributed amongst the tribes, and he said to himself: 'Peradventure I too may be allotted a share. Peradventure the Divine decree forbidding me to enter the Promised Land has now been revoked.' But God said unto him, 'My decree stands unchanged.'

12. mountain of Abarim. The top of Pisgah, one of the peaks of Mt. Nebo.

and behold the land. Moses had already been told that he should not enter the Promised Land (xx, 12), yet he is allowed the consolation of seeing it with his eyes before his death. Furthermore, Moses was to see how near Israel was now to the Promised Land, and hence his labours had not been in vain.

13. As Aaron thy brother. The Rabbis explain this to mean that like Aaron he was to die 'by the mouth of the LORD', i.e. his also would be 'death by a Divine kiss'.

Aaron thy brother was gathered; 14. because ye rebelled against My commandment in the wilderness of Zin, in the strife of the congregation, to sanctify Me at the waters before their eyes.'—These are the waters of Meribath-kadesh in the wilderness of Zin.—15. And Moses spoke unto the LORD, saying: 16. 'Let the LORD, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, 17. who may go out before them, and who may come in before them, and who may lead them out, and who may bring them in; that the congregation of the LORD be not as sheep which have no shepherd.' 18. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is spirit, and lay thy hand upon him; 19. and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation; and give him a charge in their sight. 20. And thou shalt put of thy honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may hearken. 21. And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall inquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the LORD;

14. because ye rebelled. See on xx, 12, 13.

15. Moses spoke unto the LORD. Rashi remarks, 'This verse tells us the praise of righteous men, who at the hour of their departure from the world abandon all thought of their own wants and think only of the wants of the community.' The solicitude of Moses for the appointment of his successor is singularly and touchingly disinterested.

16. the God of the spirits of all flesh. 'God, Who knows the varying spirits of men, and Who therefore knows what type of spirit is required in the man who is to fill the place of Moses' (Ibn Ezra). This same phrase occurs in xvi, 22. According to the Midrash, Moses prayed: 'Sovereign of the universe, Thou knowest the minds of all men, and how the mind of one man differs from that of another. Appoint over them a leader who will be able to bear with the differing minds of every one of Thy children.'

17. go out . . . come in. Who combines the capacity of leadership in warfare with the vigorous prosecution of the general duties that devolve upon the head of a nation.

lay thine hand upon him. Heb. וסמכת את ידך עליו, a symbolic action to show the transference of his authority to Joshua. From this Heb. word is derived the noun Semicha, the act of admission in the Talmudic age to the rights and duties of a Rabbi—ordination. In modern times, when ordination in the olden sense has lapsed, the certificate of admission to the Rabbinate is still called Semicha, as well as by the more general designation Hattarath Horaah—'permission to render decisions on ritual questions.'

19. give him a charge. i.e. instruct him publicly in the duties appertaining to his great and sacred office.

20. of thy honour upon him. i.e. Moses was to confer honour and dignity upon Joshua publicly; so that, when the people saw the high esteem in which he was held by Moses, they would feel it incumbent upon them to honour him likewise, as well as to obey him. The lit. translation is 'put some of thy majesty upon him', as no man was worthy to receive the whole of Moses' majesty.

21. stand before Eleazar the priest. Unlike Moses, he was not to receive Divine communications directly, but indirectly through the medium of Eleazar, the High Priest, after the latter's consultation with God by means of the Urim and Thummim; see Exod. xxvii, 30.

And Moses did as the LORD commanded him; and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation. 23. And he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the LORD spoke by the hand of Moses.*v.

CHAPTER XXVIII

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2. Command the children of Israel, and say unto them: ¶ My food which is presented unto Me for offerings made by fire, of a sweet savour unto Me, shall ye observe to offer unto Me in its due season. 3. And thou shalt say unto them: This is the offering made by fire which ye shall bring unto the LORD: he-lambs of the first year without blemish, two day by day, for a continual burnt-offering. 4. The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou offer at dusk; 5. and the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meal-offering, mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil. 6. It is a continual burnt-offering, which was offered in mount Sinai, for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD. 7. And the drink-offering thereof shall be the fourth part of a hin for the one lamb; in the holy place shalt thou pour out a drink-offering of strong drink unto the LORD. 8. And the other lamb shalt thou

23. laid his hands. Moses is Divinely bidden to lay his hand upon Joshua (v. 18). But Moses goes beyond the Divine command, and lays both his hands upon him. So great was his solicitude for the usefulness and success of the man who was to succeed him (Midrash).

CHAPTERS XXVIII AND XXIX

PUBLIC DAILY AND FESTIVAL OFFERINGS

Israel had once more been numbered, and a Leader selected for the conquest of the Land. In this and the following chapter, we have a detailed description of the public sacrifices to be brought at the Sanctuary, whether in the daily offering or on each of the Festivals. The sacrifices in these chapters may be regarded as supplementary to Lev. xxiii. The offerings are of four kinds, viz. burnt-offerings, meal-offerings, drink-offerings, and sin-offerings.

XXVIII, 2-8. DAILY OFFERINGS

The daily continual (Heb. tamid) offering was in later times called 'the Tamid'. Offered throughout the year, it was 'the centre and core of public worship in Judaism' (Kennedy).

Ye shall offer these beside the burnt-offering of the morning, which is for a continual burnt-offering. 24. After this manner ye shall offer daily, for seven days, the food of the offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD; it shall be offered beside the continual burnt-offering, and the drink-offering thereof. 25. And on the seventh day ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. ¶ 26. Also in the day of the first-fruits, when ye bring a new meal-offering unto the LORD in your feast of weeks, ye shall have a holy convocation: ye shall do no manner of servile work; 27. but ye shall present a burnt-offering for a sweet savour unto the LORD: two young bullocks, one ram, seven he-lambs of the first year; 28. and their meal-offering, fine flour mingled with oil, three tenth parts for each bullock, two tenth parts for the one ram, 29. a several tenth part for every lamb of the seven lambs; 30. one he-goat, to make atonement for you. 31. Beside the continual burnt-offering, and the meal-offering thereof, ye shall offer them—they shall be unto you without blemish—and their drink-offerings.

CHAPTER XXIX

CHAPTER XVIII

46. And the hand of the LORD was on Elijah; and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel.

CHAPTER XIX

1. And Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal how he had slain all the prophets with the sword. 2. Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying: 'So let the gods do [to me], and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time.' 3. And when he saw that, he arose, and went for his life, and came to Beer-sheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his servant there. 4. But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a broom-tree; and he requested for himself that he might die; and said: 'It is enough; now, O LORD, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers.' 5. And he lay down and slept under a broom-tree; and, behold, an angel touched him, and said unto him: 'Arise and eat.' 6. And he looked, and, behold, there was at his head a cake baked on the hot stones, and a cruse of water. And he did eat and drink, and laid

The zeal of Phinehas and the zeal of Elijah form the connecting link between the Sedrah and Haftorah.

Under the evil influence of Jezebel, wife of Ahab, the people had been led astray to the worship of Baal. Ahab was a generous ruler, but weak-willed and dominated by his Phoenician wife, who had pursued the prophets of God with murderous cruelty. It was high treason to proclaim the God of Israel. Against this dark setting, the figure of Elijah stands out in all its greatness. He meets and confronts the king and queen, and fearlessly pronounces the doom that will follow on their apostasy and outrage of justice. On Mount Carmel, though he is alone and defenceless, his Titanic personality overawes the multitude. He brings the people back to God in an overwhelming act of surrender. Their confession, Adonay hu ha-elohim, 'The LORD, He is God,' has become, alongside the declaration of the Unity, Israel's watchword. The events of the Haftorah follow immediately after that historic scene on Mount Carmel.

Elijah's triumph was brief. Jezebel lost no time in informing him that she was neither converted nor dismayed, and that she would take her revenge on Elijah.

46. the hand of the LORD. A phrase to denote that the Prophet acted under a Divine impulse.

take away my life. Reaction following the great scene on Mount Carmel, and disappointment at its apparent failure, induced a mood of crushing despondency. A sense of the dreariness of a wasted life overspread his soul. 'Like a warrior who has waged all day an unequal strife and at the last received a mortal stroke, he retires from the field to die alone; and when the languor is falling on him, he says, "Now, O LORD, take away my life"' (Davidson).

And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meal forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God. ¶ 9. And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and He said unto him: 'What doest thou here, Elijah?' 10. And he said: 'I have been very jealous for the LORD, the God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken Thy covenant, thrown down Thine altars, and slain Thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.' 11. And He said: 'Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the LORD.' And, behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and broke in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake; 12. and after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice. 13. 7. too great for thee. i.e. the journey thou wishest to take (Altschul); suggesting that Mount Horeb was Elijah's goal when he set out on his flight.

9. unto a cave. lit. 'into the cave'; i.e. the cleft of rock in which Moses was placed when God passed by (Kimchi). The parallel between Moses and Elijah is very real. These two names stand out pre-eminently in Israel's story; both of them endowed above all other men with the power of the Spirit and Titanic force of character.

what doest thou here, Elijah? Thy place is not here in the silent empty wilderness, but among men, to fight evil and encourage the faithful.

10. jealous. Zealous.

I only, am left. As is more clear below in v. 18, Elijah's mood of despondency and despair has led him to exaggerate the darkness of the picture, and to be unjust to the 7,000 men in Israel who had not bent the knee to Baal.

11-14. THE MANIFESTATION OF THE DIVINE PRESENCE

This narrative is one of the profoundest in Scripture. In a magnificent acted parable, Elijah is taught the error of his methods.

12. a still small voice. Or, 'a sound of gentle stillness.' The wind, fire and earthquake are often spoken of as heralds of God (Exod. xix, 18, Psalms xviii, 8-14); and while they are His agents and subservient to His will, they do not disclose Him so perfectly as the calm which follows the storm. The vision is in the nature of rebuke to the impetuosity of Elijah, and the passion of despair that brought him to this place. He must not imagine that good is vanquished, because evil is mighty, loud, and triumphant. And evil cannot most successfully be overcome by storm and fire. Rather is the Spirit of God manifested, and the purpose of God furthered, in that which is represented by the still small voice; i.e. the gentle operation of spiritual forces, the calmness and patience of quiet and indomitable faith, and the persistent work which is the fruit of that patience and faith.

To later generations, Elijah was not the Prophet of storm and fire, but the healer and helper, the reconciler and peace-bringer. 'He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers,' said Malachi. 'Elijah will come to bring agreement where there is matter for dispute: to make peace in the world' (Mishnah).

13. wrapped his face in his mantle. It is the 'still small voice' that brings home to the Prophet the sense of the Presence of God.

Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entrance of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said: 'What doest thou here, Elijah?' 14. And he said: 'I have been very jealous for the LORD, the God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken Thy covenant, thrown down Thine altars, and slain Thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.' ¶ 15. And the LORD said unto him: 'Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus; and when thou comest, thou shalt anoint Hazael to be king over Aram; 16. and Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel; and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room. 17. And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth from the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay; and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay. 18. Yet will I leave seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.' ¶ 19. So he departed thence, and found Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was plowing, with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth; and Elijah passed over unto him, and cast his mantle upon him. 20. And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said: 'Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee.' And he said unto him: 'Go back; for what have I done to thee?' 21. And he returned from following him, and took the yoke of oxen, and slew them, and boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.

CHAPTER XXX. CONCERNING VOWS

This chapter emphasizes the solemnity and binding character of religious vows, and in what circumstances vows of women can be annulled by the father or husband.

2-3. SACREDNESS OF VOWS

3. voweth a vow. Heb. neder; denotes a solemn promise to consecrate something to God, or do something in His service or His honour. A vow was usually made in a time of distress, and its motive was the desire to secure Divine help; cf. Gen. xxviii, 20-22. Or it might be an expression of gratitude for Divine aid received. 'The manifest emotion with which many a singer in the Psalter records his gratitude to God as he pays his vows, shows that they must often have represented a warm and genuine religious experience' (McFadyen).

a bond. Heb. issar. In contrast to neder, this may be called a negative vow: a self-imposed pledge to abstain from doing or enjoying something that is perfectly allowable.

break his word. lit. 'profane his word'. The violation of a vow or 'bond' is at once an offence before God, and an act of profanation of man's personality.

according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth. There is a tendency in human nature to forget in health and security the vows that were made in sickness and danger; but the rule remains.

Whatever a man has promised unto God, that he must fulfil.

4-6. VOWS OF A YOUNG UNMARRIED WOMAN

After laying down the general principle, Scripture proceeds to qualify it in three special cases of vows made by women under authority; viz. (a) women before marriage; (b) married women; (c) women after marriage, i.e. widows and divorced women.

4. in her youth. A young unmarried woman still under her father's guardianship; i.e. till the age of adolescence.

5. holdeth his peace. The father's silence amounts to a ratification of the vow.

6. disallow her. If the father verbally disapproves of her vow on the day he hears of it, such disapproval amounts to a veto and the vow becomes annulled; see on v. 13.

7-9. CASE OF A MARRIED WOMAN WHO MADE THE VOW WHILST SINGLE

7. while her vows are upon her. This is the second of the three afore-mentioned cases; viz. the vow of a woman who marries whilst under a vow made by her before marriage, whether during the stage of adolescence and with the requisite approval of the father, or when she was a full-grown woman and outside the range of her father's veto.

it be that he heareth it, and hold his peace at her; then her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand. 9. But if her husband disallow her in the day that he heareth it, then he shall make void her vow which is upon her, and the clear utterance of her lips, wherewith she hath bound her soul; and the LORD will forgive her. 10. But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced, even every thing wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand against her. 11. And if a woman vowed in her husband's house, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath, 12. and her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and disallowed her not, then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand. 13. But if her husband make them null and void in the day that he heareth them, then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips, whether it were her vows, or the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and the LORD will forgive her. 14. Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may let it stand, or her husband may make it void. 15. But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day, then he causeth all her vows to stand, or all her bonds, which are upon her; he hath let them stand, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard them. 16. But if he shall make them null and void after that he hath heard them, then he shall bear her iniquity. 17. These are the statutes, which the Lord commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between a father and his daughter, being in her youth, in her father's house.*ii.

CHAPTER XXXI

THE WAR AGAINST THE MIDIANITES

In xxv, 16-18, Moses is bidden to smite the Midianites because they had enticed the Israelites to the licentious and idolatrous worship of Baal-Peor. In the present chapter, he is ordered

Midianites; afterward shalt thou be gathered unto thy people.' 3. And Moses spoke unto the people, saying: 'Arm ye men from among you for the war, that they may go against Midian, to execute the LORD's vengeance on Midian. 4. Of every tribe a thousand, throughout all the tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war.' 5. So there were delivered, out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every tribe, twelve thousand armed for war. 6. And Moses sent them, a thousand of every tribe, to the war, them and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, to the war, with the holy vessels and the trumpets for the alarm in his hand. 7. And they warred against Midian, as the LORD commanded Moses; and they slew every male. 8. And they slew the kings of Midian with the rest of their slain: Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, the five kings of Midian; Balaam also the son of Beor they slew with the sword. 9. And the children of Israel took captive the women of Midian and their little ones; and all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods, they took for a prey. 10. And all their cities in the places wherein they dwelt, and all their encampments, they burnt with fire. 11. And they took all the spoil, and all the prey, both of man and of beast. 12. And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, unto Moses, and unto Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the camp, unto the plains of Moab, which are to carry out the command forthwith; and we are given full details of the campaign.

The war against the Midianites presents peculiar difficulties. We are no longer acquainted with the circumstances that justified the ruthlessness with which it was waged, and therefore we cannot satisfactorily meet the various objections that have been raised in that connection. 'Perhaps the recollection of what took place after the Indian Mutiny, when Great Britain was in the same temper, may throw light on this question. The soldiers then, bent on punishing the cruelty and lust of the rebels, partly in patriotism, partly in revenge, set mercy altogether aside' (Expositor's Bible). The Midianites affected were only the clans that lived in the neighbourhood of Moab. This accounts for the persistence of Midianites in later periods of Israelite history.

3. execute the LORD'S vengeance. The preceding v. refers to Israel's vengeance on Midian; this v. speaks of God's vengeance on Midian. Both mean the same thing. The cause of Israel is the cause of God. 'Vengeance' is here used in the broad sense of retributory punishment.

6. Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest. Phinehas, says Rashi, was especially qualified for this task by the part he played in the Zimri incident (xxv, 14, 15). His role was that of the priest referred to in Deut. xx, 2, whose duty it was to go before the Israelites in battle.

by the Jordan at Jericho. *¹¹¹ (*¹¹²). ¶ 13. And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp. 14. And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host, the captains of thousands and the captains of hundreds, who came from the service of the war. 15. And Moses said unto them: 'Have ye saved all the women alive? 16. Behold, these caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, to revolt so as to break faith with the LORD in the matter of Peor, and so the plague was among the congregation of the LORD. 17. Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him. 18. But all the women children, that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves. 19. And encamp ye without the camp seven days; whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify yourselves on the third day and on the seventh day, ye and your captives. 20. And as to every garment, and all that is made of skin, and all work of goats' hair, and all things made of wood, ye shall purify.' ¶ 21. And Eleazar the priest said unto the men of war that went to the battle: 'This is the statute of the law which the LORD hath commanded Moses: 22. Howbeit the gold, and the silver, the brass, the iron, the tin, and the lead, 23. every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make to go through the fire, and it shall be clean; nevertheless it shall be purified with the water of sprinkling; and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make to go through the water. 24. And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterward ye may come into the camp.' *¹⁴. ¶ 25. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 26. 'Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beast,

And of the children of Israel's half, thou shalt take one drawn out of every fifty, of the persons, of the beeves, of the asses, and of the flocks, even of all the cattle, and give them unto the Levites, that keep the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD.' 31. And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the LORD commanded Moses. 32. Now the prey, over and above the booty which the men of war took, was six hundred thousand and seventy thousand and five thousand sheep, 33. and threescore and twelve thousand beeves, 34. and threescore and one thousand asses, 35. and thirty and two thousand persons in all, of the women that had not known man by lying with him. 36. And the half, which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thousand and thirty thousand and seven thousand and five hundred sheep. 37. And the LORD's tribute of the sheep was six hundred and threescore and fifteen. 38. And the beeves were thirty and six thousand, of which the LORD's tribute was threescore and twelve. 39. And the asses were thirty thousand and five hundred, of which the LORD's tribute was threescore and one. 40. And the persons were sixteen thousand, of whom the LORD's tribute was thirty and two persons. 41. And Moses gave the tribute, which was set apart for the LORD, unto Eleazar the priest, as the LORD commanded Moses.*v. 42. And of the children of Israel's half, which Moses divided off from the men that warred—43. now the congregation's half was three hundred thousand and thirty thousand and seven thousand and five hundred sheep, 44. and thirty and six thousand beeves, 45. and thirty thousand and five hundred asses, 46. and sixteen thousand persons—47. even of the children of Israel's half, Moses took one drawn out of every fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them unto the Levites, that kept the charge of the taber-

And we have brought the LORD's offering, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, armlets, and bracelets, signet-rings, ear-rings, and girdles, to make atonement for our souls before the LORD.' 51. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels. 52. And all the gold of the gift that they set apart for the LORD, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels.—53. For the men of war had taken booty, every man for himself.—54. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tent of meeting, for a memorial for the children of Israel before the LORD. *v1 (111).

TRIBES REMAINING EAST OF THE JORDAN

The tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh desire to settle east of the Jordan. They protest their willingness to accompany the other tribes until Canaan is conquered.

Eastern or Transjordanic Palestine is 150 miles long; its breadth varies from thirty to eighty miles. It is throughout over 2,000 feet above sea-level, with a temperate climate, a land of health and fertility. The middle region—Gilead—bore perfume and medicine for the whole Eastern world. Gilead is covered with forests; and its valleys, by orchards and vineyards. Even more famous was its pasture. 'Flocks and pastures have ever been the wealth, the charm, the temptation of Eastern Palestine—a land of opulence and insecurity' (George Adam Smith).

1. the land of Jazer. Referred to in xxi, 32 as having been captured by Moses from the Amorites.

Gilead. Gilead sometimes stands for the whole territory east of the Jordan (e.g. in v. 29) that was occupied by the Israelites. Sometimes, however, as in v. 39 f, it denotes only the land north of the river Jabbok, as far as the river Jarmuk.

Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Sebam, and Nebo, and Beon, 4. the land which the LORD smote before the congregation of Israel, is a land for cattle, and thy servants have cattle.' 5. And they said: 'If we have found favour in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession; bring us not over the Jordan.' 6. And Moses said unto the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben: 'Shall your brethren go to the war, and shall ye sit here? 7. And wherefore will ye turn away the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the LORD hath given them? 8. Thus did your fathers, when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to see the land. 9. For when they went up unto the valley of Eshcol, and saw the land, they turned away the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the LORD had given them. 10. And the LORD's anger was kindled in that day, and He swore, saying: 11. Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I swore unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; because they have not wholly followed Me; 12. save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenizzite, and Joshua the son of Nun; because they have wholly followed the LORD. 13. And the LORD's anger was kindled against Israel, and He made them wander to and fro in the wilderness forty years, until all the generation, that had done evil in the sight of the LORD, was consumed. 14. And, behold, ye are risen up in your fathers' stead, a brood of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the LORD toward Israel. 15. For if ye turn away from after Him, He will yet again leave them in the wilderness; and so ye will destroy all this people.' ¶ 16. And they came near unto him, and said: 'We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones; 17. but we ourselves will be ready armed to go before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place; and our little ones shall dwell in the fortified cities because of the inhabitants of the land. 18. For we will not inherit with them on the other side of the Jordan, and forward, because our inheritance is fallen to us on this side of the Jordan eastward.' *vii (iv). ¶ 20. And Moses said unto them: 'If ye will do this thing: if ye will arm yourselves to go before the LORD to the war, 21. and every armed man of you will pass over the Jordan before the LORD, until He hath driven out His enemies from before Him, 22. and the land be subdued before the LORD, and ye return afterward; then ye shall be clear before the LORD, and before Israel, and this land shall be unto you for a possession before the LORD. 23. But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the LORD; and know ye your sin which will find you. 24. Build you cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth.' ¶ 25. And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben spoke unto Moses, saying: 'Thy servants will do as my lord commandeth. 26. Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the cities of Gilead; 27. but thy servants will pass over, every man that is armed for war, before the LORD to battle, as my lord saith.' ¶ 28. So Moses gave charge concerning them to Eleazar the priest, and to Joshua the son of Nun, and to the heads of the fathers' houses of the tribes of the children of Israel. 29. And Moses said unto them: 'If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass with you over the Jordan, every man that is armed to battle, before the LORD, and the land shall be subdued before you, then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession; 30. but if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan.' 31. And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben answered, saying: 'As the LORD hath said unto thy servants, so will we do. 32. We will pass over armed before the LORD

22. clear before the LORD, and before Israel. The idea contained in this phrase became a general moral maxim among the Rabbis. 'Man should be clear not only before God but also in the estimation of his fellowmen.' It is not enough that a man's conscience is pure. He must strive to make even his outward actions irreproachable and above suspicion. A man should avoid doing things that appear wrong, משום מראית עין.

23. And know ye your sin—i.e. the punishment for your sin, which will find you. The rendering of the RV, which has passed into a proverbial expression in the English language, is based upon an ancient notion that sin, like a curse, has, so to speak, an individual existence. The sinner cannot escape its consequence; it will seek and find him out.

30. among you in the land of Canaan. They would then be forced to evacuate their possession in Gilead, and fight for territory on the west of Jordan.

33. half-tribe of Manasseh. The sub-tribes of Manasseh were pure warriors, who had taken the most prominent part in the conquest of the Gileadite districts. The word 'half' in the phrase 'half-tribe of Manasseh' is not to be taken in a precise arithmetical sense. It denotes a section. According to xxvi, 29–32 there were eight sub-tribes of Manasseh, six of whom were allotted territory on the west of Jordan.

CHAPTER I

This is the first of the three 'Haftorahs of Rebuke' that precede the Ninth of Ab, the anniversary of the Destruction of Jerusalem.

Jeremiah was born of a priestly family about the year 650 B.C.E. His Prophetic call came to him in the reign of Josiah, king of Judah, in the year 626. He witnessed the fall of Nineveh and the annihilation of the Assyrian Empire the thirteenth year of his reign. 3. It came also in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah, king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah, king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

¶ 4. And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying:

5. Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee,

And before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee;

I have appointed thee a prophet unto the nations.

in 606; the death of Josiah, Judah's righteous king, in 605; and lived through the two sieges of Jerusalem in 597 and 586, with the attendant destruction of the Jewish state and the consequent transportation of the greater portion of his people to 'the rivers of Babylon'. We last hear of him in Egypt, carried thither by fugitive Judeans; and legend relates that he died a martyr's death at the hands of his brethren. Whatever basis there may be for this legend, it is but too true that Jeremiah the Prophet lived a martyr's life. For the greater part of his career, he was one man against the whole nation. By nature timid and shrinking, he proclaimed the Divine message fearlessly to ruler, noble, priest and people alike.

Jeremiah is the spiritual heir of the great Prophets that preceded him. He combines the tenderness of Hosea, the fearlessness of Amos, and the stern majesty of Isaiah. Like them, he is first of all a preacher of repentance; threatening judgment and, at the same time, holding out the promise of restoration. But even in his darkest moments, when he utterly despairs of the future of the Jewish state, his faith and trust in God do not forsake him. 'Though all be lost,' he seems to say to Israel, 'turn to God in perfect trust, call Him your Father, and His love will regenerate you.' To Jeremiah, Religion is an inward thing, a personal relation between the individual and his Maker, a relation that is untouched by national prosperity and can only be deepened by national ruin. 'The history of Israel begins with the migration of Abraham from the Euphrates to the Jordan; its classical period closes with the compulsory migration of the exiles from the Jordan back to the Euphrates. If Israel had been merely a race like others it would never have survived this fearful catastrophe, and would have disappeared in the Babylonian exile' (Cornill). That it did not so disappear was due to the activity of two men—Jeremiah and his disciple Ezekiel. Jeremiah's message to his despairing brethren in Babylon, 'Seek the welfare of the city wherein ye dwell, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in its welfare shall be your peace,' has been of incalculable influence in the civic life of all Jews throughout the world.

land of Benjamin. This hilly territory was 26 miles by 12 miles, about the size of Middlesex.

2. Josiah. He reigned from 626–605. He put down the idolatries, abominations and immoralities that had been introduced by Manasseh, and led a great religious revival in Israel. Unfortunately Judah's position between two great empires, Egypt and Babylon, was a most precarious one. Josiah took the side of Babylon, and was slain in the battle of Megiddo by Pharaoh Necho. Jeremiah and the whole people mourned for him 'as one mourneth for an only son'.

3. Zedekiah. The youngest son of Josiah, and the last king of Judah. He was well-disposed, but weak and devoid of any true religious zeal. In the eleventh year of his reign, Jerusalem was taken and burned by the Babylonians. He was blinded, taken to Babylon, and died there in prison.

His choice for his great work was no haphazard selection. God had planned his life, even before he was born. The riddle and purpose of existence were thus solved for Jeremiah' (Duhm).

unto the nations. As Amos and Isaiah before him, but more so. Israel was now caught in the current of universal politics, and its career was inextricably bound up with Assyria, Babylon and Egypt (Peake).

6. Then said I: 'Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child.' 7. But the LORD said unto me:

Say not: I am a child;

For to whomsoever I shall send thee thou shalt go,

And whatsoever I shall command thee thou shalt speak.

8. Be not afraid of them;

For I am with thee to deliver thee, Saith the LORD.

9. Then the LORD put forth His hand, and touched my mouth; and the LORD said unto me:

Behold, I have put My words in thy mouth;

6. I am a child. Not necessarily in years. The Heb. word has a wider sense, indicating a child in fitness or experience. These words express the shrinking self-distrust of a sensitive nature, and the humility that characterizes truly great minds; cf. the reply of Moses in Ex. iv, 10.

This assurance at the outset of his career, that God would surely execute His purpose, was to steady him, when in the course of his ministry he found himself doomed again and again to disappointment.

Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee; be not dismayed at them, lest I dismay thee before them. 18. In a land that was not sown.

how thou wentest after Me. It was only such love, thought the Prophet, that could account for Israel's willingness to forget the grandeur of Egypt, and brave the terrors of the Wilderness—its hardships, perils and treacherous foes. It was only such love that could cause them gladly to follow the call of God into the Unknown, on a novel quest of the Divine, that was to fill man's earthly existence with new hopes; on an unheard-of adventure in Religion, that was to turn the current of history and humanize mankind.

(CHAPTERS XXXIII-XXXV)

XXXIII, 1-49. ITINERARY FROM EGYPT TO THE JORDAN

This chapter supplies us with the stages of the journey of the Israelites from Egypt to the Plains of Moab. It was written to serve as a memorial not only of historical interest but of deep religious significance. Every journey and every halting-place had its suggestions for the instruction, admonition, or encouragement of Israel. The Midrash says, 'It may be likened unto a king who had taken his ailing son to a distant place to be cured. On the return journey, the king would lovingly recount to the lad all the experiences they went through at each of their halting-places. "At this spot we slept; at that, we had a cool resting-place from the heat; at the other, you were overcome with pains in the head!" Israel is God's child, upon whom He bestows compassion, even as a father bestows compassion on his son.'

2. goings forth. i.e. each place from which they went forth to proceed to another place.

in the sight of all the Egyptians. The departure was public. There was nothing clandestine or ignominious in the way in which they left the land of their oppressors.

4. burying. Israel was joyous and strong, whilst his erstwhile master, Egypt, was bent low and broken.

upon their gods. See on Exod. xii, 12 for the meaning of this phrase. The false deities of Egypt were made contemptible in the eyes of their worshippers.

5-15. These verses detail the stages of the journey from Rameses in Egypt to the Wilderness of Sinai. This is related in Exod. xii, 37 and xix, 2. Two stations, Dophkah and Alush, are not mentioned in Exodus.

ness of Sin. 12. And they journeyed from the wilderness of Sin, and pitched in Dophkah. 13. And they journeyed from Dophkah, and pitched in Alush. 14. And they journeyed from Alush, and pitched in Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink. 15. And they journeyed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderness of Sinai. 16. And they journeyed from the wilderness of Sinai, and pitched in Kibroth-hattaavah. 17. And they journeyed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and pitched in Hazeroth. 18. And they journeyed from Hazeroth, and pitched in Rithmah. 19. And they journeyed from Rithmah, and pitched in Rimmon-perez. 20. And they journeyed from Rimmon-perez, and pitched in Libnah. 21. And they journeyed from Abronah, and pitched in Ezion-geber. 36. And they journeyed from Ezion-geber, and pitched in the wilderness of Zin—the same is Kadesh. 37. And they journeyed from Kadesh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom.—38. And Aaron the priest went up into mount Hor at the commandment of the LORD, and died there, in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fifth month, on the first day of the month. 39. And Aaron was a hundred and twenty and three years old when he died in mount Hor. 40. And the Canaanite, the king of

of the temporary landmarks was forgotten (Dummelow).

And ye shall drive out the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein; for unto you have I given the land to possess it. 54. And ye shall inherit the land by lot according to your families—to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer thou shalt give the less inheritance; wheresoever the lot falleth to any man, that shall be his; according to the tribes of your fathers shall ye inherit. 55. But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you, then shall those that ye let remain of them be as thorns in your eyes, and as pricks in your sides, and they shall harass you in the land wherein ye dwell. 56. And it shall come to pass, that as I thought to do unto them, so will I do unto you.'

their high places. The altars and sanctuaries erected on hills and natural mounds, as was the practice of the Canaanites.

Everything that savoured of idolatry was to be swept away, as being offensive to God and religiously perilous to the Israelites.

53. unto you have I given the land. The Land is not man's, but God's. 'The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof' (Ps. xxiv, 1). God has a right to do what He will with His own.

54. by lot. The system of dividing land by lot persisted down to Roman times. It was in practice in Palestine in the days of R. José, a tanna of the second century (contra Kennett, Schweich Lectures 1931, p. 76).

55. as pricks in your sides. A source of continual and unabated vexation.

'Command the children of Israel, and say unto them: When ye come into the land of Canaan, this shall be the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan according to the borders thereof. 3. Thus your south side shall be from the wilderness of Zin close by the side of Edom, and your south border shall begin at the end of the Salt Sea eastward; 4. and your border shall turn about southward of the ascent of Akrabbim, and pass along to Zin; and the goings out thereof shall be southward of Kadesh-barnea; and it shall go forth to Hazar-addar, and pass along to Azmon; 5. and the border shall turn about from Azmon unto the Brook of Egypt, and the goings out thereof shall be at the Sea. 6. And for the western border, ye shall have the Great Sea for a border; this shall be your west border. 7. And this shall be your north border: from the Great Sea ye shall mark

CHAPTER XXXIV

XXXIV, 1-29. THE BOUNDARIES OF THE HOLY LAND

This chapter indicates the ideal limits of the Holy Land. 'These, the providential (Gen. xv, 18, Ex. xxiii, 31) and in some sense natural, boundaries of the territory of Israel, were only attained for a brief period during the reigns of David and Solomon' (Dummelow). Great uncertainty exists in regard to many of the geographical terms, especially those connected with the Northern border. S. H. Isaacs, The True Boundaries of the Holy Land, Chicago, 1917, is a valuable contribution to the solution of a difficult problem, and has been followed in these comments.

2. shall fall unto you. This expression is used because the Land was to be divided by lot.

3-5. THE SOUTHERN BOUNDARY

Starting from the southern extremity of the Dead Sea, it proceeded in a S.W. direction to the region south of Kadesh-barnea; thence to the Brook of Egypt; and then north-westwards to the Mediterranean.

3. by the side of Edom. Along the western border of Edom.

south side. i.e. your southern boundary.
the Salt Sea. The Dead Sea.
eastward. On its eastern end.

4. of Akrabbim. lit. 'of scorpions'; one of the passes that lead to the northern slope of the Wady-el-Fikreh.

Kadesh-barnea. The modern Ain Quadis. 'Then your frontier shall turn south of the Scorpion Pass and along to Zin, coming out south of Kadesh-barnea, stretching to Hazar-addar, and along to Azmon' (Moffatt).

5. Brook of Egypt. The Wady-el-Arish, flowing into the Mediterranean about 20 miles south of Gaza.

and the goings out thereof shall be at the Sea. 'And end at the Mediterranean Sea' (Moffatt).

6. THE WESTERN BORDER

6. the Great Sea. The Mediterranean Sea. shall be your west border. The western border of Palestine is to be the Mediterranean coast. 'The Great Sea—that is the whole eastern flank of the Great Sea from its south-eastern to its north-eastern corner—shall be the western boundary of the land. If any point on the coast between these two corners were meant, the Text would surely have designated that point. As it did not, the whole eastern shore of the Mediterranean must be intended. The western border of the Holy Land, therefore, begins at the south-east corner of the Mediterranean where the "Brook of Egypt" falls into it; thence it runs northward, passing Mount Carmel, Tyre, Zidon, the Lebanons, unto the north-eastern border of the Bay of Alexandretta' (S. H. Isaacs).

7-9. THE NORTHERN BOUNDARY

7. ye shall mark out your line. 'Ye shall draw your boundary-line' (Kennedy).

And ye shall mark out your line for the east border from Hazar-enan to Shepham; 11. and the border shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east side of Ain; and the border shall go down, and shall strike upon the slope of the sea of Chinnereth eastward; 12. and the border shall go down to the Jordan, and the goings out thereof shall be at the Salt Sea; this shall be your land according to the borders thereof round about.' ¶ 13. And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying: 'This is the land wherein ye shall receive inheritance by lot, which the LORD hath commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half-tribe; 14. for the tribe of the children of Reuben according to their fathers' houses and the tribe of the children of Gad according to their fathers' houses, have received, and the half-tribe of Manasseh have received, their inheritance; 15. the two tribes and the half-tribe have received their inheritance beyond the Jordan at Jericho eastward, toward the sunrising.'*^{1v} (v1). ¶ 16. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 17. 'These are the names of the men that shall take possession of the land for you: Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun. 18. And ye shall take one prince of every tribe, to take possession of the land. 19. And these are can be said to agree where it was. Isaacs follows Jewish tradition. He writes: 'If the starting-point of the northern border is the north-eastern corner of the Sea, and the direction of the line is eastward, this line will strike on its way the Mountain of Amanus.'

Targum Jonathan and the Tosefta also identify this Mount Hor with Mount Amanus. Mount Amanus is the modern Giaour Dag.

8. the entrance to Hamath. The Pass across Mount Amanus to the territory of Hamath. Zedad is identified with Baghche Pass.

Hazar-enan. Aintab. This last-named brings us to lands inhabited in ancient times by Hittites. 'Numerous mounds covering the remains of Hittite and other towns attest its former settlement and cultivation' (Sir Chas. Wilson). This accords with Josh. i, 4: 'All the land of the Hittites, and unto the Great Sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your border.'

10. Shepham. Apamea, east of the lower valley of the Orontes; now known as Kulat-el-Mudik.

It was the Divine wish that Caleb, though not a 'prince', should be given the honour of being among those who superintend the allotment of Canaan, on account of the distinguished part he had hitherto played in the history of Israel; and the two men mentioned in v. 20 and 21 were probably friends of Caleb (Luzzatto).

CHAPTER XXXV

LEVITICAL CITIES AND CITIES OF REFUGE.
1-8. LEVITICAL CITIES

Forty-eight cities, with a portion of land attached to each, are to be set aside for the support of the Levites. The carrying into effect of this law is given in Josh. xxi. 'The purpose of this institution seems to be the following. The tribe consecrated to God's service shall, through its equal distribution among the other tribes, be enabled to labour among them for the cause of God; guide those that seek instruction in His Law: and at the same time be saved from utter dispersion by living together in family groups in the Levitical cities. Such distribution among the other tribes was further rendered necessary by the fact that the maintenance of the Levites depended on the tithes, given by the people' (Dillmann). According to Rabbinic tradition, the institution of Levitical cities ceased with the destruction of the first Temple.

2. cities to dwell in. The Levites were to have the right to dwell in those cities, but the possession of these cities was vested in the tribe in whose territory the particular city was situated.

open land. Or, 'suburbs.' 'An area consisting of an open space round about the city, serving to beautify it. It was not permitted to build houses there, nor to plant vineyards or to sow a plantation' (Rashi).

5. two thousand cubits. From the house of the city ('the city being in the midst'). The first thousand cubits for 'open land'; and the other, for fields and vineyards (Rashi): or, the whole 2,000 cubits for a 'common' (Luzzatto).

two thousand cubits, and for the north side two thousand cubits, the city being in the midst. This shall be to them the open land about the cities. 6. And the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, they shall be the six cities of refuge, which ye shall give for the manslayer to flee thither; and beside them ye shall give forty and two cities. 7. All the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with the open land about them. 8. And concerning the cities which ye shall give of the possession of the children of Israel, from the many ye shall take many, and from the few ye shall take few; each tribe according to its inheritance which it inheriteth shall give of its cities unto the Levites. *v1 (v11). ¶ 9. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 10. 'Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: When ye pass over the Jordan into the land of Canaan, 11. then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you, that the manslayer that killeth any person through error may flee thither. 12. And the cities shall be unto you for refuge from the avenger, that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation for judgment. 13. And as to the cities which ye shall give, there shall be for you six cities of refuge. 14. Ye shall give three cities beyond the Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan; they shall be cities

6. cities of refuge. Places of asylum to shelter the involuntary homicide, see v. 9-15. Levitical cities were selected for this purpose; both because they were regarded as having a sacred character, and because they were inhabited by men who could decide in doubtful cases between wilful murder and accidental homicide.

8. from the many. The more populous the tribe, the more cities they were to provide for the Levites. East of the Jordan, the Levites had ten such cities, and in Canaan proper 38. The principle of proportionate giving was not literally carried out; the criterion was not the number of the cities given but rather their importance (Nachmanides).

9-15. CITIES OF REFUGE

Six cities of refuge, three on either side of the Jordan, are to be set aside as places of asylum for accidental homicides. These six cities did not need always to remain the same. Others might be substituted, provided their situation conformed to the Biblical law with regard to distances and geographical position.

11. shall appoint you. lit. 'cause to happen'; i.e. make ready, prepare.

may flee thither. Any one guilty of unpremeditated taking of human life could escape to one of these cities and find shelter and protection.

12. from the avenger. Heb. goel, more usually, goel haddam, lit. 'the avenger of blood'; 'redeemer.' It refers to the nearest representative of the family of the slain man, whose duty it was to 'vindicate' the death of the victim. In primitive society, if one member of a family was murdered, an intolerable shame rested upon the family until 'satisfaction' had been inflicted on the manslayer at the hands of the 'redeemer', or avenger of the family honour. It was the sacred aim of the Mosaic legislation to take the decision of the guilt or innocence of the manslayer out of the hands of the 'avenger', and assign it to an impartial tribunal.

before the congregation. The tribunal of elders and judges appointed by the community to which the homicide belongs. In later times, it was understood to refer to a duly constituted Sanhedrin.

14. cities. These six cities are specified in Josh. xx, 1-9. Moses in his lifetime set aside three cities for the two and a half tribes on the eastern side of the Jordan, as their land, especially of refuge. 15. For the children of Israel, and for the stranger and for the settler among them, shall these six cities be for refuge, that every one that killeth any person through error may flee thither. 16. But if he smote him with an instrument of iron, so that he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall surely be put to death. 17. And if he smote him with a stone in the hand, whereby a man may die, and he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall surely be put to death. 18. Or if he smote him with a weapon of wood in the hand, whereby a man may die, and he died, he is a murderer; the murderer shall surely be put to death. 19. The avenger of blood shall himself put the murderer to death; when he meeteth him, he shall put him to death. 20. And if he thrust him of hatred, or hurled at him any thing, lying in wait, so that he died; 21. or in enmity smote him with his hand, that he died; he that smote him shall surely be put to death: he is a murderer; the avenger of blood shall put the murderer to death when he meeteth him. 22. But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or hurled upon him any thing without lying in wait, 23. or with any stone, whereby a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, so that he died, and he was not Gilead, was wild border country, and homicide was more frequent there than in Western Palestine. The other three cities were set aside by Joshua.

15. for the stranger. Heb. ger; the resident alien. The Cities of Refuge were to be for everyone, including both the resident alien and the non-Israelite who was making but a temporary stay in the land of Israel. 'All human life is holy (Exod. xxi, 12), and no innocent blood should be suffered to be shed. Homeborn and stranger alike, therefore, shall have one law in regard to asylum' (Dillmann).

through error. Or, 'unwittingly.' The benefit of asylum is to be limited to unintentional homicides. In ancient Greece and Rome, shrines that gave asylum to murderers were nurseries of criminals. In the time of Tiberius, the swarms of desperadoes at shrines had become so dangerous that the right was limited to a few cities. Conditions were not much better when the Medieval Church began to offer 'sanctuary' to criminals of every description. The Torah alone forbade the granting of protection to the wilful offender. 'If a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from Mine altar, that he may die' (Exod. xxi, 14). Even if it was a priest who officiated at the Altar, says the Talmud, he is not to escape punishment, if his act was other than unintentional homicide.

16-23. DISTINCTION BETWEEN MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER

16. instrument of iron. As the fundamental distinction is one of intention, everything depends upon the weapon used.

17. whereby a man may die. Capable of inflicting a mortal wound.

19. he shall put him to death. As he was guilty of deliberate murder, the 'avenger of blood' shall put him to death, even within one of the Cities of Refuge.

20. if he thrust him of hatred. Further illustrations of cases of wilful murder. 'Thrust him' means that he pushed him over a cliff, or off the roof of a house.

22. without enmity. An explanation of the phrase 'killing a person through error'. The main criterion is the absence of motive. The Rabbis distinguished three grades in unpremeditated homicide: (1) grave carelessness; (2) contributory negligence; (3) complete innocence. Only in case of the second is exile to the Cities of Refuge prescribed. Complete innocence needs no atonement; and for grave carelessness, exile was not deemed a sufficient punishment.

But if the manslayer shall at any time go beyond the border of his city of refuge, whither he fleeth; 27. and the avenger of blood find him without the border of his city of refuge, and the avenger of blood slay the manslayer; there shall be no blood-guiltiness for him; 28. because he must remain in his city of refuge until the death of the high priest; but after the death of the high priest the manslayer may return into the land of his possession. 29. And these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings. 30. according to these ordinances. i.e. their decision shall be guided by, and based upon, the regulations and conditions laid down in this chapter.

25. shall restore him. They shall send him back under safe escort to the City in which he had taken refuge until the time of the trial. The Asylum, however, is not only a place of protection, but of expiation. 'The condemned must not leave the Asylum under any circumstances, and the consciousness of having taken a human life must never be out of the mind of the homicide' (Talmud).

death of the high priest. Like that of a king, it represented a definite landmark in the national life. And as Asylum was connected with the Altar of the Central Sanctuary and with Cities of the Levites, it was but natural that the death of the High Priest, and not that of the king, should have been selected as the date terminating the exile of the unfortunate manslayer (Dillmann).

Various other explanations have been given as to why the death of the High Priest should be the signal for giving the homicide his freedom. Maimonides thinks that the death of the High Priest was an event that moved the entire people so much that no thoughts of vengeance could arise in the avenger of blood. According to the Talmud, the High Priest should by the power of prayer have made such a calamity as murder an impossibility in Israel. That he had not succeeded in doing so, was a proof that he had failed in his duty. Hence he had to bear the penalty of knowing how welcome his death would be to the man exiled to a City of Refuge!

29. a statute of judgment. See on XXVII, 11.

30-34. CONCERNING MURDER

These regulations emphasize the extreme sacredness of human life. 'In ancient custom, loss of life could be compensated for by the death of any member of the manslayer's family. Here the Law insists that the murderer only is to forfeit his life' (Gray). Murder, furthermore, is such a heinous crime that it cannot be atoned for by the payment of a money-fine; and not even the man who has unintentionally killed another shall purchase his release from the City of Refuge before the death of the High Priest.

30. at the mouth of witnesses. It was stated in v. 16-18 that a man guilty of wilful murder should be put to death. The present v. and the one following tell us that the tribunal may only carry out the death-sentence if the murder is attested by two witnesses.

31. no ransom for the life of a murderer. The wilful murderer cannot have his death-sentence commuted by a money payment. The Rabbis rightly deduced from this wording, that other injuries could be thus compounded for; see p. 405.

the life of a murderer, that is guilty of death; but he shall surely be put to death. 32. And ye shall take no ransom for him that is fled to his city of refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest. 33. So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are; for blood, it polluteth the land; and no expiation can be made for the land for the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it. 34. And thou shalt not defile the land which ye inhabit, in the midst of which I dwell; for I the LORD dwell in the midst of the children of Israel.*vii.

CHAPTER XXXVI

1. And the heads of the fathers' houses of the family of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spoke before Moses, and before the princes, the heads of the fathers' houses of the children of Israel; 2. and they said: 'The LORD commanded my lord to give the land for inheritance by lot to the children of Israel; and my lord was commanded by the LORD to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters. 3. And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then will their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of our fathers, and will be added to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they shall belong; so will it be taken away from the lot of our inheritance. 4. 32. fled to his city of refuge. Neither can the homicide escape exile by a ransom.

33. ye shall not pollute the land. The Heb. root חנף means, to act wickedly, to profane, or pollute. If such redemption-money were permitted, human life would be cheapened, and the land would become wholly corrupt.

for blood, it polluteth the land. See Lev. xviii, 25; Psalm cvi, 38.

34. for I the LORD dwell in . . . Israel. Because God dwells in the midst of Israel, therefore Israel and Israel's Land must be undefiled by violence and unholiness. The idea of God's dwelling in the midst of Israel has been epitomized by the Rabbis in the one word Shechinah; i.e. God's Indwelling Presence.

CHAPTER XXXVI. LAW OF HEIRESSES

In xxvii, 1-11, the law was laid down that permitted daughters to inherit property in the absence of male issue. But there was a danger that if such heiresses married men belonging to other tribes, their inheritance might pass out of their particular tribe. To guard against this contingency, the ruling in the present chapter is given. The question was raised by the chiefs of the clan of Machir of the half-tribe of Manasseh, whose allotted territory was in Gilead.

1. fathers' houses. See on i, 2.

3. be taken away. Because their male issue who will be their heirs will be reckoned to the tribe of their father, and thus the property will pass into the possession of another tribe.

4. the jubilee. The provisions of the law of Jubilee are given in Lev. xxv. But it was only purchased land that had to be returned to its original owner or his descendant in the Jubilee. Inherited land, such as that belonging to the daughters of Zelophehad, would be outside the provisions of that law; so that, once these women married into another tribe, there was no hope for their property ever returning to their own tribe.

inheritance be added unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they shall belong; so will their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.' 5. And Moses commanded the children of Israel according to the word of the LORD, saying: 'The tribe of the sons of Joseph speaketh right. 6. This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying: Let them be married to whom they think best; only into the family of the tribe of their father shall they be married. 7. So shall no inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe; for the children of Israel shall cleave every one to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers. 8. And every daughter, that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may possess every man the inheritance of his fathers. 9. So shall no inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; for the tribes of the children of Israel shall cleave each one to its own inheritance.'^m. 10. Even as the LORD commanded Moses, so did the daughters of Zelophehad.^m. 11. For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married unto their father's brothers' sons. 12. They were married into the families of the sons of Manasseh the son of Joseph, and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father. ¶ 13. These are the commandments and the ordinances, which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses unto the children of Israel in the plains of Moab by the Jordan at Jericho.

CHAPTER II

CAP. II. ב

4. Hear ye the word of the LORD, O house of Jacob,

And all the families of the house of Israel;

5. Thus saith the LORD:

What unrighteousness have your fathers found in Me.

That they are gone far from Me,

And have walked after things of nought, and are become nought?

6. Neither said they:

'Where is the LORD that brought us up Out of the land of Egypt;

That led us through the wilderness,

Through a land of deserts and of pits,

Through a land of drought and of the shadow of death,

Through a land that no man passed through,

And where no man dwelt?"

7. And I brought you into a land of fruitful fields,

To eat the fruit thereof and the good thereof;

But when ye entered, ye defiled My land, And made My heritage an abomination.

8. The priests said not: 'Where is the LORD?'

And they that handle the law knew Me not,

שָׁמְעוּ דְּבַר-יְהוָה בֵּית

And the rulers transgressed against Me;
The prophets also prophesied by Baal,
And walked after things that do not profit.

For Jeremiah and his times, as well as the reason for the selection of this chapter for this Sabbath, see the introductory notes on the preceding Haftorah.

II, 4-13. ISRAEL'S INGRATITUDE IN RETURN FOR GOD'S LOVE

4. hear . . . Jacob . . . Israel. Jeremiah addresses the nation as a whole.

5. what unrighteousness. A rhetorical question. They have found no unrighteousness in Him. Their unfaithfulness to Him has been and is without any reason.

things of nought. Nothingness, folly; denoting the utter futility of idols and idol-worship.

and are become nought. In character and in power. Men's characters become assimilated to the follies which they worship.

6-7. The people's unfaithfulness is rendered more vivid by the reminder, in strong colours, of its deliverance from Egyptian bondage, and its preservation from the dangers and terrors of the wilderness.

6. shadow of death. Or, 'deep darkness' (RV Margin). 'Just as in the deep darkness men cannot see their way and stray blindly hither and thither, so in the trackless desert they may easily lose themselves, and wander in bewilderment' (Peake).

7. a land of fruitful fields. lit. 'a garden land'; a land of fields, vineyards and well-wooded spaces (Kimchi).

ye defiled. By idol-worship.

My heritage. The land I selected for My Divine purpose (Kimchi).

an abomination. By imitating the savage and immoral practices for which the old inhabitants of Canaan were driven out.

8. the priests said not, Where is the LORD? They were indifferent to God's will, and thought of nothing less than consulting Him (Streane).

they that handle the law. Those who administer it.

knew Me not. Showed by their conduct that they knew not God's ways.

the rulers. lit. 'the shepherds'; i.e. the kings.

the prophets. Members of the Prophetic guilds. Their duty was to urge the people to reform and bring them back to the sense of God, but they had themselves become affected by the prevailing apostasy.

things that do not profit. Idols, that could be no source of help, hope, or comfort in time of distress.

9. Wherefore I will yet plead with you,
saith the LORD,
And with your children's children will I plead.

10. For pass over to the isles of the Kittites, and see,
And send unto Kedar, and consider diligently,
And see if there hath been such a thing.

11. Hath a nation changed its gods,
Which yet are no gods?
But My people hath changed its glory
For that which doth not profit.

12. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this,
And be horribly afraid, be ye exceeding amazed,
Saith the LORD.

13. For My people have committed two evils:

They have forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters,
And hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns,
That can hold no water.

14. Is Israel a servant?
Is he a home-born slave?
Why is he become a prey?

15. The young lions have roared upon him,
And let their voice resound;
And they have made his land desolate,

10. isles of the Kittites. Cyprus and the neighbouring islands near the coasts of Greece and Italy.

send unto Kedar. An Arabian tribe, but used for Arabia generally. The meaning of the verse is, Send and inquire West and East.

11. changed its gods. No other people, is the complaint of the Prophet, has with such thoughtlessness and lack of character changed its ancestral worship. Heathen nations were loyal to their gods, although these were helpless and unreal: Israel has forsaken the true God for that which is false, useless, and a source of degeneration!

12. O ye heavens. When God arraigns His people, the whole of Nature is the appropriate audience; and even inanimate Nature must be shocked and appalled at such crass folly.

13. fountain of living waters. 'They have ready at hand fresh living water from streams and fountains—pure, cool, perennial and plentiful. But they with great toil and expense hew out cisterns in the rock and store their water in them. This water—flat, stagnant, putrid—they prefer to the running water from the fountain. Moreover, these rock-cisterns were very liable to crack, and in the hour of greatest need their water may utterly fail. No comparison could more keenly rebuke the madness of a people who changed their glory for that which doth not profit' (Peake-Thomson).

14-17. ISRAEL'S SIN AND CONSEQUENT CALAMITIES

Not only for her idolatry and ingratitude, but for her faithlessness in relying on Assyria and Egypt, will Judah be punished; see on v. 18.

14. is Israel a servant . . . slave? Israel is not a slave but a son.

why is he become a prey? How is it then that he has become a slave to neighbouring powers who have despoiled him? The answer is in v. 17.

15. the young lions. Israel's enemies, especially the Assyrians.

16. the children also of Noph and Tahpanhes. i.e. Egypt, to whom many looked for help.

Noph. Memphis, the capital of Northern Egypt.

17. Is it not this that doth cause it unto thee,
That thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God,
When He led thee by the way?

18. And now what hast thou to do in the way to Egypt,
To drink the waters of Shihor?
Or what hast thou to do in the way to Assyria,
To drink the waters of the River?

19. Thine own wickedness shall correct thee,
And thy backslidings shall reprove thee:
Know therefore and see that it is an evil and a bitter thing,
That thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God,
Neither is My fear in thee,
Saith the Lord God of hosts.

20. For of old time I have broken thy yoke,
And burst thy bands,
And thou saidst: 'I will not transgress';
Upon every high hill
And under every leafy tree
Thou didst recline, playing the harlot.

Tahpanhes. Daphnae, a fortress of importance on the N.E. frontier, and commanding the road to Palestine. It was to Tahpanhes that Jeremiah was taken by force, after the fall of Jerusalem (Jer. XLIII, 7).

when He led thee by the way. i.e. the right way. God showed the Israelites the right path to walk, but they forsook it (Rashi, Kimchi).

18-19. THE FOLLY OF FOREIGN ALLIANCES

18. what hast thou to do . . . Egypt or . . . Assyria. Judah's rulers had vacillated between alliances with Egypt and Assyria. Hoshea, the last king of Israel, had sought the help of Egypt against Assyria; and Josiah had lost his life in opposing Egypt on behalf of Assyria. What could these alliances profit them, while they were faithless to God?

20-25. OBSTINACY IN IDOLATRY

20. I have broken thy yoke. In the past God had, beginning from the days of Egypt, delivered Israel from his oppressors (Kimchi).

I will not transgress. This translation is according to the Massoretic correction of the Text. After each deliverance Israel had declared he would never again be unfaithful to God.

upon every high hill. Referring to the immoral practices of the heathen worship for which Israel had forsaken God. These were usually celebrated on hill-tops. 'Such relapse into unholy, primitive cults often accompanies and greatly hastens the disintegration of any society or people. Wherever national life no longer permeates and elevates the masses, these sink into the mire of sensuality, superstition, and animalism' (Duhm).

21-25. The Prophet stresses Israel's backslidings in a variety of figures borrowed from pastoral, agricultural, and home life.

21. wholly a right seed. From which good fruit should have come. Israel is sprung from the seed of Abraham, from whom descendants like himself were to be expected (Kimchi).

Jewish custom prescribes that the Prophetical Reading shall not end on a note of gloom and despair. Accordingly, verses are added from chapters III and IV, depicting the recognition and of the better times of Israel's return to God, and of the participation of all humanity in the blessings of that spiritual regeneration (IV, 1, 2).

ADDITIONAL NOTE TO NUMBERS

VOWS AND VOWING IN THE LIGHT OF JUDAISM

The Rabbis fully endorsed the Biblical demand for man uncompromisingly to honour his word, whether accompanied by a vow or not. Their position on this matter is absolutely clear: 'Let thy yea be yea, and thy nay be nay. He who changes his word commits as heavy a sin as he who worships idols; and he who utters an untruth, is excluded from the Divine Presence.'

A vow to be valid must be uttered aloud; it must be made voluntarily, without any compulsion from without; and the person making it must be fully conscious of its scope and implications. A man may impose a restriction upon himself by vow; he cannot so restrict others. Vows whose fulfilment is rendered impossible by force majeure are void.

Scripture discourages vowing. 'If thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee' (Deut. xxiii, 23): 'Be not rash with thy mouth . . . Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay' (Eccl. v, 1, 4). The post-Biblical teachers, whether in Alexandria, Palestine, or Babylon, shared this attitude towards vows. Philo declares: 'The word of the good man should be his oath, firm and unchangeable, founded steadfastly on truth. Therefore vows and oaths should be superfluous. Some men make vows out of wicked hatred of their fellow men; swearing, for example, that they will not admit this or that man to sit at the same table with them, or to come under the same roof. Such men should seek to propitiate the mercy of God, so that they may find some cure for the diseases of their souls.' The Rabbis were equally zealous in their attempt to dissuade men from vowing. 'Do not form a habit of making vows,' was an ancient Tannaite teaching; while Samuel, the great teacher in Babylon, roundly declared: 'He who makes a vow, even though he fulfil it, is called a rosho, a wicked man.' In the time of the Mishnah, the habit of taking vows was considered a sign of bad breeding, and affected the honour of the vower's parents, just as swearing would nowadays point to a man's low origin. One exception was admitted. The making of vows was tolerated, when it was done in order to rid oneself of bad habits, or in order to encourage oneself to do good; but—says the Shulchan Aruch—even in such cases one should strive for the desired end without the aid of vows. 'Even vows for charitable purposes are not desirable. If one has the money, let him give it straightway without a vow; and if not, let him defer his vow until he have it.'

The fact must, however, be recorded that the mass of the people did not rise to these moral heights, and the popular Oriental passion for vow-making continued unabated. And just because the Rabbis assigned such sacredness to the spoken word, they were faced with a grave problem. For altogether aside from imbecile and rash minds, men in time of danger or under momentary impulse would make vows which they could not fulfil. These self-imposed obligations or abstinences might clash with man's domestic duties, or interfere with his proper relations to his neighbours. In such cases, the Rabbis would consider it their duty to afford a man the facility, under certain definite conditions and restrictions, of annulling his thoughtless or impossible vows. Such annulment could never be effected by himself, but only by a Beth Din of three learned men in the Law, after they had carefully investigated the nature and bearing of the vow, and had become convinced that its purpose was not, on the one hand, self-improvement; nor did it, on the other, infringe upon the rights of others. For not all vows or oaths could be absolved. A vow or oath that was made to another person, even be that person a child or a heathen, could not be annulled except in the presence of that person and with his consent; while an oath which a man had taken in a court of justice could not be absolved by any other authority in the world. Far from being animated by a loose regard for morality, the annulment of vows ordained by the Rabbis has an ethical intent, that of saving persons who have made virtually impracticable vows from the guilt of breaking them, and of preventing the hardship and injustice which their fulfilment would entail upon others (Z. Frankel, Schechter).

KOL NIDRÉ

The formula for the annulment of vows that ushers in the Service on the Eve of the Day of Atonement refers to such vows which we had voluntarily promised to the Almighty, and had not kept, or the fulfilment of which might prove to be beyond our ability to carry out. 'But it does not in the least possible degree affect the promises or obligations entered into between man and man, as the latter can only be dissolved by the mutual consent of the parties, nor can it absolve any man from an official oath' (Editor's note, Sephardi Eve of Atonement Prayer Book).

The Kol Nidré has had a curious history. 'The awe and solemnity with which it is pronounced, the beauty and pathos of the threefold chant, the scattered millions of Israel gathered in every synagogue in the world, are sure signs that the words of the prayer, written like an old inscription, are full of meaning; beneath them lurks a thought that is God-inspired, a conception of the sanctity of Truth' (Editor's note, Ashkenazi Eve of Atonement Prayer Book, in 'The Service of the Synagogue'). And yet its introduction was opposed by some Gaonim over a thousand years ago: it was recast, though not improved, by a noted rabbi in the eleventh century; and has been a welcome weapon in the hands of anti-Semites, who, in defiance of all truth and justice, have used it to prove to their hate-blinded followers that 'the word of a Jew cannot be trusted.' The pioneers of Reform Judaism abolished it a century ago: and every now and then voices are raised in Orthodox communities that, in view of the misunderstandings to which it has given rise, the time has come for its official removal from the Festival Prayer Book. I append the reply I sent to an Overseas Congregation which recently submitted this suggestion to me.

'Proposed alterations in the Liturgy, even of its non-essential portions, call for the greatest care and consideration. The question of altering the Kol Nidré prayer especially bristles with difficulties. Chief among them is this: the prayer as it stands has for centuries been a weapon of malicious attack by enemies of Israel. If, in consequence, the prayer is abolished, we are held as pleading guilty to their charges, and by our action seem to justify these charges. Historic Judaism has, therefore, ever braved these misrepresentations. Conscious of the sacredness and inviolability which attaches to an oath in Jewish Law and life, it indignantly repudiates the construction its maligners place upon this Prayer, and proclaims that the dispensation from vows in it refers only to those in which no other persons or interest are involved; and that no private or public vow, promise or oath which concerns another person, is implied in the Kol Nidré.'

'One further consideration. Recent historical studies have shown the Kol Nidré to be a unique memorial of Jewish suffering and repentance. It arose in Spain, as a result of the Jewish persecutions by the West Goths, in the seventh century. Entire Jewish communities were then doomed to torture and the stake, unless they forswore their Faith, and by the most fearful oaths and abjurations bound themselves nevermore to practise any Jewish observances. In this way, even when better times came and the fury of the oppressor abated, the unfortunate members of those communities felt themselves perjured before God and man if they returned to their Holy Faith, or kept even the most sacred of its Festivals. It was to ease the conscience of these crushed and distracted men and women, that the Kol Nidré was formulated. In view of this origin of the prayer—which has only recently become known and which alone explains all its anomalies—various congregations on the Continent that had formerly abolished the Kol Nidré have reintroduced it, realizing that the awakening of historic memories, and the forging of links with the past, are vital factors in Jewish traditional life and worship.'

THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY

NAME. The name of the Fifth Book of Moses is אלה הדברים, lit. 'these are the words,' from the opening phrase in the Hebrew Text. This title has been shortened in current use to Devarim, 'Words.' The oldest name of the Book, however, was משנה תורה, 'the Repetition of the Torah,' a phrase based on xvii, 18. The Greek-speaking Jews translated this name by Deuteronomion, i.e. 'Second Law'; and this title was taken over by the Latin Bible as Deuteronomium, and thence by the English Versions as Deuteronomy.

CONTENTS. A full title might be, Moses' Farewell Discourses and Song to Israel. The Lawgiver had brought his People to the borders of the Holy Land. He then recounts in three Discourses the events of the forty years' wanderings; and warns against the temptations awaiting them in Canaan, with promise of Divine judgment for disobedience, and Divine blessing for faithful observance, of God's commandments. Included in the second Discourse is a rehearsal of the principal laws (xii-xxvi), as these were to be observed in the new Land. These laws are given in free reproduction, with hortatory amplification, abbreviation, or even modification to meet new conditions. In his Farewell Song, the dying Leader celebrates God as the Rock of Israel. This is followed by the Farewell Blessing. Standing on the brink of the grave, he gives his parting benediction to the tribes whose religious and political welfare had been the devoted labour of his life. He then ascends the height to the sepulchre which no man knoweth. 'And there hath not arisen a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses.'

NATURE AND INFLUENCE. Deuteronomy is a unique book—distinct from the narrative and historical, the legal, prophetic, and devotional writings of Holy Writ, though it has affinities with each of them. In its literary aspect, it is oratory; and as such it is unsurpassed in its rush of rhythmic sentences, its ebb and flow of exalted passion, its accents of appeal and denunciation: Moses' speech shines as well as his face. And this noble language gives utterance to truths which are always and everywhere sovereign—that God is One, and that man must be wholly His; that God is Righteousness and Faithfulness, Mercy and Love. The central declaration of all this oratory, enshrined by Judaism in its daily devotions, is the Shema—which, as we shall see, teaches the unity of the Creator, the unity of creation, and the unity of mankind.

The God proclaimed by Deuteronomy stands in a relation to Israel and humanity not merely of Judge or Ruler, but of Friend and Father. 'And thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.' This whole-souled love and devotion to God is to be accompanied by a large-hearted benevolence towards man, and indeed towards all sentient beings; by the recognition of the retributive righteousness of God; and by the insistence on the vital importance of family life, and of religious instruction within the home. The influence of this Book of the Farewell Discourses of Moses on both domestic and personal religion in Israel throughout the millennia has never been exceeded by that of any other Book in Scripture.

(CHAPTERS I-III, 22)

CHAPTER I, 1-5. INTRODUCTORY

These verses are usually taken to be the general superscription to Deuteronomy. They specify the place and time of the Farewell Discourses of the Lawgiver recorded in this Book.

1. words. i.e. discourses, of exhortation and reproof, which form the main contents of Deuteronomy.

unto all Israel. 'These words redound to the praise of Israel. Knowing that they were called together for the purpose of hearing a discourse which would contain strong words of reproof, they nevertheless attended in full number' (Sifri).

beyond the Jordan. Heb. בעבר הירדן; 'at the crossing of the Jordan'; or, 'at the banks of the Jordan,' eastern or western. Which one of these is meant in any particular passage can be determined only by the context (Gesenius, Luzzatto, Friedlander); Num. xxxii, 19; Deut. xi, 30. Some commentators see in the words עבר הירדן (lit. Transjordan) a fixed geographical name of the Moabite side of the Jordan, even for the inhabitants of that land. Along with this went a local usage, determined by the position of the speaker.

in the Arabah. 'The deep valley running North and South of the Dead Sea' (RV Margin). Here the southern portion of this valley is meant, extending to the Gulf of Akabah, which is the north-eastern arm of the Red Sea.

Suph. A shorter form of yam suph, i.e. the Red Sea.

Paran. The wilderness of Paran is now called the wilderness of el-Tih, north of the Sinai Peninsula, and west of the Arabah.

Tophel. Some identify this unknown place with el-Tafle, a village about 15 miles south-east of the Dead Sea.

Laban and Hazeroth. Possibly the Libnah and Hazeroth in Num. xxxiii, 17-20.

Di-zahab. The spot has not been identified. The Hebrew implies 'a place productive of gold'.

The five names mentioned above seem to delimit the place where Moses gave one of the discourses to Israel. Their identification is uncertain and full of difficulties. Some of the ancient and medieval teachers have been inclined to treat these names homiletically. By playing on their meaning, they associated these places with the murmurings and transgressions of the children of Israel. Thus, Onkelos translates this v. as follows: 'These are the words which Moses spake to all Israel beyond Jordan. He reproveth them because they had sinned in the Wilderness, and had provoked God to anger in the Plain (Arabah) of Moab; over against the Red Sea (Suph) they murmured against God; in Paran, they had spoken contemptuously (tophel) concerning the manna (laban); and in Hazeroth, they angered Him on account of flesh and because they made the Golden Calf (di-zahab).'

2. it is eleven days' journey. From Horeb, i.e. Sinai, the scene of the Giving of the Law, to Kadesh-barnea. The distance is between 160 and 170 miles. In 1838, the traveller Robinson followed the route here specified, and the journey lasted exactly eleven days of ordinary camel-riding.

by the way of mount Seir. Or, 'by the Mount Seir road'—the easternmost track from the Sinai Peninsula to Kadesh.

3. in the fortieth year. The date of the discourses. Moses reserved his exhortation for the closing days of his life, in the same way as Jacob (Gen. xlix), Joshua (Josh. xxiv), Samuel (1 Sam. xii), and David (1 Kings ii). Words spoke at the solemn time of departure from earth have a deep influence upon the hearers.

eleventh. Heb. עשתי עשר. In the preceding v. the form used for 'eleven' is אחד עשר. Koenig rightly points to this fact, among many others, as proof that, unlike the Samaritan and Septuagint Texts, the Heb. Text has from the first been handed down to us with absolute accuracy, and that no attempt was made to 'harmonize' different forms of the same word or phrase.

children of Israel, according unto all that the LORD had given him in commandment unto them; 4. after he had smitten Sihon the king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, who dwelt in Ashtaroth, at Edrei; 5. beyond the Jordan, in the land of Moab, took Moses upon him to expound this law, saying:

חָדָשׁ בְּאַחַד לַחֹדֶשׁ דִּבֶּר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל כָּל־
 4 אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֹתוֹ אֱלֹהִים: אַחֲרֵי הִבַּלְתִּי אֶת סִיחֹן מֶלֶךְ

 הַ יוֹשֵׁב בְּעִשְׁתָּרֹת בְּאֶדְרֵי: בְּעֶבֶר הַיַּרְדֵּן בְּאֶרֶץ מוֹאָב

4. Sihon . . . Og. These signal victories, still fresh in the memory of all, are repeatedly mentioned in Deuteronomy; because the success of Moses' leadership on these occasions heightened his authority and enabled him to address his people on their faults in the past and their duties in the future.

at Edrei. The place where Og was slain (Num. xxi, 35); the modern Dera, 30 miles east of the Lake of Tiberias.

5. this law. 'The Heb. word Torah does not and never did mean "Law". It means, and always has meant, "Teaching"' (Herford). The word torah may refer to moral guidance, or to a single specific teaching, as in Prov. 1, 8, 'forsake not the teaching (torah) of thy mother.' It is also applied to a body of religious precepts or teachings—such as form the central portion of this Book (Chaps. xii–xxvi). Often it denotes the entire sum of Israel's religious doctrine and life—the Torah of Moses.

1–5. Apart from the geographical uncertainties there are many other difficulties in these verses, so long as we regard them as forming the title-page to the whole of Deuteronomy. Thus, v. 5 states that 'Moses took upon him to declare this law, saying (לֵאמֹר)'. In the light of the current view of these verses, this can only mean that the exposition in question follows immediately upon that verse. And yet the succeeding chapters contain no exposition of the Torah; nor, strictly speaking, can the laws in chaps. xii–xxvi be called an 'exposition' of the Torah, seeing that, of the one hundred laws contained in those chapters, seventy are not mentioned in the previous Books of the Pentateuch.

For these and other reasons, many commentators regard v. 1–5 as introductory not to the whole Book, but merely to the First Discourse of Moses (I, 6–IV, 40); and, in consequence, their interpretation differs considerably from that given above. One of these commentators is Sforzo, who paraphrases v. 1 and 2 as follows: 'These are the words which Moses repeatedly spoke unto all Israel, beyond Jordan, in the Arabah, over against Suph, between Paran and Tophel and Laban and Hazeroth and Di-zahab; viz. "it is eleven days' journey from Horeb unto Kadesh-barnea by way of Mount Seir." And yet it had taken them forty years to accomplish that journey! Such was the veiled admonition that Moses intended to convey to them by these words in each of the places mentioned.' Targum Jonathan, Sifri, and Rashi seem to have understood these verses in the same sense. 'Had Israel been worthy, they could have entered the Land within eleven days; but they were sadly found wanting, and they drew upon themselves the punishment of forty years' wandering' (Sifri). Luzzatto sees this thought continued in v. 3–5, which he paraphrases as follows: 'In the fortieth year, after the victories over Sihon and Og, Moses undertook to make clear and expound the veiled meaning embodied in this "teaching".' Such declaration and exposition are contained in the First Discourse (I, 6–IV, 40) which he addressed to the People about to undertake the conquest of Canaan. And in fact, that First Discourse is a historic retrospect of the main incidents from Horeb to Jordan, bringing home to the new generation why it was that the Israelites were doomed to wander forty years in the Wilderness before they could enter the Promised Land, though the direct route was only an eleven days' journey.

A. MOSES' FIRST DISCOURSE

REVIEW OF JOURNEY FROM SINAI TO KADESH WITH EXHORTATION TO OBEDIENCE

(CHAPTERS I, 6–IV, 40)

Moses reviews the experiences of the Israelites in the terrible wilderness through which they passed till they reached Kadesh-barnea. Thence the spies were sent on to Canaan. These brought back word of a good land, but also of cities great and fenced up to heaven, and a population counting giants among them. They so filled the heart of the people with fear, that Israel forgot God and was prepared to return to Egypt. The unfaithful spies and the whole of that generation were therefore to perish in the Wilderness; their children alone were to enter the Promised Land. Moses continues to tell of their presumptuous attempt to defeat that sentence, and the ignominious failure and rout with which it had been visited. Moses himself had been entangled in the rebellious outbreak of the people; and his doom is made known to him, to leave the passage into the Land of Promise to another leadership. But even the eight and thirty years' wandering in the Wilderness lacked not the LORD's watchfulness. Towards the end of the wandering, they passed by Edom, but were forbidden to attack Moab and Ammon. With the crossing of the brook Zered, however, the ¶ 6. The LORD our God spoke unto us in Horeb, saying: 'Ye have dwelt long enough in this mountain; 7. turn you, and take your journey, and go to the hill-country of the Amorites and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the Arabah, in the hill-country, and in the Lowland, and in the South, and by the sea-shore; the land of the Canaanites, and Lebanon, as far as the great river, the river Euphrates. 8. Behold, I have set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the LORD swore unto your fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give unto them and to their seed after them.' ¶ 9. And I spoke unto you at that time, saying: 'I am not able to bear you myself alone; 10. the LORD your God hath multiplied you, and, behold, ye are this day as the stars of heaven for multitude.— 11. The LORD, the God of your fathers, make you a thousand times so many more new era began: the dread of Israel fell upon the heathen peoples. In vain Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Og, king of Bashan, resisted: their cities were taken, their people extirpated, their land divided among the tribes of Reuben, Gad and half-Manasseh.

The remainder of Moses' First Discourse will be dealt with in connection with the next Sedrah, p. 755.

6-8. COMMAND TO START FROM HOREB

6. the LORD our God. Placed emphatically at the beginning of the sentence as the motive of the whole Discourse. 'The phrase the LORD our God has the intimate accent of a common affection. No phrase has been more helpful to piety in all generations' (G. A. Smith).

7. hill-country. The central mountain-range of Palestine.

Amorites. The general term for the inhabitants of Canaan prior to the entry of the Israelites; Amos ii, 9; see p. 153.

Arabah. Here refers to its northern part, the Jordan Valley, ending in the Dead Sea.

Lowland. Heb. Shephelah. The foothills between the Central Range and the Maritime Plain. It is one of the most fertile tracts in the land.

the South. The Negeb; the dry steppe-district south of Judah; see on Num. xiii, 17.

the sea-shore. The Plain extending inwards from the coast of the Mediterranean to a distance of from four to fifteen miles.

Lebanon. The range of mountains to the north of the Holy Land.

the river Euphrates. The ideal limit assigned to the territory of Israel; cf. Gen. xv, 18.

8. the land which the LORD swore unto your fathers. This phrase occurs more than twenty times in Deuteronomy. The Divine love towards the Patriarchs and the Promise to give their children possession of Canaan (see Gen. xii, 7; xxvi, 3 f; and xxviii, 13 f) led to the selection, and are guarantees for the preservation, of Israel.

9-18. APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANTS

The first movement forward towards the conquest of the Holy Land revealed the growing numbers of the Israelites. Moses could no longer, unaided, support the burden of so vast a nation. Others had to share responsibility with him. He has in mind not only the appointment of judges on the advice of Jethro (Exod. xviii), but also the election of seventy elders to help in the administration of the community.

9. not able to bear. A reminiscence of Num. xi, 14.

10. as the stars of heaven. A simile of wonderful beauty. God had fulfilled His promise to increase the children of the Patriarchs; cf. Gen. xv, 5.

11. the LORD . . . bless you. A pious interjection, as in ii Sam. xxiv, 3. Moses hastens to bestow his blessing upon Israel in order that his words be not misunderstood as if he lamented the increase of his people (Hoffman). The phrase, 'The LORD, the God of your fathers,' has in substance been taken over into the Prayer Book. It implies the unbroken continuity of the generations in Israel; and, likewise, the unchanging relationship between God and His 'kingdom of priests'.

12. myself alone bear. Moses now proceeds to recall how the task of government had grown beyond his powers.

as ye are, and bless you, as He hath promised you! *11. 12. How can I myself alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your strife? 13. Get you, from each one of your tribes, wise men, and understanding, and full of knowledge, and I will make them heads over you.' 14. And ye answered me, and said: 'The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do.' 15. So I took the heads of your tribes, wise men, and full of knowledge, and made them heads over you, captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, and captains of fifties, and captains of tens, and officers, tribe by tribe. 16. And I charged your judges at that time, saying: 'Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between a man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. 17. Ye strife. They were quarrelsome, and at this stage it was essential for him to be relieved of petty judicial functions.

13. get you. It is clear from v. 15 that Moses, and not the people, made the selection. As the Sifri points out, the Hebrew word denotes taking counsel about a project, not taking action in connection with it.

full of knowledge. Or, 'known.' Because of their outstanding merit.

15. wise men and full of knowledge. Compare this with what is stated in v. 13, 'wise men, and understanding, and full of knowledge.' The Rabbis explain that Moses was unable to find men who possessed all the desired qualifications.

officers. Officials in the administration of justice and maintenance of civil order, whose duty it was to put in force the instructions of their superiors (Talmud). Some render the Heb. shoterim 'recorders', from שטר, 'document.'

16. hear the causes between. lit. 'hear between'; i.e. not to listen to ex parte statements, but to all that is said on both sides (Talmud).

the stranger. In matters involving equity, there must be no difference between an Israelite and the resident alien. 'The care taken by Israelite law to protect strangers finds no parallel in Babylonia' (S. A. Cook). To-day, a great modern state outlaws a section of its own population, and oppresses it far more than it would dare to oppress total aliens.

that is with him. The Rabbis sometimes understand it in the sense of 'inhabiting his house', and, therefore, more in his power. The very life of such a man may depend on justice being granted him. The wife of a Chassidic rabbi, having quarrelled with her maid, was setting out to the magistrate to lodge her complaint. Noticing that her husband was about to accompany her, she asked him whither he was bound. 'To the magistrate,' he said. His wife declared that it was beneath his dignity to take any part in a quarrel with a servant. She could deal with the matter herself. The Zaddik replied: 'That may be, but I intend to represent your maid, who, when accused by you, will find no one willing to take her part.' And then, bursting into a passion of tears, he quoted Job xxxi, 13: 'If I did despise the cause of my man-servant, or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me—what then shall I do when God riseth up?' A similar story is related of R. Issi in the Midrash.

17. ye shall not respect . . . in judgment. 'You must never show partiality to any person in a case' (Moffatt). The judge must avoid everything than can possibly be construed as a bribe. The Babylonian teacher Samuel was passing over a plank laid across a stream, when a stranger drew nigh and offered his hand to conduct him with safety over the frail bridge. Samuel, on inquiring who he was, learned that he was a suitor who desired him to adjudicate upon his cause. 'Friend, thou hast disqualified me by thy eager courtesy. I am no longer able to judge the case with impartiality'; see also on xvi, 19.

small . . . great alike. i.e. an insignificant person, and a person of importance. There was not to be one law for the rich, and another for the poor. 'Small' and 'great' may also refer to the matters under dispute. A dispute involving a small sum requires the same earnest attention as that involving a large sum (Talmud).

the judgment is God's. The judge should feel that he is God's representative, and that every judicial decision is a religious act; cf. II Chron. xix, 6 (and the king said to the judges, 'Consider shall not respect persons in judgment; ye shall hear the small and the great alike; ye shall not be afraid of the face of any man; for the judgment is God's; and the cause that is too hard for you ye shall bring unto me, and I will hear it.' 18. And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye should do. ¶ 19. And we journeyed from Horeb, and went through all that great and dreadful wilderness which ye saw, by the way to the hill-country of the Amorites, as the LORD our God commanded us; and we came to Kadesh-barnea. 20. And I said unto you: 'Ye are come unto the hill-country of the Amorites, which the LORD our God giveth unto us. 21. Behold, the LORD thy God hath set the land before thee; go up, take possession, as the LORD, the God of thy fathers, hath spoken unto thee; fear not, neither be dismayed.'*^{III}. 22. And ye came near unto me every one of you, and said: 'Let us send men before us, that they may search the land for us, and bring us back word of the way by which we must go up, and the cities unto which we shall come.' 23. And the thing pleased me well; and I took twelve men of you, one man for every tribe; 24. and they turned and went up into the mountains, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and spied it out. 25. And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us back word, and said: 'Good is the land which the LORD our God giveth unto us.' 26. Yet ye would not go up, but rebelled against the com-

In Jewish teaching all those who administer the law in accordance with right, and thereby maintain the moral foundations—Truth and Justice—upon which human society rests, are performing a Divine task. 'Every judge who renders righteous judgment, Scripture deems him a co-partner of the Holy One, blessed be He, in the work of Creation' (Talmud).

19. dreadful wilderness. 'Wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions, and thirsty ground where was no water' (viii, 15).

22-25. The Mission of the Spies.

22. ye came near unto me. By combining what is related here with Num. xiii, we get a full understanding of the incident. The plan originated with the people; it commended itself to Moses; and was sanctioned by God. Moses does not here repeat all the details, because a reminder of all those details is not required for his address of admonition; whereas the historical account in Numbers could well dispense with narrating the circumstance that it was the Israelites who had demanded the sending of the Spies. 'It is evident that a circumstance may be passed over in silence by the historian, which nevertheless the orator selects as lending emphasis to his oration' (Hoffmann). It was important to remind them that the sending of the spies, which led immediately to their rebellion, was their own suggestion (Sifri).

23. the thing pleased me well. But it did not please God. It is to be noted that in Num. xiii, 2 the Hebrew is lit. 'send for thyself men', and God, as it were, dissociated Himself from the scheme; whereas in the appointment of men to assist Moses, which had God's approval, Scripture relates, 'The LORD said unto Moses, gather for Me seventy men' (Num. xi, 16).

Whither are we going up? our brethren have made our heart to melt, saying: The people is greater and taller than we; the cities are great and fortified up to heaven; and moreover we have seen the sons of the Anakim there.' 29. Then I said unto you: 'Dread not, neither be afraid of them. 30. The LORD your God who goeth before you, He shall fight for you, according to all that He did for you in Egypt before your eyes; 31. and in the wilderness, where thou hast seen how that the LORD thy God bore thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went, until ye came unto this place. 32. 'Surely there shall not one of these men, even this evil generation, see the good land, which I swore to give unto your fathers, 36. save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, he shall see it; and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children; because he hath wholly followed the LORD.' 37. the LORD hated us. To this extreme of unbelief and ingratitude were the people driven by the report of a few among themselves, in spite of their long experience of God's leading. So I spoke unto you, and ye hearkened not; but ye rebelled against the commandment of the LORD, and were presumptuous, and went up into the hill-country. 44. 'They angered Him also at the waters of Meribah, so that it went ill with Moses because of them' (Psalm cvi, 32). The leader must share responsibility for the failings of his flock; see also on iii, 26. 'Moses alone realizes all that life in the Promised Land may be; and Moses alone of all the vast assembly is the one who will never see it. The LORD was angry with me for your sakes, this is the phrase under which the speaker veils the breakdown of his life-task' (Moulton). hearkened not. Because their weeping was not the outcome of sorrow over sin; but of sorrow over the consequences of sin. This feeling the old theologians named 'attrition'; in contrast with the sincere penitence—the sorrow over sin itself—which they called contrition. There is all the difference in the world between a man who is contrite and one who is merely 'attrite'.

according unto the days that ye abode there. Heb. כִּי־יָמִים אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבַתֶּם. Hoffmann and Driver take this as an example of the Semitic idiom often employed by a writer who is either unable, or has no occasion, to speak explicitly. Rashbam, Mendelssohn, and Luzzatto accordingly render, 'And ye remained in Kadesh the many days that ye abode there'; i.e. as is well known to you.

CHAPTER II

In the first portion of his Discourse, Moses dwelt on the abortive attempt to enter Canaan. He now recalls (II-III, 29) the victories that marked the close of their wanderings, victories that presaged Israel's conquest of the Promised Land. He thus points out that unbelief and rebellion brought shame and punishment; while repentant return to God and obedience to His will were crowned by blessing and triumph.

II, 1-8. ROUND MOUNT SEIR

After the repulse at Kadesh, the Israelites turned back towards the Red Sea, skirting Mt. Seir, until God commanded them to turn northward, and pass peacefully through Esau's territory.

1. by the way to the Red Sea. i.e. in the direction of the north-eastern branch of the Red sea, the Gulf of Akabah.

many days. Thirty-eight years; see v. 14 below.

3. turn you northward 'The Israelites must be imagined by this time to have made their way along the south-western and southern border of Edom, as far as the south-east end of the Arabah, so that a turn northwards would at once lead them along the eastern border of Edom in the direction of Moab' (Driver); cf. Judges xi, 18.

4. ye are to pass through. This is quite distinct from the earlier attempt to shorten the journey by passing through Edomite territory from Kadesh on the western frontier, permission for which was refused by the king of Edom; Num. xx.

be afraid of you. The western border of Edom is a series of natural fortresses, making it easy to repel any invading host. Not so the eastern border.

5. contend not. lit. 'incite not.' God is the ruler of the whole world. All the nations—not only Israel—were under God's Providential rule, and have had their territories assigned to them. Israel therefore must respect these possessions and not become a mere conquering people. Israel must confine his ambitions to the one Land Divinely assigned to him at the very beginning of his being as a family (S. R. Hirsch).

unto Esau. David fought against the descendants of Esau and made them his 'servants' (II Sam. viii, 14), but he did not dispossess them of their land; and later, in the reign of Jehoram, they again became independent (II Kings viii, 20 f).

and ye shall also buy water of them for money, that ye may drink. 7. For the LORD thy God hath blessed thee in all the work of thy hand; He hath known thy walking through this great wilderness; these forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing.' 8. So we passed by from our brethren the children of Esau, that dwell in Seir, from the way of the Arabah, from Elath and from Ezion-geber. ¶ And we turned and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab. 9. And the LORD said unto me: 'Be not at enmity with Moab, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of his land for a possession; because I have given Ar unto the children of Lot for a possession.—10. The Emim dwelt therein aforetime, a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakim; 11. there also are accounted Rephaim, as the Anakim; but the Moabites call them Emim. 12. And in Seir dwelt the Horites aforetime, but the children of Esau succeeded them; and they destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their stead; as Israel did unto the land of his possession, which the LORD wilderness. The Heb. מדבר does not always mean 'a desert'. It often denotes 'a place where cattle is driven to pasture', uncultivated land. 'Israel kept so far east, not only to avoid the fertile and settled districts of Edom and Moab, but so as not to have to cross the lower stretches of the great canyon between Edom and Moab. These lower stretches are deep, the sides steep, and the roads over them difficult for caravans. The route of Hajj, apparently that of Israel, crosses the much shallower head of this wady on the desert border. Once over it, they were in the wilderness east of Moab' (G. A. Smith).

9. Ar. The capital of Moab, situated in the valley of Arnon, on the Moabite frontier; Num. xxi, 15, 28.

the children of Lot. See Gen. xix, 37.

10-12. These three verses are a parenthetic note on the earlier inhabitants of Moab and Edom, and introduced by Moses probably on writing down his Discourse.

10. Emim. 'The dreaded ones'; Gen. xiv, 5.

11. Rephaim. See in Gen. xiv, 5; xv, 20.

12. Horites. See Gen. xiv, 6 and xxxvi, 20 f; the name has been translated 'cave-dwellers.' Macalister has discovered at Gezer the remains of a pre-Semitic cave-dwelling race, using stone implements; and he identifies these with the Horites. A far different view is propounded by J. W. Jack, who regards them as being 'one of the most important cultural races of Western Asia during the earlier part of the second millennium. Some time before the Semites arrived on the scene, they occupied the whole of northern Mesopotamia. It was to the Horites or Hurrians that the Hittites directly owed their civilization, including their religion and most of their literature. This ancient race, who were in the country of Seir as early as the time of Abraham, must have exerted a considerable influence on the Hebrews'.

succeeded them. Rashi notes that the verb is unexpectedly in the imperfect tense and gave unto them.—13. Now rise up, and get you over the brook Zered.' And we went over the brook Zered. 14. And the days in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, were thirty and eight years; until all the generation, even the men of war, were consumed from the midst of the camp, as the LORD swore unto them. 15. Moreover the hand of the LORD was against them, to discomfit them from the midst of the camp, until they were consumed. ¶ 16. So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people, 17. that the LORD spoke unto me, saying: 18. 'Thou art this day to pass over the border of Moab, even Ar; 19. and when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, harass them not, nor contend with them; for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon for a possession; because I have given it unto the children of Lot for a possession.—20. That also is accounted a land of Rephaim: Rephaim dwelt therein aforetime; but the Ammonites call them Zamzummim, 21. a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakim; but the LORD destroyed them before them: and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead; 22. as He did for the children of Esau, that dwell in Seir, when He destroyed the Horites from before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead even unto this day; 23. and the Avvim, that dwelt in villages as far as Gaza, the Caphtorim, that came forth out of Caphtor, destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead.— implies, 'continued to dispossess them'; i.e. gradually dispossessed them.

as Israel did. Refers to the conquest of trans-Jordanic territory (Num. xxxii).

13-15. THE CROSSING OF ZERED

This was an important step; hence the mention of the time that had elapsed since Israel left Kadesh, and also that now the doom passed on the men of war because of their murmuring had exhausted itself. Since this doom was no longer resting on their efforts, the people could with every expectation of the Divine help go forward to the conquest of the new country (Welch).

13. brook. A torrent-valley — the hollow between hills that is usually dry in summer, but a fast-rushing torrent in the rainy season—a wady.

Zered. See Num. xxi, 12.

14. the LORD swore unto them. See Num. xiv, 21 f.

15. was against them. The generation of murmurers did not perish entirely from natural causes. God hastened their annihilation, so as to enable their children to pass over the Jordan.

16-25. AMMONITES AND AMORITES

19. children of Ammon. Inhabited the district between the Arnon and Jabbok, the tributaries of the Jordan.

20-23. Another archæological note.

20. Zamzummim. Nothing is known of them. Their name is held by some to be formed on the analogy of the Greek 'barbaroi', as a people whose speech sounded uncouth (G. A. Smith).

23. Avvim. Only mentioned again in Josh. xiii, 3 f, as a Philistine people.

Caphtor. i.e. Crete; see Gen. x, 14.

24. Rise ye up, take your journey, and pass over the valley of Arnon; behold, I have given into thy hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land; begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle. 25. This day will I begin to put the dread of thee and the fear of thee upon the peoples that are under the whole heaven, who, when they hear the report of thee, shall tremble, and be in anguish because of thee.* ¶ 26. And I sent messengers out of the wilderness of Kedemoth unto Sihon king of Heshbon with words of peace, saying: 27. 'Let me pass through thy land; I will go along by the highway, I will neither turn unto the right hand nor to the left. 28. Thou shalt sell me food for money, that I may eat; and give me water for money, that I may drink; only let me pass through on my feet; 29. as the children of Esau that dwell in Seir, and the Moabites that dwell in Ar, did unto me; until I shall pass over the Jordan into the land which the LORD our God giveth us.' 30. But Sihon king of Heshbon would not let us pass by him; for the LORD thy God hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate, that He might deliver him into thy hand, as appeareth this day.*^{vi} ¶ 31. And the LORD said unto me: 'Behold, I have begun to deliver up Sihon and his land before thee; begin to possess his land.' 32. Then Sihon came out against us, he and all his people, unto battle at Jahaz. 33. And the LORD our God delivered him up before us; and we smote him, and his

24. rise ye up. This verse is the continuation of v. 19. From Num. xxi, 26 we learn that Heshbon and the surrounding territory had belonged to the Moabites, from whom it had been wrested by Sihon.

25. this day. i.e. the day the Israelites cross the Arnon to start on the conquest of Canaan. under the whole heaven. An oratorical overstatement occurring several times in Scripture.

26-37. VICTORY OVER SIHON

26. Kedemoth. The precise site is unknown, but probably somewhere near the upper course of the Arnon. The name occurs later as that of a Levitical city in the territory of Reuben; Josh. xiii, 18.

with words of peace. i.e. messengers with proposals for a peaceful passage through his land, and undertaking to pay for such provisions as would be required; cf. Num. xxi, 21 f.

27. by the highway. The Heb. is, 'by the way, by the way'; i.e. by the appointed road and nowhere else. In Num. xxi, 22 the phrase is 'by the king's highway'.

29. as the children of Esau . . . did unto me. As distinct from the kingdom of Edom; see on v. 4.

30. hardened his spirit. Similar to the phrase used of Pharaoh; see note on Exod. vii, 3. 'The meaning is, As God rules all, so to Him must be traced all that happens in the world. In some sense all acts, whether good or bad, all agencies, whether beneficent or destructive, have their source and derive their power from Him. But nevertheless men have moral responsibility for their acts, and are fully and justly conscious of ill-desert. It is to be noted that God is never said to harden the heart of a good man. It is always those who are guilty of acts of evil-doing upon whom this works' (Harper).

obstinate. Heb. 'strong.'

as appeareth this day. As experience has now shown.

sons, and all his people. 34. And we took all his cities at that time, and utterly destroyed every city, the men, and the women, and the little ones; we left none remaining; 35. only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourselves, with the spoil of the cities which we had taken. 36. From Aroer, which is on the edge of the valley of Arnon, and from the city that is in the valley, even into Gilead, there was not a city too high for us: the LORD our God delivered up all before us. 37. Only to the land of the children of Ammon thou camest not near; all the side of the river Jabbok, and the cities of the hill-country, and wheresoever the LORD our God forbade us.

CHAPTER III

1. Then we turned, and went up the way to Bashan; and Og the king of Bashan came out against us, he and all his people, unto battle at Edrei. 2. And the LORD said unto me: 'Fear him not; for I have delivered him, and all his people, and his land, into thy hand; and thou shalt do unto him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heshbon.' 3. So the LORD our God delivered into our hand Og also, the king of Bashan, and all his people; and we smote him until none was left to him remaining. 4. And we took all his cities at that time; there was not a city which we took not from them; threescore cities, all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan. 5. All these were fortified

34. utterly destroyed. Heb. 'treated as herem'; i.e. placed them under the ban of extermination. Such was the rule of warfare in the days of old, when war was a sacred act. The ruthlessness of those methods is as hideous to us to-day as war itself will—we hope and pray—be to the men and women of the future. And if it is the wholesale nature of the destruction that especially shocks our moral judgment, it is well for us to consider that in the next World War it is especially the defenceless population that will be exposed to annihilation. For the ban in connection with the Canaanites, see on xx, 18.

36. the city. The capital, Ar; cf. on v. 9.

37. thou camest not near. In accordance with the warning in v. 19.

forbade us. The Heb. is 'commanded us', and the words 'not to conquer' are understood; as in iv, 23.

CHAPTER III, 1-7. FURTHER VICTORIES

The Israelite hosts, advancing northwards towards Bashan, encounter and defeat Og and conquer his cities.

1. and went up. This phrase denotes travelling northward, since there is an almost continuous ascent from South to North (Rashi).

Bashan. The fertile district north of Gilead; see on v. 10.

Og. See Num. xxi, 33 f.

2. fear him not. Og was a more formidable opponent than Sihon, belonging as he did to the race of giants.

3. none was left to him. See on ii, 34.

4. region of Argob. Probably identical with the modern el-Leja, south of Damascus, and east of Lake Tiberias.

5. gates. The Heb. is in the dual, 'double gates,' an indication of the strength of the doors to keep out the enemy.

And this land we took in possession at that time; from Aroer, which is by the valley of Arnon, and half the hill-country of Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites and to the Gadites; 13. and the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half-tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob—all that Bashan is called the land of Rephaim. 14. 8-17. ALLOTMENT OF THE CONQUERED LAND

8. two kings of the Amorites. Sihon and Og.

9. Sirion . . . Senir. An archæological note. 'The several names in the Text, as also that of Sion (Deut. iv, 48), are all descriptive. Rising with its grey snow-capped cone to a height of about 9,500 feet, it is visible from most parts of the Promised Land, and even from the depths of the Jordan Valley and the shores of the Dead Sea. Hence it was Sion, the up-raised; or Hermon, the lofty peak; or Senir, and Sirion, the glittering "breastplate" of ice; or above all Lebanon the "Mont Blanc" of Palestine, the "White Mountain" of ancient times' (Stanley).

10. plain. The Plateau of Moab.

Gilead. The rough and rugged, yet picturesque, hill-country bounded on the west by the Jordan; on the north, by the deep glen of the Yarmuk; on the south, by the valley of Heshbon; and on the east, melting away gradually into the high plateau of Arabia.

Salcah. On the extreme south-east corner of Bashan, situated on very high ground and forming a natural fortress.

11. for only Og. This explains why the Israelites were able to enter into possession of the territory. With the death of Og, the formidable race of Rephaim came to an end.

bedstead. This is the meaning which the word has in the Bible. In Aramaic the word signifies 'coffin'; hence there are some who suppose that what is here meant is the king's sarcophagus. Some sites in Eastern Palestine are strewn with stone-coffins. However, the Biblical Hebrew for sarcophagus is always ארון. The bedstead is mentioned in order to indicate the huge size of Og; and it is not improbable that his bed would have been preserved as a curiosity.

Rabbah. Situated 25 miles north-east of the Dead Sea.

the cubit of a man. An ordinary cubit, the length of which was about 18 inches. This does not necessarily mean that the height of Og was nine cubits, as the bed is always longer than the man who occupies it.

12. this land. From the valley of Arnon unto Mount Hermon.

Aroer. See on II, 36.

13. the rest of Gilead. i.e. the part north of Jabbok.

border of the Geshurites and the Maacathites, and called them, even Bashan, after his own name, Havvoth-jair, unto this day.^{*vii.}—15. And I gave Gilead unto Machir. 16. And unto the Reubenites and unto the Gadites I gave from Gilead even unto the valley of Arnon, the middle of the valley for a border; even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon; 17. the Arabah also, the Jordan being the border thereof, from Chinnereth even unto the sea of the Arabah, the Salt Sea, under the slopes of Pisgah eastward. ¶ 18. And I commanded you at that time, saying: 'The LORD your God hath given you this land to possess it; ye shall pass over armed before your brethren the children of Israel, all the men of valour. 19. But your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle—I know that ye have much cattle—shall abide in your cities which I have given you;^{*m.} 20. until the LORD give rest unto your brethren, as unto you, and they also possess the land which the LORD your God giveth them beyond the Jordan; then shall ye return every man unto his possession, which I have given you.' 21. And I commanded Joshua at that time, saying: 'Thine eyes have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto these two kings; so shall the LORD do unto all the kingdoms whither thou goest over. 22. Ye shall not fear them; for the LORD your God, He it is that fighteth for you.'

15. Gilead. From the context it is clear that the northern half of Gilead is meant.

CHAPTER I

CAP. I. א

1. The vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

2. Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth,
For the LORD hath spoken:
Children I have reared, and brought up,
And they have rebelled against Me.

א חזון ישעיהו בן אמוז אשר חזה על יהודה וירושלם

2 בִּימֵי עֲזַיָּהוּ יוֹתָם אָחָז וְחִזְקִיָּהוּ מְלָכֵי יְהוּדָה: שָׁמָעוּ שָׁמַיִם

וְתִאֲנִי אֶרֶץ כִּי יְהוָה דִּבֶּר בָּנִים גִּבְלָתִי וְרוֹמְמָתִי וְהֵב

3 פָּשְׁעוּ בִּי: יָדַע שׁוֹר כָּנְתִי וְחִמּוֹר אֲבוֹס בְּעַלְיוֹ יִשְׂרָאֵל

This Sedrah always precedes the Fast of Av, the anniversary of the Fall of Jerusalem, both at the hands of the Babylonians, and six centuries later at the hands of the Romans, with the consequent dispersion of Israel and the long drawn out suffering, not yet ended, that followed these calamities. The Haftorahs read on the three Sabbaths preceding that Fast are called 'Haftorahs of Rebuke'. For the third Sabbath, Devarim, the opening chapter of Isaiah—the Great Arraignment of Judah—has been selected, in order to warn all generations in Israel of the moral and social transgressions that led to the downfall of the Jewish State.

Isaiah, the son of Amoz, was a native of Jerusalem. His family seems to have been one of rank, and he moved in royal circles. His Prophetic ministry extended for close upon 40 years, from 740–701 B.C.E. These years were the most stirring that the kingdom of Judah had yet passed through; and, throughout that entire period, he was the dominant figure in the land. The momentous event of his time was the rise of Assyria. From being a mere garrison province of Babylon in northern Mesopotamia, Assyria had become a world power. The kingdoms of Syria and Israel fell before the Assyrians in 721; and only as by a miracle was Jerusalem delivered from their grasp in 701.

With the downfall of the kingdom of Israel, Judah became the sole representative and repository of true Religion; and in the fate of that tiny land, the moral destinies of the whole world were involved. In this time of upheaval and spiritual travail, Isaiah brought to King and People the message of the holiness, omnipotence, and sovereignty of God ('Holy, holy, holy, is the LORD of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory'). With passionate fervour he sought to instil his own vital faith in God and Providence into the heart of his brethren, and interpret for them the crises of history in the light of Divine guidance and righteousness. His efforts brought him into violent conflict with the war party of his day; and throughout his life, he remained an implacable enemy of shallow 'patriots' and opportunist politicians.

Great in thought and great in action, Isaiah united the profoundest religious insight with wide knowledge of men and affairs. The princely personality of the man is reflected in his style. His words are instinct with power, and he is the master of the sublime in universal literature. His moral passion, moreover, marks him as one of the world's greatest orators.

CHAPTER I. THE GREAT ARRAIGNMENT

Though Chapter I is not the earliest of Isaiah's prophecies (Rashi), its choice as the opening of the Book is most appropriate. It strikes the fundamental notes of Isaiah's teaching, and at the same time indicates the general line of Prophetic doctrine with a force and clearness unsurpassed in Scripture. The probable date of this prophecy is the time of Sennacherib's campaign in 701 B.C.E., when the Assyrians had overrun the kingdom of Judah, and were now besieging Jerusalem. A less probable date is 734, the year of the Syrian invasion.

1. vision. Heb. חֲזוֹן; what the seer saw with the eye of the spirit; here used collectively for visions, Prophetic revelations. From this opening word, the Sabbath before Tisha-be-Av is called שַׁבַּת חֲזוֹן.

Amoz. A different name from Amos, the Prophet.

and Jerusalem. Or, 'and especially Jerusalem.'

This verse is not the heading to the whole Book of Isaiah, but only to the first collection of prophecies (I–XII), none of which is addressed to foreign nations.

Uzziah . . . Hezekiah. During the reign of Uzziah, the kingdom enjoyed considerable prosperity; but under his weaker successors, the evils latent in an increase of wealth became pronounced. Isaiah preached repentance and faith, and sternly insisted on the moral aspect of the true religious life.

2–3. The LORD's complaint against His people. He has been a father to Israel, but Israel has proved himself ignorant, disobedient, and ungrateful.

3. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib;
But Israel doth not know,
My people doth not consider

4. Ah sinful nation,
A people laden with iniquity,
A seed of evil-doers,
Children that deal corruptly;
They have forsaken the LORD,
They have contemned the Holy One of Israel,
They have turned away backward.
5. On what part will ye be yet stricken,
Seeing ye stray away more and more?
The whole head is sick,
And the whole heart faint;
6. From the sole of the foot even unto the head
There is no soundness in it;
But wounds, and bruises, and festering sores:
They have not been pressed, neither bound up,
Neither mollified with oil.

2. hear, O heavens . . . earth. Let all creation hear and shudder at Israel's unnatural conduct; see also on Deut. xxx, 19; xxxii, 1; Micah vi, 1. 'In their poetic outbursts, the Prophets not only personify nature, but they ethicize nature; i.e. they endow it with the capacity of understanding moral distinctions' (Steinthal).

hath spoken. Better, speakeeth (Ibn Ezra).

rebelled against Me. Faithlessly broken away from Me.

3. ox . . . ass. Ingratitude reduces Israel below the level of the dumb animals.

doth not know. Does not wish to know (Rashi). Hosea too finds lack of 'knowledge of the LORD' the source of all moral evil. High and low alike fail to understand the nature and significance of the spiritual gifts God had conferred upon Israel.

doth not consider. i.e. does not try to understand. The Heb. התבונן is the Hithpael and may also mean, 'does not understand himself.' Know thyself is a moral obligation for nations as well as for individuals. The Jew can only know himself through his Judaism and his past; and the great majority of Jews to-day are ignorant of the ideals of their Faith, their Scripture, their Sacred Language, and the story of Israel. Such lack of self-knowledge is, at all times, monstrous ingratitude to his Heavenly Father.

4-9. The Prophet speaks. The body politic is diseased to the core. But for the lovingkindness of God, their destruction would have been equal to that of Sodom and Gomorrah.

4 לא ידע עמי לא התבונן: ראי ונאי חטא עם כבוד עון גרע מרעים בנים משחיתים עזבו את־יהוה נאצו את־

ה קדוש ישראל נזרו אחר: על־מה חבו עוד חוסיפו סרה

7 חפשו ולא רבקה בשמן: ארצכם שממה עריכם שרפות

אש אדמתכם לנגדכם ורים אכלים אתה ושממה

7. Your country is desolate;
Your cities are burned with fire;
Your land, strangers devour it in your presence,
And it is desolate, as overthrown by floods.

4. sinful nation. Ye who were destined to be a 'holy nation' (Rashi).

a seed of evil-doers. A brood, or generation, consisting of evil-doers.

contemned. Better, despised, spurned.

Holy One of Israel. This Divine title is characteristic of Isaiah, occurring 39 times in the Book, and only five times in the rest of Scripture. Holiness is an essential attribute of God, signifying His unapproachable exaltation; His abhorrence of all that is untrue, unclean, or sinful; and His eternal righteousness; see p. 302.

turned away . . . backward. Sunk back into idolatry; Ezek. xiv, 3.

5. on what part. The whole body being wounded.

6. pressed. lit. 'pressed out'; i.e. cleansed.

7. your country. The figure of speech is now explained by concrete details. The wild Assyrian soldiery wrought indescribable ruin in the land.

your cities. In a boasting inscription, the Assyrians claim to have captured 46 cities of Judah.

strangers. Such as might be expected at the hands of barbarian, enemy strangers. Ibn Ezra translates the Heb. ורים by 'floods'.

in your presence. And you are powerless to prevent it.

8. daughter of Zion. The capital remains—but how forlorn. In Hebrew, lands and cities are personified as the mothers of the inhabitants. These too are spoken of collectively as 'the daughter' of the land or city.

8. And the daughter of Zion is left
As a booth in a vineyard,
As a lodge in a garden of cucumbers,
As a besieged city.

9. Except the LORD of hosts
Had left unto us a very small remnant,
We should have been as Sodom,
We should have been like unto Gomorrah.

10. Hear the word of the LORD,
Ye rulers of Sodom;
Give ear unto the law of our God,
Ye people of Gomorrah.

11. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me?

Saith the LORD;
I am full of the burnt-offerings of rams,
And the fat of fed beasts;
And I delight not in the blood

Of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats.
12. When ye come to appear before Me,
Who hath required this at your hand,
To trample My courts?

13. Bring no more vain oblations;
It is an offering of abomination unto Me;

New moon and sabbath, the holding of convocations—

I cannot endure iniquity along with the solemn assembly.

is left. Isolated and helpless, owing to the devastation of the land.

booth . . . lodge. A night-watchman's rough and frail shelter.

9. the LORD of hosts. A peculiarly solemn Divine title to denote the all-embracing sovereignty of God, His command of all the forces of nature and all the powers of men.

had left unto us. Of his own grace and mercy, and not for any righteousness of our own (Rashi).

very small. Heb. כמעט. Rashi and most moderns join this to the second half of the verse, and translate it: 'We had all but been as Sodom, and become like unto Gomorrah.' Those cities had perished through lack of such a remnant; see Gen. xviii, 24 f.

10-17. The true service of God: obedience to the Moral Law as the prerequisite of all worship.

10. rulers of Sodom . . . people of Gomorrah. Thus are emphasized both their wickedness and their peril. 'The fate of Sodom had nearly been theirs, the character of Sodom was wholly so' (Davidson). Note that Isaiah, the courtier and aristocrat, blames the leaders for the degeneracy of the nation (Marti).

rulers of Sodom. lit. 'judges of Sodom,' who walked in the ways of Sodom.

11. to what purpose. None must have known better than the Prophets that acts of worship both kindle and express true religion. But, it is their immortal merit to have proclaimed that the sacrifices of 'judges of Sodom' are an insult to God; cf. Prov. xxi, 27. Throughout this section, it is not the offerings in themselves that are condemned, but the hypocritical character of those who bring the sacrifices. 'The sacrifices were commanded to you that ye call Me to mind and refrain from sin; and, having sinned, that ye confess them at the offering of the sacrifice and repent of your evil ways. If ye do so, the sacrifices are a sweet savour unto Me; but, as it is now, I loathe them' (Kimchi); see pp. 560-2.

12. to trample My courts. 'Like the oxen led in to sacrifice; so formal is your attendance' (Cheyne).

13. vain oblations. False offerings.

holding of convocations. The sacred convocations, or Festivals; Lev. xxiii, 4.

15. spread forth your hands. In prayer. Prayer and festival observance are dear unto God, but not on the part of men whose hands are full of blood, through the cruel wrongs perpetrated or tolerated against the innocent and helpless.

15. And when ye spread forth your hands,
I will hide Mine eyes from you;
Yea, when ye make many prayers,
I will not hear;
Your hands are full of blood.

16. Wash you, make you clean,
Put away the evil of your doings
From before Mine eyes, Cease to do evil;

17. Learn to do well;
Seek justice, relieve the oppressed,
Judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

18. Come now, and let us reason together,
Saith the LORD;
Though your sins be as scarlet,
They shall be as white as snow;
Though they be red like crimson,
They shall be as wool.

19. If ye be willing and obedient,
Ye shall eat the good of the land;

20. But if ye refuse and rebel,
Ye shall be devoured with the sword;
For the mouth of the LORD hath spoken.

21. How is the faithful city Become a harlot!
She that was full of justice,

Righteousness lodged in her,
But now murderers.

22. Thy silver is become dross,
Thy wine mixed with water.

W. H. Green rightly reminds us that nothing is further from the truth than to believe that the Prophets preached a kind of Confucianism; i.e. civic righteousness, without religion or prayer.

16-17. The vital demand of God—repentance, righteousness, charity.

16. make you clean. Cleanse your hearts (Kimchi).

17. learn to do well. Well-doing must be learned by repeated, habitual action. 'Happy is he that wisely considereth the poor,' says the Psalmist. At long last it is recognized that helping others—Philanthropy—is a study, a science! Some connect learn to do well with cease to do evil of the preceding v. Refraining from evil must be supplemented by positive acts of loving-kindness.

justice. Justice—social righteousness that secures for each individual his personal rights.

relieve the oppressed. Or, 'set right the oppressor' by opposition to his course of conduct.

judge. procure justice for.

plead. Take the part of. Heb. רִיבוּ, lit. 'strive'; i.e. do not refrain from strife and struggle in your endeavour to secure justice to the weak and friendless.

18-20. A free offer of pardon to the penitent, but threat of destruction to those who continue in rebellion. The people is given the choice—obedience and prosperity, or disobedience and destruction.

20. devoured with the sword. 'A glance at the ravages of the Assyrian soldiery' (Cheyne).

21-26. A dirge (kinah) over the moral decline of Jerusalem.

21. faithful city. The once faithful city, faithful of old to her Divine Husband.

harlot. Here in the meaning of 'unfaithful wife'; unfaithful through idolatry and social iniquity to Israel's marriage-bond with God; see p. 581.

justice . . . righteousness. 'Righteousness (zedek) is the principle of right action in individuals or the community; judgment (mishpat) the embodiment of that principle in judicial decisions, use, and wont' (Skinner).

lodged. Permanently dwelt there (Kimchi); see II Chronicles xix, 5-6.

murderers. Men guilty of miscarriages of justice.

22. dross . . . mixed. Aside from the literal meaning, these facts are used figuratively to state that the best of the rulers have become debased.

23. Thy princes are rebellious,
And companions of thieves;
Every one loveth bribes,
And followeth after rewards;
They judge not the fatherless,
Neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

24. Therefore saith the LORD, the LORD of hosts,
The Mighty One of Israel:
Ah, I will ease Me of Mine adversaries,
And avenge Me of Mine enemies;
25. And I will turn My hand upon thee,
And purge away thy dross as with lye,
And will take away all thine alloy; 26. And I will restore thy judges as at the first,
And thy counsellors as at the beginning;
Afterward thou shalt be called The city of righteousness,
The faithful city.

23. rebellious. Law-breakers. companions of thieves. In partnership with thieves.

bribes. Moffatt renders: 'Your rulers are unruly men, hand in hand with thieves, everyone fond of his bribe, keen upon fees, but careless of the orphan's rights, and of the widow's cause.'

24-27. In the absence of every sign of repentance on the part of the perverse rulers, one means only remains to bring about better conditions —the Judgment. Through punishment of those rulers, God will vindicate His honour, and hasten the Restoration in Zion (Dillmann).

24. ease Me of. 'Satisfy myself by bringing retribution upon.'

Mine enemies. God deems such corrupt rulers and oppressors of the poor and helpless to be His enemies.

25-27. The spiritual future of Israel.

Cf. Jer. ii, 2, 'I remember for thee the affection of that return of her. Those in Zion who turn to God (Rashi); or, those who will come back from exile. Both Zion and her children will be redeemed through the justice and righteousness which the regenerate people exhibit.

Isaiah never lost hope that a part of the nation
—a Righteous Remnant—would repent. That sanctified minority would survive the Judgment which would befall Israel, and become the seed of a holy, indestructible, eternal People.

3 23. And I besought the LORD at that time, saying: 24. 'O LORD God, Thou hast begun to show Thy servant Thy greatness, and Thy strong hand; for what god is there in heaven or on earth, that can do according to Thy works, and according to Thy mighty acts? 25. Let me go over, I pray Thee, and see the good land that is beyond the Jordan, that goodly hill-country, and Lebanon.' 26. But the LORD was wroth with me for your sakes, and hearkened not unto me; and the LORD said unto me: 'Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto Me of this matter. 27. Get thee up into the top of Pisgah, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold with thine eyes; for thou shalt not go over this Jordan. 28. III, 23-IV, 40. MOSES' FIRST DISCOURSE—

23-29. MOSES' PRAYER AND ITS REJECTION

The signs of God's favour to His people, shown in the victories over the Amorite kings, stirred the personal hope of Moses that he too might see 'the good land that is beyond Jordan'. But it was not to be. He might view the land, but he would never cross there. He was to commit the future to Joshua, his successor.

23. I besought. He does not base his request on his life of service to Israel, but begs it as an act of grace on the part of God (Rashi).

24. begun to show. He yearned to see the consummation of the Divine promise.

25. let me go over. Not as Leader, but as one in the ranks, to whom the Divine decree might not apply. Hence, 'I besought the LORD at that time' (v. 23); i.e. after he had appointed Joshua as his successor (Malbim).

beyond the Jordan. Here, as in v. 20 above, referring to Western Palestine.

that goodly hill-country. i.e. that goodly mountain-land. From where Moses stood the whole of W. Palestine appeared as one compact mountain mass—a thing of surpassing beauty to his mind; cf. xi, 11. The three great landmarks in his life were all connected with mountains. Horeb, where he was called to be the Leader of his people; Sinai, whence issued forth the Divine Proclamation for all time of the Law of conduct; and Nebo, the peak from which he was to behold the Promised Land from afar.

Throughout the Hebrew Scriptures we find a deep love of mountains and mountain scenery. The Rabbis even introduced a special Blessing to be recited on beholding lofty mountains; Authorised Prayer Book, p. 290. All this is something quite exceptional in the Ancient World. No Greek could have written Psalm cxxi, I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains; and no Roman could have exclaimed with the Prophet, Hear O ye mountains, the LORD'S controversy, and ye enduring rocks the foundations of the earth (Micah vi, 2). 'The Greeks cared nothing for their native ranges; and the Romans were disgustingly practical, and regarded the Alps as an inconvenient barrier to conquest and commerce' (A. Lunn). Ruskin, who is supreme in modern times among the revealers of the glory and mystery of mountain landscape, largely drew his inspiration from the Hebrew Bible, which his mother taught him to read daily.

Lebanon. In the clear air of Palestine, the summit of Lebanon, the most prominent of all the mountains in Syria and Palestine, is visible from the plains of Moab.

26. for your sakes. Heb. למעונכם; the word is not the same as in i, 37, and is understood by Hirsch to mean for your good. 'Had the unbelief of Moses gone unpunished, the people would have been hardened in their own transgression. For their sakes, therefore, it was impossible to overlook it' (Dummelow).

28. charge. lit. 'command' him, to do what you may not do! He is to begin the carrying out of the instructions given in Num. xxvii, 19. he shall go over. The he is emphatic.

29. valley. Glen or ravine.

not previously been adjudicated upon, such decisions remaining precedents for the future. The phrase חֻקִּים וּמִשְׁפָּטִים is a standing one in Deuteronomy, but always חֻקִּים comes before מִשְׁפָּטִים; in order to indicate the basic importance of unquestioning obedience to the Divine Will.

CHAPTER IV, 1-40

The historical review in the preceding three chapters is now followed by an eloquent appeal not to forget what they had seen and heard at Horeb. The Divine Law, if obeyed, shall be their wisdom and understanding in the sight of the peoples. Let them remember the marvellous events at Horeb, and keep far from all idolatry. Idolatry would inevitably be followed by exile. Nevertheless, even in exile, if they sought God in contrition and repentance, they would find Him. Moses concludes with an appeal to their experience of the uniqueness of their God, and pleads for whole-hearted obedience to Him.

which I teach. Heb. מִלְמַד. The Jewish people have selected this teaching role of their Lawgiver as the holiest of all his activities, and speak of him not as King Moses, or Moses the Prophet, but as Mosheh Rabbenu, 'Moses our Teacher.'

to do them. This is the main purpose of the teaching. 'Not learning, but doing is the principal thing' (Ethics of the Fathers).

1-4. An appeal to their experience, that should have taught them the disastrous consequences of disobedience. As to the idea of reward and punishment which pervades this and the succeeding chapters, see pp. 924-5.

that ye may live. 'As a nation! As a matter of fact Israel preserved its identity among the nations, and survived the influences which overwhelmed the religions of its neighbours, by its obedience. The Law was a fence about the people' (G. A. Smith); see on Lev. xviii, 5.

1. hearken. Heb. שָׁמַע; understand, take to heart.

statutes. lit. 'engraved decrees'; originally referring to enactments passed by an authoritative body, engraven upon a stone tablet, and exposed in public for the information and guidance of the people. According to the Traditional explanation, chukkim are the precepts the reason for the observance of which is withheld from us; such as the prohibition of swine's flesh. One of their main objects is to inculcate discipline and obedience in the heart of every member of the Holy People. 'To obey is better than sacrifice' (I Sam. xv, 22).

ordinances. Judicial decisions arrived at in connection with a matter which had the God of your fathers. The God who had promised the Patriarchs that the Land would come into the possession of their descendants was now fulfilling that promise. The same God was imposing His commandments upon them, and would reward their fidelity and punish their disobedience in the years to come.

2. ye shall not add. 'A warning against weakening the force of the Divine commandment by additions, omissions, or explanations that would dilute its original meaning, or make it more palatable to human selfishness and desire' (Dillmann). That, however, does not imply that the enactments of the Mosaic code could never be added to or modified as new conditions warranted the change, provided all such modifications were not proclaimed as new revelations from on High (Joseph Karo). 'Israel was not to invent additions to the laws, nor arbitrarily diminish them; e.g. using five species, instead of four, in observing the command of the Lulav, or placing five fringes on a Tallis' (Rashi); see on xiii, 1.

Your eyes have seen what the LORD did in Baal-peor; for all the men that followed the Baal of Peor, the LORD thy God hath destroyed them from the midst of thee. 4. But ye that did cleave unto the LORD your God are alive every one of you this day.*11. 5. Behold, I have taught you statutes and ordinances, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the midst of the land whither ye go in to possess it. 6. Observe therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the peoples, that, when they hear all these statutes, shall say: 'Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.' 7. For what great nation is there, that hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is whensoever we call upon Him? 8. And what great nation is there, that hath statutes and ordinances so righteous as all this law,

3-4. These verses are to be linked on to v. 1, as providing evidence that faithfulness to the Torah spells life, whereas rebellion brings death in its train.

3. Baal of Peor. The heathen deity worshipped in Peor (cf. in, 29) with loathsome rites; see Num. xxv, 1 f.

4. ye that did cleave. The Heb. דבק is used in connection with whole-souled, disinterested love; e.g. to describe Jonathan's loyal affection for David. This v. is recited in the synagogue immediately before the Reading of the Law.

5-8. Israel's greatness and wisdom will be manifest in obedience to the Divine Commandment.

5. I have taught you. The past tense is somewhat strange after the participle used in v. 1. However, this was not the first occasion on which Moses had proclaimed the Divine enactments. He is now merely recapitulating. 'When you reach the goal of your wanderings, remember that I have taught you statutes and judgments for you to observe in the midst of the land' (Nachmanides).

as the LORD my God commanded me. The Jewish teacher is commanded to teach the statutes and judgments to young and old in Israel (Hirsch). For many centuries it was held that teaching had to be free, without the taint of pecuniary remuneration. Hence the astounding phenomenon that the greatest Doctors of the Talmudic Academies were artisans and handicraftsmen, who eked out their living from these occupations. It was only under the stress of persecution and economic necessity that at last, in the 15th century, some rabbis were compelled to take salaries in compensation for the time which they otherwise might have devoted to find their sustenance.

6. observe therefore and do them. Better, take ye heed to do them (Koenig).

in the sight of the peoples. In the estimation of the peoples. After Alexander's conquest of Asia, enlightened Greeks looked upon the Jews as 'philosophers of the East', because of their unique monotheism (G. A. Smith). But the aggrandizement of Israel was not an end in itself: it was to demonstrate to the children of men the Divine in Human History. The sudden rise to power of a horde of slaves, their well-government, prosperity and security, would attract attention. The peoples would ask, What is the secret of Israel's greatness? And, discovering that it rested upon fidelity to the Will of God, they might be induced to pay allegiance to the God of Israel. 'We have here in substance the idea of the missionary purpose of Israel's existence' (Oettli); cf. I Kings x, 1-3; Isa. ii, 1-3. This idea was developed, and frequently emphasized, in Prophetic and Rabbinic literature.

7. so nigh unto them. Israel's religion is unique because of the nearness of man to his Maker that it teaches. It proclaims, No intermediary of any sort is required for the worshipper to approach his God in prayer. 'The LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth,' is the teaching of the Psalmist. The Rabbis only deepened the teaching of Prophets and Psalmists on this head. The charge often brought against Judaism that it knows only a 'distant God' is thus without any foundation.

8. what great nation is there, that hath statutes and ordinances so righteous? Israel's religion is likewise unique through the ethical character and which I set before you this day? 9. Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently lest thou forget the things which, thine eyes saw, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life; but make them known unto thy children and thy children's children; 10. the day that thou stoodest before the LORD thy God in Horeb, when the LORD said unto me: 'Assemble Me the people, and I will make them hear My words, that they may learn to fear Me all the days that they live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.' 11. And ye came near and stood under the mountain; and the mountain burned with fire unto the heart of heaven, with darkness, cloud, and thick darkness. 12. And the LORD spoke unto you out of the midst of the fire; ye heard the voice of words, but ye saw no form; only a voice. 13. And He declared unto you His covenant, which He commanded you to perform, even the ten words; and He wrote them upon two tables of stone. 14. And the LORD commanded righteousness of its laws for the government of human society. Cardinal Faulhaber, after reviewing the poor-laws, the rights of labour, and the administration of justice found in the Pentateuch, placed the following alternative before the Nazi detractors of the Hebrew Scriptures: either such laws are Divinely inspired, or they are the product of a people endowed above all other peoples with positive genius for ethical and social values! 'The cradle of humanity,' he declared, 'is not in Greece; it is in Palestine. Those who do not regard these books as the word of God and as Divine revelation, must admit that Israel is the super-people in the history of the world!' For the tribute to Israel paid a generation before Faulhaber by Leo Tolstoy, see p. 45.

from thy heart. From thy memory; the 'heart' being conceived as the seat of memory.

make them known unto thy children. A second command: These things must also be kept alive in the memory of posterity, so that future generations do not lose their spiritual identity and sink back into heathenism. This transcendent duty towards children and children's children is repeated with the utmost emphasis throughout Deuteronomy. Eventually such insistence on the sacred obligation of religious education led to the first efforts in the world's history to provide elementary instruction to all the children of the community: see p. 818. For the content of the religious education that should be accorded to each Jewish child, see p. 926.

10. the day . . . in Horeb. When Israel was consecrated as a 'kingdom of priests'. The two-fold obligation is insisted upon: first, they are to learn God's Will and shape their lives in accordance therewith; secondly, to teach their children the Divine Will, so that they too may shape their lives in the light of that Will.

11. under. At the foot of (Onkelos, Biur). with darkness. Better, amid darkness, that surrounded the mountain below (Mendelssohn, Driver).

12. ye saw no form. Nothing to indicate a material body. He who was heard at Horeb was not seen.

13. covenant. Heb. berith; a compact of any kind between man and man (Gen. xxi, 32), and between God and man. Here the word is used for the conditions of the Covenant, the terms of the agreement made at Sinai, as binding on Israel; viz. the Ten Commandments.

15. for ye saw. These words till the end of the v. are parenthetical. As no form of God was seen at the Revelation on Mt. Sinai, it follows that representing Him under any image is forbidden, as He is a spiritual Being who cannot be pictured under any image.

female. How blasphemous and unnatural such a representation is to the Israelite mind can be gathered from the fact that the Heb. language does not even possess a word for 'goddess'; cf. 1 Kings xi, 5, where the Heb. for goddess is 'god'.

lift up thine eyes unto heaven. The heavenly luminaries exercised a great fascination upon early man. 'Astronomy and adoration entered the world together' (Martineau). The 'host of heaven' was the dominant influence in Babylonian religion. The Egyptians also revered the sun, the moon, and the stars as symbols of deities. Associated with this worship was also the superstition that the heavenly bodies influenced the lives of mortals, a superstition which is not yet altogether extinct.

unto all the peoples. To be worshipped by them (some Talmud teachers, Rashbam, and Mendelssohn).

RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE

God had suffered the heathens to worship the sun, moon, and stars as a stepping-stone to a higher stage of religious belief. That worship of the heathen nations thus forms part of God's guidance of humanity. But as for the Israelites, God had given them first-hand knowledge of Him through the medium of Revelation. It is for this reason that idolatry was for them an unpardonable offence; and everything that might seduce them from that Divine Revelation was to be ruthlessly destroyed. Hence the amazing tolerance shown by Judaism of all ages towards the followers of other cults, so long as these were not steeped in immorality and crime. Thus the Prophet Malachi declares even the sacrificial offering of heathens to be a glorification of God (see on Mal. i, 11, p. 103). Equally striking is the attitude of the Rabbis toward the heathen world. War had been declared against Canaanites not because of matters of dogma or ritual, but because of the savage cruelty and foul licentiousness of their lives and cult. But the Rabbis never regarded the heathens of their own day as on the same moral level with the Canaanites. Their contemporary heathens in the Roman and Persian Empires obeyed the laws of conduct which the Rabbis deemed vital to the existence of human society, the so-called 'seven commandments given to the children of Noah' (see p. 33, on v. 7). They wisely held that in their religious life these heathens merely followed the traditional worship which they had inherited from their fathers before them (מִנְהַג, אבותיהן בידיהן), and they could not therefore be held responsible for failure to reach a true notion of the Unity of God, בְּנֵי נֹחַ לֹא נִזְהָרוּ. Such followers of other faiths—they taught—were judged by God purely by their moral life. חֲסִידֵי אֻמּוֹת הָעוֹלָם יֵשׁ לָהֶם חֵלֶק לְעוֹלָם הַבָּא. 'The righteous of all nations have a share in the world to come,' and are heirs of immortality, alongside the righteous in Israel. A later Midrash proclaimed: 'I call heaven and heaven, thou be drawn away and worship them, and serve them, which the LORD thy God hath allotted unto all the peoples under the whole heaven. 20. But you hath the LORD taken and brought forth out of the iron furnace, out of Egypt, to be unto Him a people of inheritance, as ye are this day. 21. Now the LORD was angered with me for your sakes, and swore that I should not go over the Jordan, and that I should not go in unto that good land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance; 22. but I must die in this land, I must not go over the Jordan; but ye are to go over, and possess that good land. 23. earth to witness that, whether it be Jew or heathen, man or woman, freeman or bondman—only according to their acts does the Divine spirit rest upon them.’ And in the darkest days of the Middle Ages, Solomon ibn Gabirol, the great philosopher and Synagogue hymn-writer, sang

‘Thou art the LORD,
And all beings are Thy servants, Thy domain;
And through those who serve idols vain Thine honour is not detracted from,
For they all aim to Thee to come.’

This is probably the earliest enunciation of religious tolerance in Western Europe.

20. iron furnace. One whose fire is fierce enough to melt iron—a symbol of intense suffering and bitter bondage.

a people of inheritance. Involving a relationship that is doubly inalienable. It cannot be renounced by Israel; ‘and that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all; in that ye say: We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone. As I live, saith the LORD God, surely with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with fury poured out, will I be king over you’ (Ezekiel xx, 32–33). Nor will God ever forsake Israel; ‘for the LORD will not forsake His people for His great name’s sake; because it hath pleased the LORD to make you a people unto Himself’ (1 Sam. xii, 22).

22. in this land. He is not to participate in the inheritance! the words tremble with suppressed emotion, and his soul is full of that thought.

I must not go over Jordan. lit. ‘I am not to go over Jordan.’ This clause seems unnecessary after, I must die in this land. Hence Rashi’s comment, Not even my bones will be carried over Jordan to be laid to rest in the sacred soil, as will happen with the bones of Joseph. LORD of the Universe—Moses prayed—the bones of Joseph shall rest in the Holy Land, why then shall I not enter it? The Divine answer was, ‘Joseph always acknowledged himself a Hebrew, as it is said, “I was stolen out of the land of the Hebrews.” Whereas thou, Moses, didst not always act thus. When the daughters of Jethro told their father, “An Egyptian helped us,” thou wast silent and didst not contradict them. Therefore thou shalt not be buried in the Holy Land’ (Midrash).

23. take heed. This v. is not a mere repetition of v. 15 f. The fate meted out to Moses should make Israel the more grateful for God’s goodness, and at the same time more heedful not to incur God’s wrath.

hath forbidden thee. lit. ‘hath commanded thee’, not to do (Rashi).

24. a devouring fire. Consuming whatever rouses His indignation.

A ‘JEALOUS’ GOD

a jealous God. The Heb. el kanna means, ‘a zealous God’, full of zeal for holiness and justice, to whom man’s doings and dealings are not a matter of indifference, but Who renders strict retribution for all idolatry and iniquity. It also means, ‘a jealous God.’ That may appear a startling description of God. It signifies that God claims the exclusive love of His children, their entire sincerity—and complete self-surrender. He will not allow the veneration and loyalty due to Him alone to be shared with other objects of worship; see on Exod. xx, 5.

LORD thy God is a devouring fire, a jealous God. ¶ 25. When thou shalt beget children, and children's children, and ye shall have been long in the land, and shall deal corruptly, and make a graven image, even the form of any thing, and shall do that which is evil in the sight of the LORD thy God, to provoke Him; 26. I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land whereunto ye go over the Jordan to possess it; ye shall not prolong your days upon it, but shall utterly be destroyed. 27. And the LORD shall scatter you among the peoples, and ye shall be left few in number among the nations, whither the LORD shall lead

v. 23. סבירין כאשר

This conception of 'a jealous God' saved Israel from going under in the days of ancient heathendom, as well as in the days of Greece and Rome. 'None of the founders of the great heathen religions had any inkling of this idea of a jealous God, a God who would have "none other gods," a God of terrible Truth who would not tolerate any lurking belief in magic witchcraft, or old customs, or any sacrificing to the god-king, or any trifling with the stern unity of things' (H. G. Wells).

Our fathers' realization that truth can make no concession to untruth, nor enter into compromise with it, without self-surrender, is responsible for the religious stand they took up in the days of Greece and Rome. 'When Jerusalem fell, Rome was quite prepared to give the God of Israel a place in her Pantheon. Israel absolutely refused such religious annexation: the one, unique and universal God of Israel alone was a living God; Jupiter and his like were things of naught, figments of the imagination. And the same reasons that would not permit the Jews to bend the knee to the gods of pagan Rome, prevented them in later generations from allowing themselves to be absorbed by the two great Religions that issued from Israel's bosom. Here too they found, both in dogma and morality, novelties and concessions that were repugnant to the austere simplicity of their absolute monotheism' (T. Reinach).

And the blessed doctrine of 'a jealous God' is of vital importance for the Jew's attitude towards the neo-paganism of to-day and to-morrow. 'Judaism's mission is just as much to teach the world that there are false gods and false ideals, as it is to bring it nearer to the true one. Abraham, the friend of God, began his career, according to the legend, with breaking idols; and it is his particular glory to have been in opposition to the whole world' (Schechter).

ON REPENTANCE

They would be scattered among the peoples, if they fell away from the LORD. But even in those days of tribulation God's mercy would not forsake His people, if they turned to Him in true penitence.

25. ye shall have been long in the land. And your long continuance results in a loss of vigour, due to unbroken peace and prosperity. 'Prosperity sometimes acts like a narcotic, and sends the soul to sleep' (Dummelow). The Hebrew word is not וַיִּקְנָתֶם 'to grow old and increase in wisdom' (זקן, זֶה שְׁקִנָּה חֲכָמָה), but וְנוֹשְׁתֶּם, lit. 'to grow stale.' They must not imagine that having dwelt for many centuries in Canaan, their tenure was now fixed, and they could neglect the conditions of the Covenant with impunity. (Benjamin Szold makes the opening words כִּי תוֹלִיד, 'when thou shalt beget', equivalent to גַּם כִּי תוֹלִיד, 'even when thou shalt beget').

do that which is evil. These words are explanatory of what precedes; viz. the making of images. Ibn Ezra explains them as signifying other offences—e.g. murder, impurity—which would provoke God.

ye shall soon utterly perish. Not every individual would be destroyed, but the national life would be brought to an end; see next v.

27. scatter you. The consequences of idolatry are exile from their native land, dispersion to the four winds of heaven, and diminution in numbers.

28. wood and stone. In their own land, they served images as symbols of something higher. But in exile the Israelite would sink to the level of fetish-worshippers and grovel to idols of wood and stone (Hoffmann). Such things cannot, however, permanently satisfy human souls that have known higher things. This very lowering of moral standards called forth a spiritual reaction among the religiously-minded 'remnant' in the Exile.

you away. 28. And there ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell. 29. But from thence ye will seek the LORD thy God; and thou shalt find Him, if thou search after Him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. 30. In thy distress, when all these things are come upon thee, in the end of days, thou wilt return to the LORD thy God, and hearken unto His voice; 31. for the LORD thy God is a merciful God; He will not fail thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which He swore unto them. 32. For ask now of the days past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and from the one end of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? 33. Did ever a people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live? 34. Or hath God assayed to go and take Him a nation from the midst of another nation, by trials, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand,

v. 33. כצ"ל

29. ye will seek the LORD. This is a great pronouncement of Scripture, proclaiming the omnipotence of תשובה, Repentance. But the sinner must seek God; i.e. he must feel the 'loss' of God, and take active measures to 'find' Him and regain His favour. And that search must be with the sinner's whole heart and soul. Sincere repentance always and everywhere secures the Divine Mercy. It would be so in the Exile, if they sought God with a radical change of heart, and the devotion of the whole being. And indeed it was in the Exile that repentant Israel found God, rediscovered the Torah, rediscovered itself.

30. in the end of days. See on Gen. XLIX, 1; Num. XXIV, 14. Here equivalent to the phrase, 'later on' (Koenig).

31. a merciful God. Although He is 'a devouring fire' to those who are perversely wicked, He is merciful and gracious to the sincerely penitent; and His hand is outstretched to receive the sinner returning unto Him.

32-40. THE UNIQUENESS OF THE GOD OF ISRAEL
 Again there is an appeal to history to justify the Divine claims. From the beginning of time, from one end of heaven to the other, no nation had experienced the unparalleled redemption and revelation that were vouchsafed unto Israel. 'He hath not dealt so with any nation' (Psalm CXLVII, 20).

33. and live. The idea often finds expression in Scripture that man cannot have direct communication with God and survive; Exod. XXXIII, 20.

34. assayed . . . to take Him a nation. Or, 'adventured' or, 'attempted,' to select a nation for His special service. A bold anthropomorphism that gives striking expression to the profound thought that Israel is, so to speak, 'a Divine experiment in history' (M. Lazarus).

framework and instruction for the new legislation. The aged Lawgiver exhorts the people to gratitude towards God (i, 6-iii, 29), and closes with solemn warnings of the dangers of idolatry that threaten them on entering the Promised Land (iv, 1-40). v. 39 has been introduced into the Oleynoo, the closing prayer of every Synagogue Service.

41-43. MOSES ASSIGNS THREE CITIES OF REFUGE EAST OF JORDAN

The presence of these verses between the First and Second Discourses of Moses offers considerable difficulty, except on the interpretation of Luzzatto; cf. i, 5. Having finished the exposition of the words, it is eleven days' journey from Horeb unto Kadesh-barnea by the way of Mount Seir (i, 2), Moses records that he thereupon set aside the three Cities of Refuge, thus completing the establishment of a portion of Israel on the east of Jordan.

it is about to dispossess. No truce of any sort is to be made with the peoples of Canaan and their foul and inhuman cults. If Israel faithfully keeps God's commandments, the Land of Promise will enjoy the rain of heaven and be dowered with prosperity. Israel is, in conclusion, solemnly reminded of the alternatives—the Blessing and the Curse—now offered for its acceptance.

B. MOSES' SECOND DISCOURSE

1. FOUNDATIONS OF THE COVENANT (CHAPTERS IV, 44–XI)

From IV, 44 to the end of XI, the Second Discourse, deals with the religious foundations of the Covenant, the spirit in which it is to be kept, and the motives to that right obedience. It defines the relationship between God and Israel, and emphasizes the basic spiritual demands that such relationship imposes upon Israel. Moses solemnly repeats to the new generation that faces him the Ten Commandments given at Sinai; proclaims the Unity of God, together with the Israelite's duty to love Him with all his heart, soul and might; and urges that the same love towards God must be implanted in the hearts of the children. That covenant shall be their distinction among the nations. Moses surveys the forty years of Providential mercies in the Wilderness, and also the succession of murmurings and rebellions. Not for their own righteousness will they conquer, but because of the oath sworn to their Fathers. Let Israel ever keep in mind the lessons of the Wilderness, lest it forget God and perish like the nations whom

45. these are the testimonies. Better, they are the testimonies. This v. is parenthetical and points out that this Law which Moses is now to set before them is merely a new presentation of the testimonies, statutes, and judgments which He spake unto them when they came out of Egypt (Rashi, Biur).

The LORD spoke with you face to face in the mount out of the midst of the fire—5. I stood between the LORD and you at that time, to declare unto you the word of the LORD; for ye were afraid because of the fire, and went not up into the mount—saying: ¶ 6. CHAPTER V. ON THE REVELATION AT HOREB. CHAPTER V-VI, 3

The first foundation of the new covenant was the Decalogue—at once the alphabet and summary of the religious life, and the very foundation for all human conduct. The Ten Words formed the basis for the new precepts now to be promulgated (Hoffmann). Moses pronounces the Commandments one by one, as delivered by the Divine Voice amid fire and darkness. He also recalls the impression made on the people by what they had heard—their pledge to do whatever the LORD commanded them, and His approval of their words.

1. learn them, and observe to do. Knowledge is an essential pre-requisite to performance.

3. not . . . with our fathers. 'The Covenant was entered into only with the coming generation, as the fathers would die in the wilderness' (Abarbanel). Others understand the words to mean, 'not with our fathers alone'; the Covenant survived the men with whom it was made, with binding force upon all future generations.

4. spoke with you. i.e. revealed Himself to you. Many of those who were listening to Moses had been present as children at Horeb when the Ten Words were spoken.

face to face. i.e. a direct revelation, and not a matter of hearsay merely.

5. I stood between. As the Israelites did not go near the Mount, they heard the Voice but could not follow the words. Moses was the meturgeman, the 'interpreter', who conveyed the Divine message to them (Talmud).

saying. The Ten Words now following are almost, but not absolutely, a verbatim repetition of the Decalogue as given in Exod. xx. Being part of an exhortation addressed to a new generation, the Lawgiver does not hesitate to expand, or even alter, the wording of the Commandments, for the sake of emphasis. In brief, the version in Deuteronomy is more rhetorical, more homiletical, than that in Exod. xx. For the full exposition of the Decalogue see pp. 294 ff. Only additional comments are here given.

6. THE FIRST COMMANDMENT

The Israelites are to recognize that unlike the deities worshipped by the benighted heathens around them—local nature-gods bound to the soil and its products—the God of Israel is the universal ruler of History, the God who redeemed them from Egyptian slavery.

6. I am the LORD thy God. Or, 'I, the LORD, am thy God.' The word 'LORD' is the current translation of the Divine Name of four letters (YHWH) as the eternal Power that guides the destinies of men and nations; see p. 6.

thy God. The suffix thy refers to 'Israel' collectively, and at the same time to each Israelite individually; as in v. 16. The Midrash says: 'Even as thousands may look at a great portrait and each one feel that it looks at him, so every Israelite at Horeb felt that the Divine Voice was addressing him.'

7-10. SECOND COMMANDMENT

7. before Me. Or, 'beside Me.' In addition to Him; see the opening v. of the Shema, vi, 4. The monotheism must be absolute. Others translate, 'to my face'; i.e. to provoke Him. The provocation is the greater, because these gods are unreal.

8. Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, even any manner of likeness, of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. 9. Thou shalt not bow down unto them, nor serve them; for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the third and upon the fourth generation of them that hate Me, 10. and showing mercy unto the thousandth generation of them that love Me and keep My commandments. ¶ 11. Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. ¶ 12. Observe the sabbath day, to keep it holy, as the LORD thy God commanded thee. 13. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work;

v. 10. מצותי ק'

8. any manner of likeness. Extends the term 'graven image' to 'any manner of likeness'. v. 7 prohibits the worship of other gods; v. 8 prohibits the worship of the true God under the form of any image. Hoffmann thinks that the variation in the Heb. text from the form in Exodus was made in view of the sin of the Golden Calf that followed the giving of the Decalogue. The present version makes it clearer that every 'manner of likeness' comes within the category of 'graven image', and therefore of idolatry.

in heaven above. The heavenly bodies worshipped by many nations.

in the earth beneath. Such as the sacred bulls of the Egyptians.

9. nor serve them. lit. 'thou shalt not be induced to serve them,' the grammatical form being Hophal (Koenig). Only such sculpture or plastic reproduction as would become objects of idolatrous worship is prohibited here. Hence the presence of the cherubim in the Tabernacle, and the twelve bronze bullocks under the basin in the Temple. Against art within its own sphere, monotheism wages no war; see p. 375. 'Every picture is an image of a prototype. But does there exist a prototype of the Divine that can be embodied in a picture? Pictures of God must accordingly be pictures of something other than God—of a something other to which the signification of God is given' (Hermann Cohen).

a jealous God. See on iv, 24.

and upon the third. In Exod. 'and' is omitted.

11. THIRD COMMANDMENT

Avoid oaths. For the sacred obligations of sincerity in speech, see VOWS AND VOWING IN THE LIGHT OF JUDAISM, p. 730.

11. in vain. Heb. לשוא, which may mean either 'for vanity,' or 'for falsehood.' The Jerusalem Targum prefaces its translation of this prohibition with the words: 'O my People, my People, House of Israel, swear not by the Name of the LORD thy God for vanity; and swear not by My Name and lie.' Every oath, even if a true oath, should be avoided, is the teaching of the Rabbis. It is not generally known that many in Israel have in every age followed the principle of 'Swear not at all', except when a Court of Law exacts an oath in order to ensure the ends of justice. To this day, pious men in Eastern Jewries suffer considerable pecuniary loss rather than enforce their plea by an oath. And it is the practice of a Beth Din to discourage oaths, in the rare instances where one of the litigants insists on the oath being administered.

12-15. FOURTH COMMANDMENT

12. observe. Heb. שמור; in Exod. זכור 'remember'. Tradition explains that the latter refers to the positive precepts in connection with the Sabbath, to its sanctification by wine, prayer and Sabbath joy; whereas 'observe' the Sabbath means refraining from any desecration through labour by self or dependents. Hence the addition here concerning the resting of servants and the reminder of the bondage in Egypt (Biur). Tradition also says 'that both words observe and remember were communicated by God simultaneously'; i.e. the fourth commandment in Deuteronomy, though different in form, does not imply anything that has not been revealed by God on Mount Sinai. Moses uses the stronger word here, because in his exhortation he has a practical object in view; viz. the observance of God's commands by the people.

as the LORD thy God commanded thee. These words are not in Exodus, being a rhetorical amplification. The reference is to Marah, Exod. xv, 23-27.

14. but the seventh day is a sabbath unto the LORD thy God, in it thou shalt not do any manner of work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou. 15. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand and by an outstretched arm; therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day. ¶ 16. Honour thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God commanded thee; that thy days may be long, and that it may go well with thee, upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee. ¶ 17. Thou shalt not murder. Neither shalt thou commit adultery. Neither shalt thou steal. Neither shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbour. ¶ 18. Neither shalt thou covet thy neighbour's wife: neither shalt thou

14. nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle. In place of this detailed enumeration, appropriate to an oration, Exod. has simply, 'nor thy cattle.' Care and kindness to cattle are of such profound importance for the humanizing of man that this duty has its place in the Decalogue. The Rabbis classed cruelty to animals among the most serious of offences; see KINDNESS TO ANIMALS, p. 854.

that thy man-servant . . . thou. This is not in Exod.; but is an explanatory addition.

as well as thou. Heb. כמורך. The slave is to have the same right to his Sabbath-rest as the master. Sabbath-rest thus proclaims the equality of master and man.

15. thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt. This is the most important divergence between the two versions. According to Exod. the Sabbath was ordained in commemoration of the six days of creation, 'wherefore the LORD blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it.' Man was on that day to set aside the material cares that absorb his attention on the six days of toil. Judaism 'proclaims a truce once in seven days to all personal anxieties and degrading thoughts about the means of subsistence and success, in life, and bids us meet together to indulge in larger thoughts. In countries where life is a hard struggle, what more precious, more priceless public benefit can be imagined than this breathing time, this recurring armistice between man and the hostile powers that beset his life, this solemn Sabbatic festival?' (J. R. Seeley). There was, however, another lesson for mankind to learn from the Sabbath institution. The Israelites in Egypt slaved day after day without a rest.

By ceasing from toil one day in seven, they would distinguish their work from slavery. And in their new life in the Promised Land they were to avoid imposing upon others what had been so bitter to them.

16. FIFTH COMMANDMENT

16. commanded thee. The phrase, 'as the LORD thy God commanded thee,' is new in Deuteronomy, as is also 'and that it may go well with thee'. The latter stresses the truth that a sound national life can only result from a sound family life within the State.

17. SIXTH, SEVENTH, AND EIGHTH COMMANDMENTS

17. murder . . . neighbour. These Commandments are here connected by the conjunction 'and'; to indicate that these crimes are to some extent linked together, and that he who breaks one of them is not unlikely to break one of the others as well (Friedländer).

17. NINTH COMMANDMENT

false witness. A different Heb. word is here used for 'false' witness—the same as occurs in v. 11 for 'vain'.

18. TENTH COMMANDMENT

18. covet . . . neighbour's. The prohibition of coveting a man's wife is here made separate from 'desiring' (a different word, not occurring in Exod.) his possessions—a fundamental distinction of far-reaching moral consequence. There is also new mention of 'his field', an appropriate addition for a people about to enter upon the inheritance of their Land.

desire thy neighbour's house, his field, or his man-servant, or his maid-servant, his ox, or his ass, or any thing that is thy neighbour's. *iv 8, v 2. ¶ 19. These words the LORD spoke unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice, and it went on no more. And He wrote them upon two tables of stone, and gave them unto me. 20. And it came to pass, when ye heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, while the mountain did burn with fire, that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders; 21. and ye said: 'Behold, the LORD our God hath shown us His glory and His greatness, and we have heard His voice out of the midst of the fire; we have seen this day that God doth speak with man, and he liveth. 22. Now therefore why should we die? for this great fire will consume us; if we hear the voice of the LORD our God any more, then we shall die. 23. For who is there of all flesh, that hath heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived? 24. Go thou near, and hear all that the LORD our God may say; and thou shalt speak unto us all that the LORD our God may speak unto thee; and we will hear it, and do it.' 25. And the LORD heard the voice of your words, when ye spoke unto me; and the LORD said unto me: 'I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have spoken unto thee; they have well said all that they have spoken. 26. Oh that they had such a heart as this alway, to fear Me, and keep all My commandments, that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever! 27. Go say to them: Return ye to your tents. 28. But as for thee, stand thou here by Me, and I will speak unto thee all the commandment, and the statutes, and the ordinances, which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to possess it.' 29. Ye shall observe to do therefore as the LORD your God hath commanded you; ye shall not 19-30. The manner in which the Decalogue was delivered.

19. no more. The direct Divine Revelation to the whole people was limited to the Ten Words. The people found it unbearable to listen to the Divine Voice, and the remainder of the Revelation was communicated to them through Moses; v. 22-25.

21. His glory. Manifested in the fire and smoke; see on Gen. xv, 17.

22. this great fire will consume us. Not the Revelation of God, but the physical accompaniments of that Revelation fill them with fear.

26. Oh that they had such a heart. 'God too can express a wish of this sort, as freedom of the will has been given to man' (Biur). Alas, that exalted spirit of the Israelites was soon to be followed by a violent reaction—the apostasy of the Golden Calf.

29. ye shall not turn aside. This and the following v. are the moral exhortation after the historical narrative.

turn aside to the right hand or to the left. 30. Ye shall walk in all the way which the LORD your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess.

CHAPTER VI

1. Now this is the commandment, the statutes, and the ordinances, which the LORD your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it—2. that thou mightest fear the LORD thy God, to keep all His statutes and His commandments, which I command thee, thou, and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life; and that thy days may be prolonged. 3. Hear therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it; that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily, as the LORD, the God of thy fathers, hath promised unto thee—a land flowing with milk and honey. *v. 8, v. 18. ¶4. HEAR, O ISRAEL: THE LORD OUR GOD, THE LORD IS ONE. 5. And thou shalt love the LORD

THE SHEMA

THE ONENESS OF GOD AND ISRAEL'S UNDIVIDED LOYALTY TO HIM

4-9. After the repetition of the story of the Giving of the Ten Commandments, Moses proceeds to declare the other great foundation of the Torah; viz. the oneness of God and Israel's undivided loyalty to Him.

The opening v. of this paragraph, called after its first Heb. word Shema, sounds the keynote of all Judaism, and has been its watchword and confession of faith throughout the ages. Here the fundamental Truth of the Unity of God is proclaimed. It is followed in v. 5-9 by the fundamental Duty founded upon that Truth; viz. the devotion to Him of the Israelite's whole being. He is bidden to love God with heart, soul, and might; to remember all the commandments and instruct his children therein; to recite the words of God when retiring or rising; to bind those words on the arm and the head, and to inscribe them on his door-posts and the city gates. 'The later leaders of Jewry showed their spiritual insight when they gave the place they did to this high and winsome message' (Welch). See Additional Note A, THE SHEMA, p. 920.

In the Liturgy, the Shema is said twice daily, and consists of three sections; Deut. vi, 4-9; xi, 13-21; and Num. xv, 37-41. The second section, Deut. xi, 13-21, contains the promise of reward for the fulfilment of the laws, and of punishment for their transgression. The third section, Num. xv, 37-41, enacts the law concerning the tzitzith, as a warning against following the evil inclinations of the heart, and an exhortation to submit to the laws of God in remembrance of the Exodus.

4. Hear, O Israel: the LORD our God, the LORD is One. Heb. 'שמע ישראל ד' אלהינו ד' אחד. Or, 'Hear, O Israel: the LORD is our God, the LORD is One' (Sifri, Septuagint, and most Jewish translators and commentators). It sums up the teaching of the First and Second Commandments; The LORD is our God, and He is One. The translation given by AJ, 'Hear, O Israel, the LORD our God, the LORD is One,' is less acceptable; for if the declaration only enunciated the Divine Unity, it would be sufficient to have said, 'Hear, O Israel, the LORD our God is One.' Some moderns follow Rashbam's translation: 'Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD alone.'

In the Heb. the ע of שמע and the ד of אחד are written large. The reason for the ד is evident; it is to distinguish אחד 'one' from אחר 'another god', just as the ר in אחר (Exod. xxxiv, 14) is written large, in order that by error one should thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. 6. And these not utter the blasphemy לא תשתחוה לאל אחד 'thou shalt not bow down to the one God'. The reason that induced the Scribes to write the ע in שמע large may possibly be due to the fear of an interchange in their day with שמה, 'perhaps,' and to avoid the resulting infidel statement 'Perhaps, O Israel, the LORD is our God' (Hirsch). These two large letters form the word עד 'witness'. Every Israelite by pronouncing the Shema becomes one of God's witnesses, testifying to His Unity before the world.

the LORD our God. The Heb. is the Divine Name of Four Letters, the Father and Sustainer of the lives and spirits of all flesh, the everlasting Power Who guides the destinies of men and nations.

the LORD is One. 'In the opening v. of the Shema we have a third revelation of God's being. In Gen. xvii, He is made known to us as Almighty; in Exod. vi, as Eternal; and now as the One' (Philippson). He is One, because there is no other God than He; but He is also One, because He is wholly unlike anything else in existence. He is therefore not only One, but the Sole and Unique God.

One. Heb. echad. Therefore to Him alone it is right to pray, and not to any being besides Him. The belief that God is made up of several personalities, such as the Christian belief in the Trinity, is a departure from the pure conception of the Unity of God. Israel has throughout the ages rejected everything that marred or obscured the conception of pure monotheism it had given the world, and rather than abandon that pure monotheism, rather than admit any weakening of it, Jews were prepared to wander, to suffer, to die; see p. 922.

5. and thou shalt love. This is the first instance in human history that the love of God was demanded in any religion. The love of God is the distinctive mark of His true worshippers. The worshipper, as he declares the Unity of God, thereby lovingly and unconditionally surrenders his mind and heart to God's holy will. Such spiritual surrender is called 'taking upon oneself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven.' קבלת עול מלכות שמים. If the Unity of God is the basis of the Jewish creed, the love of God is to be the basis of the Jewish life. And the noblest spiritual surrender and love of God, the Rabbis held, was so to live and act toward our fellowmen as to make God and His Torah beloved in their eyes.

'The meaning of the love of God is that a man should be longing and yearning after the nearness of God, blessed be He, and striving to reach His holiness, in the same manner as he would pursue any object for which he feels a strong passion. He should feel that bliss and delight in mentioning His name, in uttering His praises and in occupying himself with the words of the Torah, which a lover feels towards the wife of his youth, or the father towards his only son. The earlier saints attained to such disinterested love of God; as King David said in Psalm xlii, 2, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God"' (Moses Chayim Luzzatto).

'When the soul sinks in the depths of awe, the spark of the love of God breaks out in flames, and the inward joy increases. Such lovers of God desire only to accomplish His holy will, and lead others unto righteousness' (Eleazar of Worms).

with all thy heart. Because there is one God, we must give Him undivided allegiance. 'The One God demands the whole of man' (Smend). The Rabbis explain with all thy heart to mean 'with all thy desires, including the evil inclination'; i.e. make thy earthly passions and ambitions instruments in the service of God.

with all thy soul. We should be prepared to give up our dearest wishes and inclinations for the love of God. The Rabbis take the words with all thy soul to mean 'with thy whole life'; i.e. love Him with thy heart's last drop of blood, and give up thy life for God, if He requires it. The classical example is that of Rabbi Akiba. He longed for the sublime moment when his daily profession of the love of God might be put to the proof and confirmed by act. That moment came when, after his noble part in the last Jewish War of Independence against Imperial Rome, the Roman executioner was tearing his flesh with combs of iron. 'All my days,' Akiba told his weeping disciples, 'I have longed for this moment, when it is given me to love God with my whole life. I loved Him with all my heart, and I loved Him with all my might; now that I have the opportunity of loving Him with all my soul, shall I not rejoice?' It was such understanding of the words of the Shema that gave the Jewish martyrs throughout the ages the comfort and courage to lay down their lives for their Faith. Bachya tells of a medieval Jewish saint who used to pray: 'My God, thou hast given me over to starvation and penury. Into the depth of darkness hast Thou plunged me, and Thy might and strength Thou hast taught me. But even if they burn me with fire, only the more will I love Thee and rejoice in Thee.' Such spiritual surrender is, of course, without any thought of reward or punishment in the Hereafter. As another of the saints boldly expressed it, 'I have no wish for Thy Paradise, nor any desire for the bliss in the world to come. I want Thee and Thee alone.'

On the duty of martyrdom, see p. 489. The supreme sacrifice, however, is demanded only to avoid idolatry, incest, and murder.

words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; 7. and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 8. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. 9. And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thy house, and upon thy gates.^{v1} 10. And it shall be, when the LORD thy God shall bring thee into the land which He swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to with all thy might. With the full concentration of feeling and power. One Rabbinic explanation is, 'with whatever lot Providence has assigned to thee'; i.e. love Him in times of bliss and happiness, and in times of distress and misfortune. Another explanation of with all thy might is 'with all thy possessions'; i.e. despite whatever material sacrifice thy loyalty to Israel's God and Torah might entail. An eighteenth century moralist understood 'with all thy possessions' to mean, 'even when great wealth is thine' (Panim Yafoth).

6. these words. In v. 4 and 5; viz. the Unity of God and the duty of undivided allegiance to Him, as the epitome of the teaching of the Book.

upon thy heart. The heart is conceived as a tablet on which these Divine words shall be inscribed; cf. Jer. xxxi, 32, 33.

7. teach them diligently. lit. 'prick them in'; so that the words remain indelibly upon their hearts. 'Let them have a clear, and not a confused or stammering, knowledge of the duties and teachings of their Faith' (Sifri); see p. 925.

and shalt talk of them. They are to be a theme of living interest, early and late, at home and abroad.

when thou sittest in thy house. 'A man should conduct himself with due propriety in his house, so as to set an example to his household; and he should also be gentle with them, and not overawe them' (Zohar).

when thou liest down. The Rabbis based on this the institution of Evening Prayer. It consists of the Shema, preceded by two Benedictions (the one, referring to the Divine ordering of day and night, הַמַּעֲרִיב עֲרֵבִים; and the second, eulogizing the love of God shown in the revelation of the Torah, אֱהָבַת עוֹלָם). The Shema is also followed by two Benedictions (the proclamation of faith, אֱמֶת וְאִמּוּנָה; and the prayer for peaceful repose, הַשְּׂכִיבֹנוּ). The Service continues with the Amidah (the Eighteen Benedictions—three Blessings of Praise; twelve (now thirteen) Petitions; and three Blessings of Thanks) and Oleynoo. The Shema is also recited before retiring to rest. To fill one's mind with high and noble thoughts is a wise preparation for the hours of darkness. 'The Shema is a double-edged sword against all the terrors and temptations of the night' (Talmud).

when thou risest up. Hence the institution of the Morning Shema. It is preceded by two Benedictions, and followed by one. These Benedictions are (1) a eulogy of God as the Creator of the light of day, יוֹצֵר אוֹר; (2) a eulogy of God as Giver of the Torah, אֱהָבַת רְבָה; and (3) a eulogy of God as the Redeemer of Israel, גּוֹאֵל יִשְׂרָאֵל. Immediately thereafter come the Eighteen Benedictions. On some days, Tachanun and the Reading of the Torah follow. The Service concludes with Oleynoo, Kaddish and some psalms.

8. bind them. See p. 261 for the precept of Tephillin. The wording of v. 8 and 9 is not to be taken as a figure of speech. 'It seems on the whole to be more probable that the injunction is intended to be carried out literally; and that some material, visible expression of the Israelite's creed is referred to' (Driver).

9. write them upon the door-posts. By means of the mezuzah affixed to the door-post in Jewish homes. The mezuzah is placed in a metal or glass case, and fixed to the right-hand door-post of the outer entrance of every dwelling room in the house. It contains this section of the Shema and xi, 13-20. The word שְׁדֵי, 'Almighty,' written on the back of the parchment, is rendered visible by means of a small opening in the case. The mezuzah is a symbol of God's watchful care over the house and its dwellers. It is a solemn reminder to all who go out and in, that the house is devoted to the ideals of the Shema.

I. Abrahams thus sums up the basic importance of Deut. vi, 4-9: 'It enshrines the fundamental dogma (monotheism), the fundamental duty (love), the fundamental discipline (study of the Law), and the fundamental method (union of "letter" and "spirit"), of the Jewish Religion.'

10-19. PERIL OF FORGETTING

The pleasantness of their inheritance in the New Land might breed forgetfulness of their dependence upon the goodness of God, and a disposition to follow the gods of the surrounding nations.

11. cisterns hewn out. In the Holy Land water had to be collected during the rainy seasons and stored. For this purpose, cisterns cut out of the rocks are of special value.

13. thou shalt fear the LORD thy God. This command is complementary to vi, 5 'thou shalt love the LORD thy God'. Love and fear of God combined constitute the highest reverence. 'The fear of God acts as a powerful deterrent from evil; the love of God, as the highest incentive to living in accordance with the Divine will' (Talmud). 'Indeed 'יראת ד', the fear of the LORD, is the nearest equivalent in Hebrew to what we mean when we speak about religion' (Welch).

serve. In prayer (Sifri).

by His name shalt thou swear. This is no command to swear; only a bringing out of the religious significance of an oath (Oettli). Primitive man constantly appeals to his gods for the truth and honesty of his transactions; and such appeal to his gods really constituted a profession of his loyalty to those gods. An Israelite is to swear by the Name of God alone, always remembering that it was an unpardonable sin to take God's Name in vain—and that the truly pious refrain from all oaths.

14. peoples that are round about you. Not that it was permissible to follow the gods of distant nations, but that the danger of adopting the worship of neighbouring peoples was more insidious and real (Rashi).

15. a jealous God. See on iv, 24.

of the earth. Better, of the land; i.e. Palestine.

16. ye shall not try. i.e. test, by questioning His power or protection; see on Exod. xvii, 2. Likewise, anyone who obeys the Divine commandments 'on trial', i.e. to see if he will be rewarded for doing so, transgresses this prohibition (Mal. iii, 10 is an exception).

in Massah. See Exod. xvii, 7.

18. that which is right and good in the sight of the LORD. Note the words and good in addition to that which is right. It is not enough to do that which is right; i.e. to act according to the strict letter of the law; as such action often involves hardship and harshness, and the truly pious avoid taking advantage of the letter of strict legality. There is a higher justice, which is equity, and this bids man to be true to something more than the mere letter of his bond. 'Man must act beyond the rule of law' (לפנים משורת), say the Teachers of the Talmud. Jerusalem, they said, was destroyed because its Courts adhered too closely to strict Din (justice), and disregarded the principles of Yosher (equity). Two examples will make clear what they understood by 'equity'. A Rabbi on being consulted by a poor woman whether a certain coin was good answered her that it was. The next day, she came and told him it had been declared bad. He took it from her, and gave her a good one in exchange. He was not compelled to act so. He was going beyond the letter of the law, and doing 'that which is right and good in the sight of the LORD'.

Rabba, the son of Bar Chana, hired porters to transport some jugs of wine. They, in negligence, broke their load; whereupon Rabba seized their garments in compensation. The porters appealed to Rab, who ordered the garments to be returned. When the garments were returned they pleaded, 'We are poor men, we have laboured a full day, exhausted ourselves, and now we have nothing.' Rab decided that their wages be paid. Rabba protested that his action had all along been legal. To which Rab replied, 'Indeed it is legal; but Scripture says, "Thou shalt observe the path of the upright," i.e. those who act beyond the mere letter of the law.' (If Shakespeare had been aware of this fine Jewish duty, 'to go beyond the letter of the law'—he could not have drawn his Shylock as a Jew.) Rashi understands our v. to teach the duty 'of going beyond the rule', and also the concomitant duty of פְּשָׁרָה, 'agreement.' Agreement is reached when each of the litigants forgoes something to which he believes himself entitled by strict law and they become friends. The judgment of the court would have been for the one and against the other; that would be strict law. By agreement, they refrain from insisting on strict law, and friendship is re-established. Thus are fulfilled the words (Zech. viii, 16), 'execute the judgment of truth and peace'; i.e. effect peace between the parties by the judgment of truth.

19. as the LORD hath spoken. See Exod. xxiii, 27 f.

20-25. THE EXODUS—AN OBJECT-LESSON

The future generation is to be trained to gratitude and reverence towards God by means of the story of the Deliverance from Egypt. The Seder Service is a domestic feast based on the actual usage in the Temple of Jerusalem, and accompanied by a running commentary of prayer and legend and exhortation known as the Haggadah shel Pesach. This opens with the questions asked by the youngest child present, who is answered in a recitation of the events of the Exodus, with the Midrashic interpretations of Biblical passages (Josh. xxiv, 2-4; Deut. xxvi, 5-8) relating to the Deliverance. Hallel early formed part of the Seder; Nishmath, various hymns, folk-songs, and children's rhymes were added in the course of the centuries.

The Seder in history would require a monograph. In the Middle Ages, the Seder nights were a time of terror to the Jewries of Christian Europe. From the twelfth century onwards, the Satanic charge of using human blood on Passover, was responsible for a long series of hideous massacres. Also, it was on the eve of Passover, 1190 that the Jews of York resolved to anticipate massacre at the hands of the murderous mob by suicide, and perished almost to a man. 'But the eternal message of hope, revived in the Jewish breast all the more ardently by the Festival of Freedom, saved the martyred people from despair, even in this darkest hour' (Cecil Roth).

20. in time to come. lit. 'to-morrow.'

what mean the testimonies . . . ordinances. This whole section is analogous to Exod. xiii, 14 f, where the child asks מָה זֶה 'What is this?' Evidently the son here is of riper age than in Exod. xiii. The Rabbis describe the latter as חָם, 'simple'; and the son in this v. as חָכָם, 'wise.'

21. we were Pharaoh's bondmen. These words form the first sentence of the answer to the 'four questions' in the Haggadah. The Seder Service is typical of Jewish education: the ceremonies become object-lessons in religion, national history, and morality. The garnered religious thought and emotion of past generations is made the horizon for the opening mind of the Jewish child. At one point of the Seder, which is largely history raised into religion, it is remarked: 'Every Jew should regard himself as if he had personally come out of Egypt.' That spirit dominates the whole of Jewish ceremonial. It all tends to the self-identification of the child with his fathers in the days of old, and to foster in the soul of the Jewish child the resolve to take his part in the Jewish life—whether in the sphere of worship, humanitarian endeavour, or Messianic achievement in and out of the Holy Land.

take unto thy son. 4. For he will turn away thy son from following Me, that they may serve other gods; so will the anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and He will destroy thee quickly. 5. But thus shall ye deal with them: ye shall break down their altars, and dash in pieces their pillars, and hew down their Asherim, and burn their graven images with fire. 6. For thou art a holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be His own treasure, out of all peoples that are upon the face of the earth. 7. The LORD did not set His love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people—for ye were the fewest of all peoples—8. but because the LORD loved you, and because He would keep the oath which He swore unto your fathers, hath the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt.*^m 9. Know therefore that the LORD thy God, He is God; the faithful God, who keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love Him and keep His commandments to a thousand generations; 10. and repayeth them that hate Him to their face, to destroy them; He will not be slack to him that hateth Him, He will repay him to his thy son. The Talmud explains this to mean, thy grandson. Since the Torah, on this interpretation, calls the child of an Israelite mother and gentile father the 'son' of an Israelite grandfather, it was deduced therefrom that the child is to be regarded as being of the same race and faith as the mother. Consequently, the child of a Jewish father and non-Jewish mother follows in Jewish Law the religious status of the mother.

5. pillars. Symbols of the sun-god Baal.

Asherim. A tree planted (xvi, 21), or a pole set up (ii Kings xvii, 10), as sacred symbols of Astarte, the goddess of fertility.

6-11. REASONS FOR PREVIOUS COMMANDS

6. thou art a holy people. See Exod. xix, 5 f—the classical passage announcing the covenant between God and Israel. Being a holy people, Israel was not to be contaminated by foul and cruel worship. It was to be a People apart from the other nations, and untainted by their heathenish practices.

His own treasure. See on Exod. xix, 5. 'The character of Israel as the Chosen People does not involve the inferiority of other nations. The universality of Israel's idea of God is sufficient proof against such an assumption. Every nation requires a certain self-consciousness for the carrying out of its mission. Israel's self-consciousness was tempered by the memory of its slavery in Egypt, and the recognition of its being the servant of the LORD. It was the noblesse oblige of the God-appointed worker for the entire human race' (Guedemann).

7. set His love upon you. The root חֶשֶׁק is used of the 'blind', non-rational love. 'God's love of Israel is like that love (cheshek) for which no reason is to be sought, as it is due solely to the desire of the lover' (Albo).

the fewest of all peoples. lit. 'the few out of the totality of peoples'; i.e. only a small fragment of the whole of humanity (Herxheimer, Dillmann). Israel is a small nation, but it has been chosen to accomplish world-embracing and eternal things. 'All the great things have been done by the little nations' (Disraeli). 'God has chosen little nations as the vessels by which He carries the choicest wines to the lives of humanity, to rejoice their hearts, to exalt their vision, to stimulate and strengthen their faith' (Lloyd George).

9. know therefore. 'This phrase does not mean to know so as to see the fact of, but to know so as to feel the force of. It is knowledge that is followed by shame, or by love, or by reverence, or by the sense of a duty' (G. A. Smith).

The Prophetic Reading of this Sabbath is the first of the seven 'Haftorahs of Consolation' that follow the Fast of Av. They consist of sublime messages of encouragement that have sustained and fortified Israel during its ordeals of cruelty and persecution throughout the ages.

This chapter opens the Rhapsody of 'Zion Redeemed' that occupies the second half of the Book of Isaiah. For the understanding of the historical situation, it is necessary to recall that the Babylonians had, in the year 586, taken Jerusalem, destroyed the kingdom of Judah, and deported the greater portion of its inhabitants to the banks of the Euphrates. After their exile had lasted 47 years, Babylon itself, the 'mistress of the world', was about to fall at the hands of Cyrus, the founder of the Persian Empire. Great was the commotion among Babylon's subject peoples, not least so among the Jewish exiles. 'Against their enslaver and oppressor, they saw uplifted the irresistible sword of God's instrument, this Persian prince to whose religion the Babylonian idolatry was hateful; a victorious warrior, a wise and just statesman, favourable to Babylon's prisoners and victims, and disposed to restore the exiles of Judah to their own land' (Matthew Arnold); see p. 22.

In this supreme hour is heard the voice of God's Prophet, commanded to comfort Israel, and proclaim the Restoration to Zion.

1-2. The Proclamation of Divine Forgiveness.

1. comfort ye My people. This does not mean, 'Be comforted, O my people'; but the prophets, or all who love Jerusalem, are commanded to comfort Israel. The opening word of this Haftorah, נַחֲמוּ 'Comfort ye,' has given the name to the Sabbath, שַׁבַּת נַחֲמוּ.

2. bid Jerusalem take heart. Better, speak to the heart of (RV), i.e. 'speak tenderly.'

Jerusalem. Here the symbol of the whole of Israel.

time of service. Term of punishment.

paid off. Worked off; see Lev. xxvi, 43.

double. More than ample. 'These words of the Prophet are like balm upon a wound, or like a soft breath upon a fevered brow' (Graetz). 'The Hebrew language and genius are seen in the Book of Isaiah at their perfection—this has naturally had its effect on the English translators of the Bible, whose Version nowhere perhaps rises to such beauty as in this Book' (Matthew Arnold).

3. Hark! one calleth:
'Clear ye in the wilderness the way
of the LORD,
Make plain in the desert
A highway for our God.
4. Every valley shall be lifted up,
And every mountain and hill shall be made low;
And the rugged shall be made level,
And the rough places a plain;
5. And the glory of the LORD shall be revealed,
And all flesh shall see it together;
For the mouth of the LORD hath spoken
it.'

6. Hark! one saith: 'Proclaim!'
And he saith: 'What shall I proclaim?'
'All flesh is grass,
And all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field;
7. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth;
Because the breath of the LORD bloweth upon it—
Surely the people is grass.
8. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth;
But the word of our God shall stand for ever.'

9. O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion,
Get thee up into the high mountain;
O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem,

3-5. The Prophet hears the sound of Heavenly voices announcing that Israel's Deliverance from exile is at hand. The return from captivity is conceived as a Divine triumphal march.

3. hark! one calleth. lit. 'A voice! one is crying.' A Heavenly voice cries to his fellows to make a road through the desert for the return of exiled Israel, with God as the Leader.

clear. Of obstacles.
in the wilderness. The shortest line from Babylon to Judea was nearly all through desert.

4. every valley . . . plain. Whatever would obstruct the path of the returning exiles will be smoothed away, in order to make a level and easy road for the returning exiles.

lifted up. Raised.

5. glory of the LORD. Israel's redemption will be 'the talk of the world', and lead to a new recognition of the Divine among mankind.

6-8. Second herald: all earthly might is transitory—Israel's oppressors will perish; the word of God alone is eternal.

7. breath of the LORD. Probably refers to Lift up thy voice with strength;

Lift it up, be not afraid;
Say unto the cities of Judah:
'Behold your God!'

10. Behold, the Lord God will come as

And His arm will rule for Him;
Behold, His reward is with Him,
And His recompense before Him.

the sirocco; the scorching wind that often blights the spring vegetation in Palestine.

the people. Here signifying the same as all flesh, and, in particular, Israel's enemies, who will wither like grass.

8. the word of our God. God's immutable purposes as announced to Israel and mankind by Israel's Prophets—'the one permanent factor in human history' (Skinner).

shall stand for ever. The glory of human plans and achievements is as ephemeral as the flower of the field. The word of God alone is forever certain of triumphant fulfilment.

9-11. Third herald: the news announced in Palestine, 'God is coming, bringing His People back to Zion.'

9. into the high mountain. So that the glad herald may be heard from afar.

be not afraid. Of being put to shame, through failure of the event announced. Or, fear not the Babylonian authorities, who were still the nominal rulers in Jerusalem (Krauss).

10. arm. His power.

reward. Probably the exiles themselves, regarded as spoil recovered from the heathen nations (Skinner).

11. Even as a shepherd that feedeth his flock,
That gathereth the lambs in his arm,
And carrieth them in his bosom,
And gently leadeth those that give suck.

12. Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand,
And meted out heaven with the span,
And comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure,
And weighed the mountains in scales,
And the hills in a balance?

13. Who hath meted out the spirit of the LORD?
Or who was His counsellor that he might instruct Him?

14. With whom took He counsel, and who instructed Him,
And taught Him in the path of right,
And taught Him knowledge,
And made Him to know the way of discernment?

15. Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket,
And are counted as the small dust of the balance;

Behold, the isles are as a mote in weight.

16. And Lebanon is not sufficient fuel,
Nor the beasts thereof sufficient for burnt-offerings.

17. All the nations are as nothing before Him;
They are accounted by Him as things of nought, and vanity.

11. even as a shepherd. The Almighty God reveals Himself to the returning exiles as a God of infinite tenderness to the weak and the helpless.

12-26. God's Incomparable wisdom and might shown in Creation and the government of the World. And yet there are those, weak in faith, who doubt the possibility of Israel's Deliverance!

12. measured. What sort of infinite Being must He be who actually can take all the waters of the universe in the hollow of His hand?

comprehended. Old English for 'held'.

small dust. A few grains of dust in the balance, which make no appreciable difference in the weight.

isles. Here, 'the habitable lands.'

16. fuel. The forests of Lebanon are not enough wood for a sacrifice commensurate with God's greatness.

17. vanity. lit. 'a waste,' emptiness, nothing.

18-20. The absurdity, therefore, of representing God in the form of a man-made idol! The utter folly of such worship.

The verses immediately following (v. 27-31) give the application: 'If such be the God of Israel, how can the exiles think that He is indifferent to their fate? The everlasting God is omnipotent, and His understanding is un-searchable. They who trust in Him shall find in Him an inexhaustible source of life and energy.' See p. 941.

12. And it shall come to pass, because ye hearken to these ordinances, and keep, and do them, that the LORD thy God shall keep with thee the covenant and the mercy which He swore unto thy fathers, 13. and He will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee; He will also bless the fruit of thy body and the fruit of thy land, thy corn and thy wine and thine oil, the increase of thy kine and the young of thy flock, in the land which He swore unto thy fathers to give thee. 14. Thou shalt be blessed above all peoples; there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. 15. And the LORD will take away from thee all sickness; and He will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee, but will lay them upon all them that hate thee. 16. And thou shalt consume all the peoples that the LORD thy God shall deliver unto thee; thine eye shall not pity them; neither shalt thou serve their gods; for that will be a snare unto thee. ¶ 17. If thou shalt say in thy heart: "These nations are more than I; how can I dispossess them?" 18. thou shalt not be afraid of them; thou shalt well remember what the LORD thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt: 19. the great trials which thine eyes saw, and the signs, and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the outstretched arm, whereby the LORD thy God brought thee out; so shall the LORD thy God do unto all the peoples of whom thou art afraid. 20. Moreover the LORD thy God will send the hornet among them, until they that are left, and they that hide themselves, perish

Some of the species of hornets found in Palestine have their nests in rock-caves. There is a novel and illuminating explanation of the meaning of the 'hornet'. It was the badge of Thothmes III and his successors, and would thus be a veiled reference to the systematic series of invasions and conquests in Palestine undertaken by that Pharaoh. These invasions had reduced the fighting power and resistance of the Canaanites (Garstang).

CHAPTERS VIII-X, 11. APPEAL TO HISTORY AS A MOTIVE FOR FULFILLING THE FUNDAMENTAL DUTY OF LOVING GOD AND KEEPING HIS COMMANDMENTS

VIII. FATHERLY DISCIPLINE OF GOD—THE LESSONS OF THE WILDERNESS

The long wandering in the Wilderness had been designed to teach Israel humility and a self-distrusting reliance on Him. In those years, when the Israelites were wholly dependent upon God, they had lacked nothing that was essential for their life. Now they were about to take possession of a fertile land; let them take heed not to forget the Divine goodness and guidance.

1. all the commandment. Ibn Ezra joins this v. to the one following. 'If ye desire to keep all the commandments that ye may live, then remember all the way which the LORD . . . commandments or no.'

live, and multiply. This is said because of the fate of the preceding generation, which had been doomed to die in the Wilderness (Ehrlich).

And thou shalt remember all the way which the LORD thy God hath led thee these forty years in the wilderness, that He might afflict thee, to prove thee, to know what was in thy heart, whether thou wouldest keep His commandments, or no. 3. And He afflicted thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that He might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every thing that proceedeth out of the mouth of the LORD doth man live. 4. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years. 5. And thou shalt consider in thy heart, that, as a man chasteneth his son, so the LORD thy God chasteneth thee. 6. And thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, to walk in His ways, and to fear Him. 7. For the LORD thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, that He might afflict thee. This is defined in v. 3, 15-16. God brought privations upon them to teach them how dependent they were upon Him, and how helpless without Him.

to prove thee. i.e. to test thee. It is in adversity that the true nature of a man is seen. When hardships came upon the Israelites, they had stood the test. Although they had murmured and complained, under the restraining influence of Moses they had adhered to God.

3. and He afflicted thee. Better, so He afflicted thee.

manna. See Exod. xvi.

man doth not live by bread only. Physical food is not the only thing that ensures man's existence. Apart from the normal sustenance, there are Divine forces which sustain man in his progress through life. The words in the Text are of wider application than their reference to the manna. They teach that man has a soul as well as a body, and the needs of the spiritual life should not be neglected. This truth is of especial importance in an age when, in so many countries, men are passionately declaring that man can live by bread alone, and that he will.

4. thy raiment waxed not old. 'There are some who explain this in the manner of a symbol; i.e. the expressions are rhetorical, and not to be understood in their literal sense. They are a vivid metaphor to denote the sustaining Providence of God during the wanderings in the inhospitable desert' (Ibn Ezra).

5. and thou shalt consider in thine heart. Better, and thou shalt know with thine heart: i.e. with the conviction which comes from knowledge—the 'heart' being the seat of intelligence (iv, 29).

chasteneth his son. Better, disciplineth his son. Even the hunger and hardship during the wanderings in the desert were part of God's fatherly discipline of His people. Suffering is thus transfigured into what the Rabbis called 'chastisements of love' (יסורין של אהבה). 'God delivereth the afflicted by His affliction' (Job xxxvi, 15). Especially to the Rabbis is the pathway of suffering the necessary road to the beatitudes of the higher life. 'Beloved is suffering; for only through suffering were the good gifts of the Torah, the Holy Land, and Eternal Life given unto Israel. Those who rejoice in their sufferings, they are the lovers of God' (Talmud).

brass. Better, copper. Traces of copper works are to be found in the Lebanon and Edom. For an account of ancient mining, see Job. xxviii, 1-11.

10. and thou shalt eat. The good things of the world are provided for man's enjoyment; and, far from teaching that man is doing wrong by finding happiness in them, Judaism desires man to do so.

bless. i.e. thank; thou shalt be moved to praise Him with a grateful heart. The Rabbis understood these words as a command, and based upon them the precept that every meal must be followed by Grace. As 'the earth is the LORD's and the fulness thereof', the Talmud declares, 'Whoever enjoys any worldly pleasure without uttering a benediction of its Divine Giver, commits a theft against God.'

The Grace consists of four parts: thanksgiving for food, for the land of Israel, for the Temple, and general praise and petition. In the light of Judaism, the table is an altar; and every meal is hallowed by prayer, before and after. The ancient Jewish Mystics added a touch of ecstasy to the statutory Grace by singing gleeful table-hymns, Zemiroth. The unique combination, in these songs, of adoration of God with genial appreciation of good cheer is a product of the Jewish genius, which interweaves the secular with the sacred, and spreads over the ordinary facts of life the rainbow of the Divine. This saintly custom of table-hymns was soon adopted for the Sabbath by the whole House of Israel. In this way, a Sabbath meal became, literally, a service of joy and with joy. To those who sing, and teach their little ones to sing, these beautiful hymns and melodies, the Sabbath day is, as it was to their fathers of old, a foretaste of 'that Day which is wholly a Sabbath, and rest in life everlasting'.

14. thy heart be lifted up . . . forget the LORD. Wherever there is pride, there is forgetting of God. 'Of a man dominated by pride, the Holy One, blessed be He, says, "I and he cannot dwell in the same universe"' (Talmud). 'Prosperity always tempts man to fretfulness against every idea of restraint. Whenever men forgot God, their whole way of life dropped to a lower level and served baser issues. A reverent and humble recognition of Him and gratitude to Him would prevent their obedience becoming a weariness' (Welch).

But thou shalt remember the LORD thy God, for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth; that He may establish His covenant which He swore unto thy fathers, as it is this day. ¶ 19. And it shall be, if thou shalt forget the LORD thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I forewarn you this day that ye shall surely perish. 20. As the nations that the LORD maketh to perish before you, so shall ye perish; because ye would not hearken unto the voice of the LORD your God.

Know therefore this day, that the LORD thy God is He who goeth over before thee as a devouring fire; He will destroy them, and He will bring them down before thee; so shalt thou drive them out, and make them to perish quickly, as the LORD hath spoken unto thee. *¹¹¹. 4. CHAPTER IX-X, II. WARNING AGAINST SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS

Israel's victories over the Canaanites are due not to any exceptional merits of Israel, but to the wickedness of those nations, and because of the Divine promise to the Patriarchs.

LORD thy God hath thrust them out from before thee, saying: 'For my righteousness the LORD hath brought me in to possess this land'; whereas for the wickedness of these nations the LORD doth drive them out from before thee. 5. Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thy heart, dost thou go in to possess their land; but for the wickedness of these nations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that He may establish the word which the LORD swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. 6. Know therefore that it is not for thy righteousness that the LORD thy God giveth thee this good land to possess it; for thou art a stiffnecked people. ¶ 7. Remember, forget thou not, how thou didst make the LORD thy God wroth in the wilderness; from the day that thou didst go forth out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the LORD. 8. Also in Horeb ye made the LORD wroth, and the LORD was angered with you to have destroyed you. 9. When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; I did neither eat bread nor drink water. 10. And the LORD delivered unto me the two tables of stone written with the finger of God; and on them was written according to all the words, which the LORD spoke with you in the mount out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly. 11. And it came to pass at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant. 12. And the wickedness. The meaning of this and v. 5 is as follows: Do not imagine that there are two reasons for thy possession of the Land; viz. thy righteousness, and the wickedness of the inhabitants. True the wickedness of the inhabitants lost them their land; but the reason why the Israelites were taking their place was not their righteousness, but the fulfilment of the Divine promise made to the Fathers (Rashi, Rashbam).

the wickedness of these nations. Recent excavations bear gruesome testimony to the savagery and foul uncleanness of their rites; see on XII, 31.

5. not for thy righteousness. This is illustrated in v. 8 by the outstanding example of Israel's sin, the Golden Calf.

IX, 8-X, 11. PROOF FROM HISTORY OF ISRAEL'S REBELLION

But for the intercession of Moses, and the gracious forgiveness of God, Israel would have been destroyed for the Golden Calf apostasy.

8. also in Horeb. Better, even in Horeb, or, especially in Horeb. The sin of the Golden Calf is singled out as the most notorious offence committed by the Israelites.

9. I did neither eat. While the Revelation imposed upon Moses a long abstinence, they treated it so lightly that they indulged in a heathenish orgy.

the assembly. Heb. kahal; any assembly, or its representatives, for organized national action.

LORD said unto me: 'Arise, get thee down quickly from hence; for thy people that thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have dealt corruptly; they are quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image.' 13. Furthermore the LORD spoke unto me, saying: 'I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiffnecked people; 14. let Me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven; and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.' 15. So I turned and came down from the mount, and the mount burned with fire; and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands. 16. And I looked, and, behold, ye had sinned against the LORD your God; ye had made you a molten calf; ye had turned aside quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you. 17. And I took hold of the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and broke them before your eyes. 18. And I fell down before the LORD, as at the first, forty days and forty nights; I did neither eat bread nor drink water; because of all your sin which ye sinned, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke Him. 19. For I was in dread of the anger and hot displeasure, wherewith the LORD was wroth against you to destroy you. But the LORD hearkened unto me that time also. 20. Moreover the LORD was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him; and I prayed for Aaron also the same time. 21. And I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and beat it in pieces, grinding it very small, until it was as fine as dust; and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount.—22. thy people. God repudiates Israel because of their treachery—'thy (Moses') people,' 'thou (Moses) hast brought forth out of Egypt.'

14. blot out their name. See Exod. xxxii, 10, 32.

15. In this historical retrospect, Moses does not follow the strict chronological order as recorded in Exod. xxxii, and the narrative here is much condensed.

17. broke them before your eyes. As a sign that God's Covenant with Israel was at an end.

18. I fell down. Better, I cast myself down, as at the first. A condensation of the narrative in Exod. xxxii, and a rearrangement of the details, as in v. 15.

19. that time also. His prayer on their behalf was heard, as on previous occasions; Exod. xiv, 15; xv, 25 (Ibn Ezra).

I cast the dust thereof. The fact is here omitted that Moses made the people drink of the mingled water and dust, because the point on which he is dwelling is his intercession on their behalf. He is not recapitulating the history of the Golden Calf in detail.

Ye have been rebellious against the LORD from the day that I knew you.—25. So I fell down before the LORD the forty days and forty nights that I fell down; because the LORD had said He would destroy you. 26. And I prayed unto the LORD, and said: 'O Lord God, destroy not Thy people and Thine inheritance, that Thou hast redeemed through Thy greatness, that Thou hast brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand. 27. Remember Thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; look not unto the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin; 28. lest the land whence Thou broughtest us out say: Because the LORD was not able to bring them into the land which He promised unto them, and because He hated them, He hath brought them out to slay them in the wilderness. 29. 1. At that time the LORD said unto me: 'Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first, and come up unto Me into the mount; and make thee an ark of wood. 2. And I will write on the tables the words that were on the first tables which thou didst break, and thou shalt put them in the ark.' 3. So I made an ark of acacia-wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in my hand. 4. And He wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten words, which the LORD spoke unto you in the mount out of the midst of the fire

CHAPTER X, 1–11. RESULTS OF MOSES' INTERCESSION

The grant of the Second Tables; the institution of the priestly and Levitical services; and the permission to march onward and take possession of Canaan.

1. at that time. After Moses had succeeded in averting destruction from the people.

3. so I made an ark. 'So I had an ark made,' by Bezalel; cf. Exod. xxv, 10 f, 'thou shalt overlay it with pure gold,' i.e. have it overlaid.

Some of the Midrashim, followed by Rashi, are of opinion that there were two Arks—a temporary Ark made by Moses on receipt of the Tables, and the permanent one prepared later by Bezalel.

in the day of the assembly; and the LORD gave them unto me. 5. And I turned and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made; and there they are, as the LORD commanded me.—6. And the children of Israel journeyed from Beeroth-benejaakan to Moserah; there Aaron died, and there he was buried; and Eleazar his son ministered in the priest's office in his stead. 7. From thence they journeyed unto Gudgod; and from Gudgod to Jotbah, a land of brooks of water.—8. At that time the LORD separated the tribe of Levi, to bear the ark of the covenant of the LORD, to stand before the LORD to minister unto Him, and to bless in His name, unto this day. 9. Wherefore Levi hath no portion nor inheritance with his brethren; the LORD is his inheritance, according as the LORD thy God spoke unto him.—10. Now I stayed in the mount, as at

5. put the tables in the ark. Cf. 1 Kings viii, 9. According to a Rabbinic tradition, Moses also deposited in the Ark the fragments of the First Tables that had been broken. לווחות ושברי לווחות. 'One should learn from this, to show respect to a scholar who has forgotten his learning through age, sorrow or illness' (Talmud). We must respect the aged, though they be broken by years and trouble.

6-9. The mention of the Ark leads Moses to refer to the appointment of the Levites, who were to have it in their charge.

6. children of Israel journeyed. This and the succeeding v. interrupt the narrative, and may be regarded as a gloss added by Moses when he wrote down the Discourse. In Num. xxxiii, 31 f, we find the stations named in a different order, with the variation in nomenclature that is not infrequent in Scripture. A probable explanation is that the Israelites, after journeying in a southern direction to the land of Edom, had to turn sharply to the north (see on ii, 3) and retrace their steps for a short distance.

there Aaron died. By there must be understood the last-mentioned place; viz. Moserah. As it is unthinkable that, in regard to an important event like the death of Aaron, there should be a divergence in the accounts, Moserah must be thought of as at the foot of Mount Hor mentioned in Num. xx, 22 f, and would indicate the exact spot from which Aaron ascended the mountain.

8. at that time. Of the sin of the Golden Calf and its sequel. The tribe of Levi had held aloof from the rest of the people (Exod. xxxii, 26), and, as a reward for their faithfulness, they were appointed to the sacred charge of the Sanctuary. separated. Better, set apart.

to bear the ark. One of the functions of the Levites was to assist the priests in carrying the Ark.

to stand before the LORD. To minister unto Him in offering sacrifice. This duty was reserved for the priests alone; Num. iii, 10.

to bless in His name. To pronounce the Priestly Benediction, Num. vi, 23 f.

9. wherefore. 'Without any question, the whole tribe of Levi is here set apart for holy, i.e. priestly, duties. But it does not at all follow from this, that each single member of the tribe could at will perform each and everyone of these functions, without any gradation or distribution of functions among these servants of God' (Dillmann).

hath no portion. See Num. xviii, 20. When the Land was divided among the tribes, no part was allotted to the tribe of Levi, both priests and Levites. Their whole time being required for the work of the Sanctuary, they would not be able to attend to the care of the soil.

the LORD is his inheritance. This phrase is like that of the Psalmist (xvi, 5), 'O LORD, the portion of mine inheritance' (Ibn Ezra). The Targum understands it to mean: 'what God will give them; viz. the portions of the sacrifices that shall be the inheritance of the tribe of Levi.' See xviii, 1-8.

spoke unto him. See Num. xviii, 20. Although the words are there addressed to Aaron and his sons, i.e. to the priests, they clearly apply to the tribe of Levi generally.

10. I stayed in the mount. This and the succeeding v. are a continuation of ix, 18, 19. Moses stayed two periods of forty days on the Mount after the sin of the Golden Calf—the first time, to intercede for the people (alluded to in ix, 18, 25); the second time, for the purpose of receiving the Tables; cf. Exod. xxxiv, 28.

the first time, forty days and forty nights; and the LORD hearkened unto me that time also; the LORD would not destroy thee. 11. And the LORD said unto me: 'Arise, go before the people, causing them to set forward, that they may go in and possess the land, which I swore unto their fathers to give unto them.' 12. And now, Israel, what doth the LORD thy God require of thee, but to fear the LORD thy God, to walk in all His ways, and to love Him, and to serve the LORD thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul; 13. to keep for thy good the commandments of the LORD, and His statutes, which I command thee this day? 14. Behold, unto the LORD thy God belongeth the heaven, and the heaven of heavens, the earth, with all that therein is. 15. Only the LORD had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and He chose their seed after them, even you, above all peoples, as it is this day. 16. Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked. 17. For the LORD your Final review of all the reasons for, and results of, obedience to God.

12. and now. i.e. in conclusion. Pride having been shown to be out of place in those who had so often provoked God, and who owed their all to God's forgiveness and the entreaties of Moses, let Israel, in return for God's undeserved mercies, love and fear Him.

what doth the LORD thy God require of thee. Nothing impossible or extraordinary, but what is simple, and within the people's duty—fear, love, service and fulfilment of commandments. The question recalls the great utterance of the prophet Micah (vi, 8), with which it should be compared; see p. 684.

to fear the LORD. 'The fear of the LORD is the beginning of knowledge' (Prov. i, 7); reverence of God is the foundation of religion. The Rabbis, likewise, speak of 'the fear of Heaven' (i.e. the religious sense, the feeling for religion) as the key to all Wisdom. 'Whatever man has Learning but no fear of Heaven, to what is he like?' they ask. 'To a keeper of a house, who has the key to the inner chambers, but lacks the key of the outer doors of the house. Of what avail are those others to him?'

and to love Him. See on vi, 5.

13. for thy good. Cf. vi, 24. When God asks man to obey His commands, it is not for His benefit, but for man's welfare.

14–15. The fear of God should flow from the thought of His infinity and righteousness; the love of God from the thought of His love towards the Patriarchs and their posterity.

14. heaven of heavens. The highest heaven.

16. circumcise. i.e. remove. They are not to allow, as it were, a hard covering to surround their heart, making it impervious to Divine influence. 'Your heart shall be open for recognizing the truth' (Nachmanides).

17. God of gods. A Hebraism (like song of songs, heaven of heavens) for the Supreme Judge. the great God. This description of God has been included in the first of the Eighteen Benedictions.

regardeth not persons. 'Is never partial' (Moffatt). Israel must not deliberately sin in the hope of finding mercy through the 'merits of the fathers'. The fact that they were the Chosen People only meant that more was expected of them than of heathens; and, furthermore, that their actions would be judged by higher standards. Cf. Amos iii, 2 ('You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will visit upon you all your iniquities'); see p. 153.

nor taketh reward. 'Never to be bribed' (Moffatt). He is no human judge, of whom such might be thought, especially in barbaric society; see on xvi, 19. He is inflexible in His punishment of the iniquitous, and in His protection of the helpless and oppressed.

God, He is God of gods, and Lord of lords, the great God, the mighty, and the awful, who regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward. 18. He doth execute justice for the fatherless and widow, and loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment. 19. Love ye therefore the stranger; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. 20. Thou shalt fear the LORD thy God; Him shalt thou serve; and to Him shalt thou cleave, and by His name shalt thou swear. 21. He is thy glory, and He is thy God, that hath done for thee these great and tremendous things, which thine eyes have seen. 22. Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten persons; and now the LORD thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude.

CHAPTER XI

18. justice for. The fatherless, the widow, and the stranger, who are too weak to defend themselves against injustice.

19. love ye therefore the stranger. This demand to love the alien is without parallel in the legislation of any ancient people; see p. 313. In later Hebrew, the word 'stranger' (ger) denotes a proselyte, the man or woman who voluntarily joins the ranks of Judaism, and the words of this v. are applied to him. 'How great is the duty which the Torah imposes on us with regard to proselytes. Our parents we are commanded to honour and fear; to the prophets we are ordered to hearken. A man may honour and fear and obey without loving. But in the case of "strangers", we are bidden to love them with the whole force of our heart's affection' (Maimonides); see on xxiv, 17-18.

for ye were strangers. From their bitter experience in Egypt, the Israelites were to learn sympathy with the alien in their own land.

20-22. A God of such majesty and justice should command the reverence, devotion and praise of Israel.

20. thou shalt fear . . . cleave. The fear of God is not a feeling of terror, which repels and causes men to shrink from it. It is that grateful reverence which leads men to cleave and cling to God. The Jewish philosophers coined a special phrase for this feeling: יראה של אהבה, 'loving fear' (Hermann Cohen).

1-9. LET PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF GOD'S WONDROUS DEEDS ON BEHALF OF ISRAEL LEAD TO LOVE AND OBEDIENCE

chastisement. Better, discipline; see iv, 36. Heb. מוסר denotes moral education. The sight of God's wonders 'ought to have exerted upon the Israelites a disciplinary influence, subduing waywardness and pride, and promoting humility and reverence' (Driver). This word מוסר is the word in later Heb. for 'moral exhortation', or 'ethics'.

His greatness. Cf. iii, 24; iv, 34.

chastisement of the LORD your God, His greatness, His mighty hand, and His outstretched arm, 3. and His signs, and His works, which He did in the midst of Egypt unto Pharaoh the king of Egypt, and unto all his land; 4. and what He did unto the army of Egypt, unto their horses, and to their chariots; how He made the water of the Red Sea to overflow them as they pursued after you, and how the LORD hath destroyed them unto this day; 5. and what He did unto you in the wilderness, until ye came unto this place; 6. and what He did unto Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, the son of Reuben; how the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their households, and their tents, and every living substance that followed them, in the midst of all Israel; 7. but your eyes have seen all the great work of the LORD which He did. 8. 4. unto this day. A mere rhetorical expression, 'since once an enemy is put to death, he is destroyed for ever' (Nachmanides). Some take this phrase here (as in III, 14), in the sense of 'finally, irrevocably'.

6. Dathan and Abiram. See Num. xvi. Korah, who was the ringleader of the revolt, is not named here. In the last chapter, x, 8, Moses had spoken of the selection of the Levites, among whom must have been sons of Korah who had not perished (Num. xxvi, 11). It was consequently from consideration of their feelings that he omitted the name of their father. On similar grounds he is not mentioned in Psalm cvi, 17, since the Psalm was sung by the 'Sons of Korah'.

8. be strong. i.e. morally, as a consequence of faithfulness to the Torah; and physically, by reason of the Divine aid.

10-17. CANAAN AND EGYPT CONTRASTED

Unlike Egypt, where it never rained and the fields must be watered by human drudgery, Canaan is dependent for its fertility upon the rain of heaven. This would be withheld or granted according to Israel's faithfulness.

10. from whence ye came out. i.e. from the part of Egypt whence ye came, viz. Goshen (Sifri).

where thou didst sow thy seed. Possibly a portion of the Israelites in Egypt were agriculturists; Egypt 'was so fertile, that it seems even a tribe of shepherds could hardly have refrained from the opportunity which it offered for the richer feeding of their cattle' (G. A. Smith).

with thy foot. i.e. with a wheel—shaduf—worked by the foot—a reference to the water-wheel and pump, that are worked by the feet. Illustrations of the shaduf appear on the monuments.

as a garden of herbs. Fields in Egypt had to be watered in the same way as a vegetable garden, by arduous labour, artificially, and not by the natural source of rain, the direct boon of Heaven.

11. a land of hills and valleys. And, therefore, with a larger rainfall than a flat country.

it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water as the rain of heaven cometh down; 12. a land which the LORD thy God careth for; the eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year. ¶ 13. And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken diligently unto My commandments which I command you this day, to love the LORD your God, and to serve Him with all your heart and with all your soul, 14. that I will give the rain of your land in its season, the former rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil. 15. And I will give grass in thy fields for thy cattle, and thou shalt eat and be satisfied. 16. Take heed to yourselves, lest your heart be deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them; 17. and the anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and He shut up the heaven, so that there shall be no rain, and the ground shall not yield her fruit; and ye perish quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you. 18. Therefore shall ye lay up these My words in

v. 12. חסר אלף

12. careth for. The difference between the fixed climatic conditions of Egypt and those of Canaan can be compared to that between a son in receipt of a fixed annual allowance, and a son in his father's house receiving his portion day by day. Both should be equally filled with gratitude; but, as a fact, the latter would be held more guilty if he were not so (Harper).

13-21. REWARD AND PUNISHMENT IN JUDAISM. See p. 924.

13. to serve Him with all your heart. 'What is heart-service? Service of the heart is Prayer' (Sifri). The institution of Prayer three times daily goes back to an early period; cf. Daniel vi, 11, 14.

14. I will give. Moses speaks in the name of God.

in its season. The agricultural year in Palestine consists of two seasons, the one rainy, and the other dry. The whole of the winter is the rainy season. The heavy rains towards the end of October are the yoreh, 'the former rain.' They open the agricultural year. The rainfall increases throughout December, January and February; it begins to abate in March, and is practically over by the end of April. The latter rain, malkosh, are the heavy showers of March and April. Coming as they do when the grain is ripening, and being the last before the long summer drought, they are of great importance.

15. grass. Better, herbage, for human beings as well as for cattle.

in thy fields. A sign of exceptional fertility (Sifri). It will not be necessary to drive the cattle some distance to open pasture-land to enable them to feed. From the fact that Scripture here speaks first of pasture for the cattle and then continues, thou shalt eat, the Talmud deduced the regulation that a man must feed his animals before himself partaking of his own meal; see on xxv, 4.

16. take heed. Similarly above, in viii, 11, after the words 'eat and be satisfied', the warning note, 'take heed,' is sounded. Satiety easily induces forgetfulness.

your heart be deceived. Into attributing the blessings you enjoy to 'other gods', the local deities worshipped by the heathen inhabitants of old.

17. shut up the heaven. Cf. xxviii, 23 f; Lev. xxvi, 19 f.

and ye perish. When the early rains or the latter rains fail, drought comes occasionally for two years in succession, and that means famine and pestilence.

18. lay up these My words. This and the two following v. are a repetition, with slight verbal differences, of vi, 6-9. The Sifri joins this on to the words which immediately precede, and your heart and in your soul; and ye shall bind them for a sign upon your hand, and they shall be for frontlets between your eyes. 19. And ye shall teach them your children, talking of them, when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 20. And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thy house, and upon thy gates; 21. that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, upon the land which the LORD swore unto your fathers to give them, as the days of the heavens above the earth. *vii m. ¶ 22. For if ye shall diligently keep all this commandment which I command you, to do it, to love the LORD your God, to walk in all His ways, and to cleave unto Him, 23. then will the LORD drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall dispossess nations greater and mightier than yourselves. 24. Every place whereon the sole of your foot shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness, and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the hinder sea shall be your border. 25. There shall no man be able to stand against you: the LORD your God shall lay the fear of you and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, as He hath spoken unto you.

1. Thus saith the LORD:

Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement,

Wherewith I have put her away?

Or which of My creditors is it

To whom I have sold you?

Behold, for your iniquities were ye sold,

And for your transgressions was your mother put away.

2. Wherefore, when I came, was there no man?

When I called, was there none to answer?

Is My hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem?

Or have I no power to deliver?

Behold, at My rebuke I dry up the sea,

I make the rivers a wilderness;

Their fish become foul, because there is no water,

And die for thirst.

3. I clothe the heavens with blackness,

And I make sackcloth their covering.

4. The Lord GOD hath given me

The tongue of them that are taught,

That I should know how to sustain with

He wakeneth morning by morning,

He wakeneth mine ear

To hear as they that are taught.

Another cause of despondency to the exiles was the doubt, 'Is the ancient covenant-relation between God and Israel still in existence? Has not God, by exiling Israel, divorced Israel?' The answer is, 'Where is your mother's get, which alone would make the separation final? It does not exist. Israel, therefore, is still Israel, and there is no hindrance to Israel's restoration.'

'THE SERVANT OF THE LORD': THE CONSCIOUSNESS OF HIS MISSION

4-9. This is one of the four passages in the Second Part of Isaiah that either describe the 'Servant of the LORD', or, as here, introduce him as the speaker. These passages are of exceptional beauty and religious depth, but present great difficulties of interpretation. The 'Servant of the LORD' is Ideal Israel, the sanctified minority who are willing to suffer and die for their Faith. They are ready to bear all uncharitableness and persecution at the hands of those of their brethren who may be blind and deaf to the signs of the times, and to the fulfilment of God's purposes in regard to Israel and mankind. See also Isa. XLII, 1-4; XLIX, 1-6; LII, 13-LIII.

4. them that are taught. Or, 'the learned.'

5. neither turned away backward. 'I did not turn back,' nor hesitate, despite abuse and ill-treatment.

6. I gave my back to the smiters,
And my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair;
I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

7. For the Lord GOD will help me;
Therefore have I not been confounded;
Therefore have I set my face like a flint,
And I know that I shall not be ashamed.

8. He is near that justifieth me;
Who will contend with me? let us stand up together;
Who is mine adversary? let him come near to me.

9. Behold, the Lord GOD will help me;
Who is he that shall condemn me?
Behold, they all shall wax old as a garment,
The moth shall eat them up.

10. Who is among you that feareth the LORD,
That obeyeth the voice of His servant?
Though he walketh in darkness,
And hath no light,
Let him trust in the name of the LORD,
And stay upon his God.

11. Behold, all ye that kindle a fire,
That gird yourselves with firebrands,
Begone in the flame of your fire,

If fire and firebrands refer to idolatrous rites, there is here possibly 'an allusion to the strange but apparently authentic fact that in certain forms of heathen worship the devotees, under the stress of excitement, become impervious to the ordinary effects of heat on the human body. If so, the boasted marvels of their fire-walking will not render them immune from the retribution of God' (Elmslie).

The Prophet, therefore, assures them that the barren districts in the Holy Land shall be made exceedingly fruitful (Ehrlich). Such marvellous transformations in the fertility of Palestine have been witnessed in our own day.

IV. RE'EH

(CHAPTERS XI, 26–XVI, 17)

XI, 26–32. THE TWO WAYS

These seven verses form the peroration and summing up of the Second Discourse; and, at the same time, are an introduction to the Code itself, which begins with xn, 1 and ends with xxvi. It is an earnest appeal that a right choice be made between the Two Ways now before Israel. The entire future of the nation depends upon the right choice. This theme is further developed in xxviii–xxx.

26. I set before you. Both as individuals and as a nation they were endowed with free-will, and the choice between the Two Ways rested with themselves. All that Moses could do was clearly to define the alternatives, and point out whither each of them led; cf. xxx, 15.

28. which ye have not known. Cf. xxxii, 17, 'new gods that came up of late, which your fathers dreaded not'; deities that have not shown and, being dead, could not show, the saving power they had experienced at the hand of God.

29. set the blessing. To impress the truth of the Two Ways more deeply upon Israel, Moses was to arrange a symbolic representation of the Blessing and Curse; xxvii.

MOSES' SECOND DISCOURSE (Continued)

2. THE REHEARSAL OF THE CODE

XII-XXVI

At this point we pass to the Code of Laws. All that has gone before may be regarded as the religious and historical prelude to the rehearsal of the statutes and judgments which now follow. So far Moses had been speaking in general terms of the necessity of obedience to the laws of God, reminding them of the Covenant of Horeb, and the fundamental principles of Israel's Religion. He now proceeds to give detailed laws and precepts that were to govern their lives in the Land of Promise.

These laws deal with

- (1) Religious institutions and worship (xii, 1-xvi, 17);
- (2) Government of the people (xvi, 18-xviii);
- (3) Criminal law (xix-xxi, 1-9); and
- (4) Domestic life (xxi, 10-xxv).
- (5) Conclusion of Code: First-fruits, tithes, and accompanying prayers. (xxvi, 1-15.)

Some commentators detect in all these chapters an elaboration of the basic laws contained in the Decalogue. Thus xii-xiv deal with the worship of God, and are an expansion of the first three of the Ten Commandments. In xv-xvi, 17 we have an enumeration of Holy Festivals analogous to the Sacred Day of the week. Chaps. xvi-xviii deal with civil and religious government, which plays the same part in the national life as the authority of parents plays in the life of the family. The remainder of the section corresponds generally to the second half of the Decalogue, and treats of the relationship of man to his fellow-man.

(1) RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS AND WORSHIP

XII, 1-XVI, 17

This section includes the laws (a) concerning the Central Sanctuary; (b) distinctiveness in worship; (c) against heathen rites and religious seducers; (d) of Holiness (concerning clean and unclean, tithes, year of release, firstlings); and (e) the Three Feasts.

(a) THE LAW OF THE CENTRAL SANCTUARY

XII, 1-28

When Israel is settled in the Land, sacrifices shall be offered only in the spot to be chosen by God.

1. in the land. 'Laws that relate to the Land need be observed only in the Land; all other laws must be observed everywhere, in Palestine or out of Palestine' (Sifri).

2. ye shall surely destroy. Better, ye shall utterly destroy. Their first duty would be the eradication of every trace of heathenism.
hills . . . tree. Worship at these places was accompanied by licentious rites; see v. 31 and Hosea iv, 13.

3. altars . . . pillars. See on vii, 5. destroy their name. The very memory of the local Baals is to cease.
out of that place. 'The injunction to destroy idolatrous images applies only to the Holy Land, and not to those places outside it where Jews reside' (Sifri).

4. not do so. The Israelites were not, like the Canaanites, to worship God on the 'high mountains, and under every green tree', but were to do so in a Central Sanctuary, as stated in the following v. Some Rabbis, however, connected this v. with the one immediately preceding, and deduced therefrom the prohibition to obliterate in any way the Divine Name in a scroll or book. In later ages, it became customary to bury disused Hebrew books, so as not to dispose of them in any way that would involve destroying something containing a Divine Name. Hence the institution of the Genizah in Eastern Jewish Communities, and the periodic burial of disused, tattered, and fragmentary books of Scripture and devotion (שמוות) in Russo-Polish Jewries.

not do so unto the LORD your God. 5. But unto the place which the LORD your God shall choose out of all your tribes to put His name there, even unto His habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come; 6. and thither ye shall bring your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, and your tithes, and the offering of your hand, and your vows, and your freewill-offerings, and the firstlings of your herd and of your flock; 7. and there ye shall eat before the LORD your God, and ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein the LORD thy God hath blessed thee. 8. Ye shall not do after all that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes; 9. for ye are not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance, which the LORD your God giveth thee. 10. But when ye go over the Jordan, and dwell in the land which the LORD your God causeth you to inherit, and He giveth you rest from all your enemies round about,

5. but unto the place. This insistence upon the eventual establishment of one Central Sanctuary for all Israel was for the purpose of ensuring unity in national life. The Central Altar was to form a rallying-point to the Israelites wherever they resided, and prove a strong factor in welding the tribes into one compact body. When Jeroboam desired to strengthen the schism in Israel and separate the Ten Tribes from Judah, he set up two new centres of worship.

which the LORD your God. Though Jerusalem was the ultimate place chosen, it is not here in view. God might from time to time designate different places where offerings were to be brought. Thus, in xxvii, 5 f, Israel is commanded to build an altar on Mount Ebal and sacrifice burnt-offerings upon it. Thereafter Shiloh was for centuries the home of God's choice; see Jeremiah vii, 12. Israel was to be guided in this matter by the Prophets. The Prophet Gad tells David to erect an altar in the threshing floor of Araunah in Jerusalem (II Sam. xxiv, 18); and other instances are found in Judges vi, 26; xiii, 16-20; I Kings xviii, 32. There is no contradiction between the law of the Central Sanctuary and Exod. xx, 21 (xx, 24 in the English Bible). See note, Centralization of Worship, p. 939.

shall choose. Not the place which the worshipper chooses, but the place chosen by God. This is the same truth proclaimed in Exod. xx, 21, which should be translated, 'In whatever place that I cause my name to be mentioned, I will come unto thee and bless thee.'

firstlings. The law on the subject is given in xv, 19 f.

7. there ye shall eat. The word ye refers either to the priests and Levites, or to the persons who bring the sacrifices and their households, according to the character of the offering.

in all that ye put your hand unto. i.e. in all your undertakings. The celebration is thus a thanksgiving for the success of the year's toil.

your households. 'Your wife' (Sifri); v. 12 and 18 subsequently enumerating those others who were to participate in the rejoicing.

8-14. PRIVATE ALTARS TO BE PROHIBITED

8. that we do here this day. Until the Central Sanctuary had its ultimate fixed abode in Jerusalem, it was permitted to offer sacrifices on private altars. This, in the opinion of many Talmudic teachers, was certainly so in days of unrest, like the time of the Judges. According to other traditions, sacrificing on private altars became again permissible after the Destruction of the Temple. It must have been such a tradition that prompted the Jews in Egypt to erect, after the Fall of the First Temple, a sacrificial sanctuary of their own—the Temple of Onias (Hoffmann).

9. to the rest . . . inheritance. The former denotes Shiloh, where the Ark first found a resting place; and the latter denotes Jerusalem (Sifri).

so that ye dwell in safety; *ii. 11. then it shall come to pass that the place which the LORD your God shall choose to cause His name to dwell there, thither shall ye bring all that I command you: your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, your tithes, and the offering of your hand, and all your choice vows which ye vow unto the LORD. 12. And ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God, ye, and your sons, and your daughters, and your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and the Levite that is within your gates, forasmuch as he hath no portion nor inheritance with you. 13. Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou seest; 14. but in the place which the LORD shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee. ¶ 15. Notwithstanding thou mayest kill and eat flesh within all thy gates, after all the desire of thy soul, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which He hath given thee; the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the gazelle, and as of the hart. 16. Only ye shall not eat the blood; thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water. 17. Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil, or the firstlings of thy herd or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou vowest, nor thy freewill-offerings, nor the offering of thy hand; 18. but thou shalt eat them before the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates; and thou

10. He giveth you rest. This did not occur until the reign of David. Hence the statement in II Sam. vii, 1, 'when the king (David) dwelt in his house, and the LORD had given him rest from all his enemies round about,' that the desire to build a Temple arose in his heart. Before that final resting-place in Jerusalem was available, a temporary abode was found in Shiloh; Josh. xviii, 1.

11. then it shall come to pass. In other words, the law of the Central Altar was not meant to come into operation till the time was ripe for building the Temple (I Kings iii, 2).

your choice vows. If a man brings an offering, voluntary or otherwise, he must select for that purpose the choicest that he can obtain (Sifri).

12. within your gates . . . no portion. See xviii, 1-8.

13. thy burnt-offerings. All the various sacrifices enumerated in v. 11.

thou seest. i.e. not that thou seest as suitable for that purpose, but only as a Prophet sees (i.e. selects) for thee, as Elijah did at Mount Carmel (Sifri); see on v. 5 above.

15-19. EXTENSION OF PROHIBITION OF PRIVATE SANCTUARY

Even the mere eating of sacrificial foods is forbidden outside the city of the Central Sanctuary.

15. mayest . . . eat flesh. See on v. 20.

16. not eat the blood. See on v. 23.

17. thou mayest not eat. Mention of burnt-offerings and sacrifices is omitted from the list, because these could only be eaten by the priests within the Temple precincts (Lev. vi, 19, vii, 6); whereas the other sacred foods could be eaten anywhere within the limits of the Holy City.

If the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to put His name there be too far from thee, then thou shalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock, which the LORD hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou shalt eat within thy gates, after all the desire of thy soul. 22. Howbeit as the gazelle and as the hart is eaten, so thou shalt eat thereof; the unclean and the clean may eat thereof alike. 23. Only be stedfast in not eating the blood; for the blood is the life; and thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh. 24. Thou shalt not eat it; thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water. 25. 21. v. חסר יו"ד.

19. as long as thou livest. lit. 'all thy days.' upon thy land. The Levite is to be supported even in the Sabbatical year and the Jubilee, as long as he is resident in the Holy Land. Outside its border, he is to be treated as merely a poor man in need of assistance (Sifri).

20-22. THE SLAUGHTER OF ANIMALS FOR FOOD

In Lev. xvii it is laid down that every animal, even for ordinary consumption, must be slain at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting. This was a temporary precept for the period of the Israelites' sojourn in the Wilderness; see on Lev. xvii, 3. This precept is replaced by another in this chapter of Deuteronomy. Israel was now about to settle in Canaan, and the individual Israelite could not be expected to go to the Central Sanctuary in Shiloh or Jerusalem whenever he wished to partake of meat food.

20. the desire of thy soul. In Heb. the 'soul' is conceived as the seat of emotion and appetite.

21. as I have commanded thee. This cannot refer to v. 15, as in that case the verb would not be in the perfect tense, but the participle would be used (cf. xi, 8, 13, 22, 27, 28; xii, 11, etc.). Tradition connects as I have commanded thee with the words thou shalt kill. We have thus an indication that Moses had previously taught the people a method of slaughtering animals. Since this is nowhere mentioned in the Pentateuch, it follows that Shechitah, the Jewish method of slaughter, must have been communicated orally to Israel.

22. gazelle . . . hart. These were 'clean' animals, but were not acceptable as offerings on the Altar, not being domestic animals; Lev. i, 2.

may eat thereof alike. A person ritually unclean could not partake of the flesh of a sacrificial animal, but could join in a non-sacrificial meal.

23-28. WARNING AGAINST BLOOD

This law is mentioned as early as Gen. ix, 4 and repeated Lev. xvii, 11, 14; xix, 26. The Jewish method of slaughter, and the salting of meat, have as one of their main purposes the draining away of the blood.

23. the blood is the life. See on Lev. xvii, 11. thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh. The Rabbis understood this as meaning that it is forbidden to eat a limb torn from a living animal; see on Gen. ix, 4.

24. thou shalt not eat it. The Rabbis understood this and the following apparently superfluous v. to signify that even the blood which remains in the animal after the flow of blood has ceased, is prohibited.

pour it out upon the earth. In contrast to the blood of a sacrificial animal (see v. 27), or to that of a bird or a hunted animal, which blood is covered over; Lev. xvii, 13.

25. that it may go well with thee. Ibn Ezra suggests that the use of blood would have a demoralizing effect upon the moral and physical nature, and pass on a hereditary taint to future generations.

with thee, and with thy children after thee, when thou shalt do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD. 26. Only thy holy things which thou hast, and thy vows, thou shalt take, and go unto the place which the LORD shall choose; 27. and thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the flesh and the blood, upon the altar of the LORD thy God; and the blood of thy sacrifices shall be poured out against the altar of the LORD thy God, and thou shalt eat the flesh. 28. Observe and hear all these words which I command thee, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever, when thou doest that which is good and right in the eyes of the LORD thy God. *iii. ¶ 29. When the LORD thy God shall cut off the nations from before thee, whither thou goest in to dispossess them, and thou dispossessest them, and dwellest in their land; 30. take heed to thyself that thou be not ensnared to follow them, after that they are destroyed from before thee; and that thou inquire not after their gods, saying: 'How used these nations to serve their gods? even so will I do likewise.' 31. Thou shalt not do so unto the LORD thy God; for every abomination to the LORD, which He hateth, have they done unto their gods; for even their sons and their daughters do they burn in the fire to their gods.

the place which the LORD shall choose. Notwithstanding the permission granted (v. 20-22) in the case of meat for food, solemn offerings of every kind should be brought only at the Central Sanctuary.

(b) DISTINCTIVENESS IN WORSHIP

Not only in regard to the place of sacrifice, but in regard to the mode of Divine Worship, shall the Israelites be distinguished from their heathen neighbours. Israel shall especially beware of the hideous abominations—such as human sacrifice—that accompany their worship. This is one of the many exhortations of this nature that, 'like a chorus, break in upon both the narratives and laws throughout Deuteronomy' (G. A. Smith).

30. how used these nations to serve. Better, used to worship. The meaning of this warning is strikingly illustrated by the narrative in II Kings xvii, 25 f. Just as these foreign settlers in N. Palestine wished to follow the way of the former inhabitants in regard to worship, so the Israelites might be tempted to inquire after, and follow, the minhag of the peoples whose land they would soon inhabit. There would be fatal danger in such a course, even if the imitation confined itself to forms of worship. With the alien form, the alien idea would soon find entrance.

31. every abomination. It was the immorality and inhumanity of Canaanite religion that rendered it abominable in the eyes of God, and imposed upon the Israelites the duty of exterminating it.

even their sons. To say nothing of ordinary human sacrifices, including the killing of aged parents. R. Akiba cites a particularly loathsome instance of such a murder, which he himself had witnessed.

they burn in the fire to their gods. Human sacrifice was the practice among the primeval Greeks and Romans, Celts, Slavs, and Scandinavians. It was in use among the Germans down to late Roman times; and was widespread among the ancient Semites, especially in times of national danger or disaster. Recent excavations in Palestine, at Gezer, Taanach, and Megiddo, have revealed regular cemeteries round the heathen altars, in which skeletons of scores of infants have been found, showing traces of slaughter and partial consumption by sacrificial fire.

Israel's fight against this hideous aberration of the religious sense began with the story of the sacrifice of Isaac (see p. 201), and was continued throughout the centuries. It is one of the bitter ironies of history, that the one People which for a thousand years fought this horror, and whose religion forbids its followers the eating of any blood in the most rigorous way, should itself have to suffer from the libellous accusation of ritual murder and the use of human blood for religious purposes. Even in the Twentieth Century, this foul and Satanic lie was officially levelled against Israel in the Beilis trial at Kieff in 1913; and only in 1935 it was broadcast by Nazi leaders in their campaign of ruin against the Jewish population of Germany. In regard to the Nazi resurrection of the fable of ritual murder, it is well to recall that in 1912 no less than 215 non-Jewish leaders in German public life, learning, literature, theology, science, and the arts, issued a protest against this cruel and utterly baseless libel on Judaism. They wrote: 'This unscrupulous fiction, spread among the people, has from the Middle Ages until recent times led to terrible consequences. It has incited the ignorant masses to outrage and massacre, and has driven misguided crowds to pollute themselves with the innocent blood of their Jewish fellow-men. And yet not a shadow of proof has ever been adduced to justify this crazy belief.' See Cecil Roth, The Ritual Murder Libel and the Jew, London, 1935; and A Book of Jewish Thoughts, Oxford edition, p. 181.

CHAPTER XIII

(c) RELIGIOUS SEDUCERS

Against the danger of religious seduction on the part of false prophets, self-deluded visionaries, and base men.

1. thou shalt not add thereto. See on iv, 2. 'Constant changes would tend to disturb the whole system of the Torah, and would lead people to believe that it was not of Divine origin. But permission is at the same time given to the wise men, i.e. the Sanhedrin of every generation, to make "fences" round the judgments of the Torah, in order to ensure their keeping. In the same manner, they have the power temporarily to dispense with some religious act prescribed in the Torah, or to allow that which is forbidden, if exceptional circumstances and events require it; but none of the laws can be abrogated permanently' (Maimonides).

This prohibition is of more than theoretic interest in modern Judaism. The various attempts made by revolutionary religious leaders to 'accommodate' Judaism to present-day conditions have all suffered spiritual shipwreck, because they acted in defiance of either ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, or of neither shall ye diminish from it. On the one hand, some attempted 'to diminish' Judaism by such vital things as the Sabbath, the Hebrew Language, and the Love of Zion. And, on the other hand, there are those who, besides, are prepared 'to add' to the Jewish Heritage things that constitute a serious weakening of the Unity of God, and a radical departure from other fundamental principles of the Jewish Faith.

2-6. A FALSE PROPHET

2. a prophet. A false prophet.

a dreamer of dreams. In Scripture, God often communicates with His chosen servants through the medium of dreams (cf. Num. xii, 6); and it would be easy for one who had experienced a dream to regard it as the vehicle of a Divine message.

which thou hast not known. Cf. xi, 28. These are the words of Moses, and are not part of the remarks of the 'prophet'.

4. thou shalt not hearken. 'Reason, which declares his testimony false, is more to be trusted than the eye which sees his signs' (Maimonides).

And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath spoken perversion against the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of bondage, to draw thee aside out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in. So shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee. ¶ 7. man's claims, but God is putting you to the test, whether your loyalty to God can withstand the most insidious seductions from His revealed will. This refusal to recognize miracle as necessarily a proof of the truth of a doctrine is typically Jewish. When Sir George Adam Smith writes that it is not in harmony with both the official and the popular mind of ancient Jewry, he does so as a New Testament apologist and in disregard of Rabbinic teaching. The latter can be learned from the story of R. Joshua's unchallenged assertion אין סומכין על הנס, 'Miracles in themselves cannot be invoked as decisive in matters of reason and law.' A thousand years later, Hallevi and Maimonides likewise maintained that miraculous acts can on no account be deemed as an unerring attestation of a Divine mission.

to know whether. These words do not mean that God desires to know whether they loved God, for He already knows it. The expression is an anthropomorphism, Scripture using 'the language of men'. If the Israelites succumbed to the test, it would demonstrate the weakness of their attachment to God; if they came through it successfully, their Faith would be strengthened as a result of the trial.

5. ye shall walk . . . unto Him. lit. 'after the LORD your God shall ye go, and Him shall ye fear, and His commandments shall ye keep, and His voice shall ye obey, and Him shall ye worship, and unto Him shall ye cleave.'

6. brought you out . . . redeemed thee. He hath spoken perversion against Him who is your Saviour and Redeemer, Who alone deserves Israel's undivided allegiance and lasting gratitude.

Hoffmann calls attention to the fact that

Christian theologians have often explained v. 2-6 in relation to the founder of their religion. The rise of Christianity was indeed a test unto Israel; so also were the expansion of Christianity and its triumphant world-dominion an age-long trial of Israel's loyalty to God and His Torah. Israel nobly stood that test and trial. It remained undazzled by the power of the dominant Faith, and undaunted

As against God, even the closest personal ties are not to protect the would-be idolater from unsparing punishment.

7. the son of thy mother. i.e. even if he be the son of thy mother. In the days of polygamy, the sons of the same mother were more intimate with one another than with the sons of their father by another wife. 'As so often, the Septuagint and the Samaritan Text misunderstand the Hebrew original, and insert the words, the son of thy father or before "the son of thy mother"—which renders it trivial' (Koenig).

And thou shalt stone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to draw thee away from the LORD thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. 12. And all Israel shall hear, and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this is in the midst of thee. ¶ 13. If thou shalt hear tell concerning one of thy cities, which the LORD thy God giveth thee to dwell there, saying: 14. 'Certain base fellows are gone out from the midst of thee, and have drawn away the inhabitants of their city, saying: Let us go and serve other gods, which ye have not known'; 15. then shalt thou inquire, and make search, and ask diligently; and, behold, if it be truth, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in the midst of thee; 16. thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the sword, destroying it utterly, and all that is therein and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the sword. 17. And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the broad place thereof, and shalt burn with fire the city, and all the spoil thereof every whit, unto the LORD thy God; and it shall be a heap for ever; it shall not be built again. 18. Jewish history does not record a single instance of punishment for religious seduction by false prophet or member of one's family.

Both secular princes and the Inquisition confiscated the possession of heretics. Persecution became more frequent because of the plunder that accompanied it (Guttmann).

Deut. XIII, 13-19 has had a curious history, both in the Synagogue and in the Church. In the Synagogue, it was maintained that this law was not to be carried out, even if only one mezuzah were found in the tainted city, as the destruction of the city would involve the cardinal sin of destroying the Name of God inscribed on that mezuzah; cf. on XII, 4. Some Rabbis declare, עיר הנדחת לא היתה ולא עתידה להיות, 'The case here described, viz. the destruction of a city tainted with idolatry, never occurred, nor was likely to occur.' This section, they said in effect, was only added to the Torah for the sake of deepening the understanding of the vital necessity of resisting all temptation to idolatry. This view was not shared by the Church. Deut. XIII, 13-19 was embodied in the Canon Law; and the ghastly records of medieval persecution show that it was not construed as a mere warning against idolatry. In the year 1097, when the Crusaders arrived at Pelagonia in Macedon, and learned that the inhabitants of the town were 'heretics', they paused in their pilgrimage to the Holy Sepulchre, conquered the city, razed it to the ground, and put all its inhabitants to the sword. Again, at the beginning of the thirteenth century, Crusaders annihilated the 20,000 Albigenses, men, women, and children, who had fled to Beziers, in Southern France. Not one was spared. (Lea, History of the Inquisition in the Middle Ages, I, pp. 107, 154.)

(d) LAWS OF HOLINESS

(CHAPTERS XIV-XV)

The opening words of this chapter are introductory to the regulations following. There being a close kinship between God and Israel, His people were subject to special regulations that would distinguish them from other nations and constantly remind them of the duty of holiness.

XIV, 1-2. AGAINST HEATHEN RITES

1. ye are the children of the LORD. Cf. Exod. IV, 22.

'Many ancient nations believed in their descent from gods and demi-gods. But the relation was conceived physically. In the Hebrew Scriptures, however, God's fatherhood and Israel's sonship are historical and ethical, and based on God's love, deliverance, and providence' (G. A. Smith). According to the interpretation of Rabbi Judah, the people of Israel were only children of the LORD so long as they conformed to the Divine will, and they forfeited the honour when they were disobedient; but Rabbi Meir maintained that, whether their conduct was filial or unfilial, they could never cease being children of the LORD.

cut yourselves. As a sign of mourning; see I Kings XVIII, 28. The Israelites were not to gash themselves in their grief: firstly, because any deliberate disfigurement of the body was forbidden; and secondly, because as 'children of God' they were to regard a bereavement as His decree, and, therefore, something to be accepted with resignation. The Sifri gives a homiletic interpretation to the Heb. לֹא תַחַדְדוּ; 'Ye shall not cut yourselves up into factions'; i.e. a holy people must be a united people (לֹא תַעֲשׂוּ אַעֲדוֹת אַעֲדוֹת).

nor make any baldness. This disfigurement was likewise a heathen mourning custom, the hair being sometimes buried with the corpse as an offering to the dead. In Lev. XXI, 5 a similar prohibition had been addressed to the priests; in Deut. the law is given a wider application, in order to embrace the whole of the people, who were 'a kingdom of priests'.

These are the beasts which ye may eat: the ox, the sheep, and the goat, 5. the hart, and the gazelle, and the roebuck, and the wild goat, and the pygarg, and the antelope, and the mountain-sheep. 6. And every beast that parteth the hoof, and hath the hoof wholly cloven in two, and cheweth the cud, among the beasts, that ye may eat. 7. Nevertheless these ye shall not eat of them that only chew the cud, or of them that only have the hoof cloven: the camel, and the hare, and the rock-badger, because they chew the cud but part not the hoof, they are unclean unto you; 8. and the swine, because he parteth the hoof but cheweth not the cud, he is unclean unto you; of their flesh ye shall not eat, and their carcasses ye shall not touch. ¶ 9. These ye may eat of all that are in the waters: whatsoever hath fins and scales may ye eat; 10. and whatsoever hath not fins and scales ye shall not eat; it is unclean unto you. ¶ 11. 3-20. CLEAN AND UNCLEAR BEASTS, FISHES AND BIRDS

The twofold purpose of the dietary laws is clearly defined. In the first place, Israel is to be 'holy', i.e. distinct, marked off from the other peoples; and these laws powerfully served to maintain the separateness of Israel. In the second place, the creatures which are forbidden are described as 'abominable things'—in themselves loathsome and undesirable as articles of diet; see Introductory Note on Lev. xi, p. 448.

In Deut. we have something more than a mere repetition; there is just the kind of exposition which is appropriate to the circumstances of Moses' farewell to his people.

4. the ox, the sheep, the goat. In Lev. xi, we merely have the general classification given in v. 6 of this chapter of forbidden animals, with mention of some. Here the animals are named that may be eaten.

5. the hart . . . mountain-sheep. Seven varieties of game.

pygarg. Better, antelope.

antelope. Better, wild-ox.

6. that parteth . . . cud. For an explanation of these distinctive features in animals, see on Lev. xi, 3.

7. these ye shall not eat. This and the following v. correspond to Lev. xi, 4-8.

9. in the waters. The law with regard to fishes is slightly abridged here as compared with Lev. xi, 9 f.

11-20. Of birds. Only the unclean are here named. In Lev. xi, these are mentioned in a slightly different order.

13. glede. This bird is not mentioned in Lev. xi, 14. According to the Talmud, all the names in this v. refer to the same bird, which was known under different designations.

20. clean winged things. In Lev. xi, 21 f, a distinction is drawn between 'winged swarming things that go upon all fours' and those that do not—the former class being prohibited as food. According to Sifri, the phrase 'clean winged things' corresponds to the permitted 'winged swarming things' in Leviticus; and the unclean species alluded to in the preceding v. is the same prohibited kind mentioned in Lev. xi, 23.

and the hoopoe, and the bat. 19. And all winged swarming things are unclean unto you; they shall not be eaten. 20. Of all clean winged things ye may eat. ¶ 21. Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself; thou mayest give it unto the stranger that is within thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto a foreigner; for thou art a holy people unto the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk. *v. ¶ 22. Thou shalt surely tithe all the increase of thy seed, that which is brought forth in the field year by year. 23. And thou shalt eat before the LORD thy God, in the place which He shall choose to cause His name to dwell there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herd and of thy flock; that thou mayest learn to fear the LORD thy God always. 24. And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it, because the place is too far from thee, which the LORD thy God shall choose to set His name there, when the LORD thy God shall bless thee; 25. then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thy hand, and shalt go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose. 26. And thou shalt bestow the money for whatsoever thy soul desireth, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for

21. anything that dieth of itself. Heb. גֵּבֵלָה; the true meaning of this Heb. term seems to be 'the carcase of an animal which has not been killed according to the method of Shechitah' (Hoffmann). It would thus include not only an animal which died a natural death, but one which has been put to death by shooting.

the stranger. According to Lev. xvii, 15, touching or eating the flesh of a nevelah is defiling both to the Israelite and the 'stranger'. In Lev. the 'stranger' meant the non-Israelite who had become a proselyte in the full sense of the word, a ger tzedek. Here the 'stranger that is within thy gates' refers to the time when Israel would be settled in their Land and would have in their midst not only proselytes, but also men who, while they had abandoned idolatry, did not completely take upon themselves the life and religious practices of the Israelite. The Rabbis called this class of resident aliens ger toshav; and this v. refers to that class, who were neither Israelites by birth or conversion, nor 'foreigners'. See p. 256.

thou shalt not seethe. See on Exod. xxiii, 19.

22-29. TITHES

A tenth of all the yearly produce shall be set aside, taken to the Sanctuary, and eaten there. This tenth is the so-called 'second tithe', as contrasted with the tithe of the produce that was to be given for the maintenance of the Levites; Num. xviii, 26 f.

to fear the LORD thy God. The Biblical phrase for being filled with the sense of dependence upon God. And that was the purpose of bidding the Israelite eat this tithe in the Holy City. It would impress upon him the thought that the year's produce was the bounty of God. Furthermore, 'inasmuch as the man and his household would not be likely to consume the whole of the tithe, he would be compelled to give part away in charity' (Maimonides).

24-27. Israelites who dwell too far from the Sanctuary may turn their tithe into money, purchase at the Temple what they desire, and feast before God with their households and Levites.

And the Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him; for he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee. ¶ 28. At the end of every three years, even in the same year, thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase, and shalt lay it up within thy gates. 29. And the Levite, because he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thy hand which thou doest. *vi.

28-29. THE POOR TITHE

This was due in the third and sixth years of the Sabbatical period instead of the second tithe, which, or its equivalent in money, had to be consumed in Jerusalem. In those years, what would have been the Second Tithe is to be retained at home for the poor to consume. The third year is called 'the year of tithing' in xxvi, 12.

Self-indulgence, without a thought for those in need of assistance, brings no lasting satisfaction; and such a mode of living is without blessing.

CAP. XV. טו

CHAPTER XV

THE YEAR OF RELEASE

Every seventh year shall be a year of remission for all debts; this however shall not operate as a motive for refusing loans. Likewise, the seventh year of the individual's service brought freedom to the Hebrew bondman, with liberal parting gifts from his master.

1-11. OF DEBTS

1. at the end of every seven years. It is possible that these words signify 'when each seventh year has arrived'; cf. Jer. xxxiv, 14 (see p. 323), where 'at the end of seven years' clearly means, 'in the seventh year.' See, however, comment on next v.

a release. Heb. shemittah. This 'release' took two forms. (1) The soil was not to be sown; see Exod. xxiii, 10 f, and Lev. xxv, 2 f. (2) The remission of loans.

2. not exact it of his neighbour. Or, 'he shall not press his neighbour for payment.' The Jewish traditional view is that the Year of Release in regard to debts does not come into operation until the end of the seventh year. This law was intended for an agricultural community, in which each family had its homestead. A debt would only be contracted in case of misfortune. The loan was, therefore, an act of charity, rather than a business transaction. Circumstances had altered altogether when economic life became more complex and people engaged in commerce. Debts contracted in the course of trading belonged to quite a different category, and this law could not fairly be invoked his brother; because the LORD's release hath been proclaimed. 3. Of a foreigner thou mayest exact it; but whatsoever of thine is with thy brother thy hand shall release. 4. Howbeit there shall be no needy among you—for the LORD will surely bless thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it—5. if only thou diligently hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe to do all this commandment which I command thee this day. 6. For the LORD thy God will bless thee, as He promised thee; and thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and thou shalt rule over many nations, but they shall not rule over thee. ¶ 7. If there be among you a needy man, one of thy brethren, within any of thy gates, in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hand from thy needy brother; 8. but thou shalt surely open thy hand unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his

for their cancellation. Consequently in the first century of the present era, Hillel instituted a method whereby the operation of the year of release did not affect debts that had been delivered to the Court before the intervention of the year of release. Without actually handing over the bond or promissory note to the Court, the creditor could secure his debt against forfeiture by appearing before the Beth Din, and making the declaration, 'I announce unto you, judges of this Court, that I shall collect any debt which I may have outstanding with N.N., whenever I desire.' This institution was known as Prosbul. brother. i.e. fellow-Israelite.

the LORD'S release . . . proclaimed. Better, a release hath been proclaimed unto the LORD; i.e. in His honour, as the bestower of all wealth and increase (Ibn Ezra).

3. a foreigner. Heb. nochri; to be distinguished from the ger (x, 19). The 'foreigner' merely visits Canaan temporarily, for trade. He is not, like the Israelite (Exod. xxiii, 10 f), under the obligation of surrendering the produce of his land every seventh year; there is, therefore, no reason in his case for any relaxation of his creditor's claims (Driver). It should be noted that the Torah does not declare that the creditor must exact payment; he may do so, if he wish.

thy hand shall release. lit. 'let thy hand release.' The Rabbis understood this to mean that payment could not be claimed; but if the debtor voluntarily offered it, it may be accepted.

4. needy among you. This expresses an ideal which would only be realized if the condition of obedience in v. 5 were fulfilled. There is thus no contradiction with the statement in v. 11, 'the poor shall never cease out of the land.'

6. as He promised thee. See vii, 13; Exod. xxiii, 25; Lev. xxvi, 3 f.

thou shalt lend. This is, like v. 4 above, a conditional promise that was as unlikely to become actual as the ideal of 'there shall be no poor with thee'. The Israelites began to engage in commerce in the days of King Solomon. Isa. ii, 7 and Hos. xii, 8 testify to considerable foreign trade in the long reigns of Uzziah and Jeroboam II. Of later times, the Greek geographer Strabo writes: 'These Jews have penetrated to every city, and it would not be easy to find a single place in the inhabited world which has not received this race, and where it has not become master.' Through no fault of their own, Jews were divorced from agriculture and confined to commerce for over 1,500 years. However, commerce is not their native bent, as is evidenced by the fact that, in recent generations, leadership has almost everywhere been wrested from them by the non-Jewish newcomers in industrial and financial enterprise; see p. 814.

7-11. The Israelite is warned against letting the approach of the Year of Release hinder him from helping his needy brother.

7. within any of thy gates. i.e. in one of thy cities (cf. xii, 12); and the Sifri bases therein the rule, 'The poor of thine own city should be helped before those of another city' in thy land. The Sifri similarly explains that one must assist the poor in the Holy Land before helping an Israelite who dwelt outside Palestine.

need in that which he wanteth. 9. Beware that there be not a base thought in thy heart, saying: 'The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand'; and thine eye be evil against thy needy brother, and thou give him nought; and he cry unto the LORD against thee, and it be sin in thee. 10. Thou shalt surely give him, and thy heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him; because that for this thing the LORD thy God will bless thee in all thy work, and in all that thou puttest thy hand unto. 11. For the poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee, saying: 'Thou shalt surely open thy hand unto thy poor and needy brother, in thy land.' ¶ 12. If thy brother, a Hebrew man, or a Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, he shall serve thee six years; and in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee. 13. And when thou lettest him go free from thee, thou shalt not let him go empty; 14. thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy threshing-floor, and out of thy winepress; of that where-with the LORD thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give unto him. 15. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee; therefore I command thee this thing to-day. 16. And it shall be, if he say unto thee: 'I will not go out from he cry unto the LORD. God hears the cry of those who are hardly treated; cf. Exod. xxii, 22.

10. thy heart shall not be grieved. i.e. the loan must not be made in a grudging spirit; cf. Prov. xix, 17, 'He that is gracious unto the poor lendeth unto the LORD, and his good deed will He repay unto him.'

11. for the poor shall never cease. See on v. 4 above.

12-18. THE RELEASE OF SLAVES

A man's misfortune may be so overwhelming that he could not save himself by a loan. To avoid destitution, a Hebrew might sell himself temporarily; i.e. become a member of another's household, and earn his food and shelter by his labour. The 'slavery' of the Bible was in no way identical with what was understood by that term in Greece or Rome. The master had many obligations towards the bondman, and the infliction of bodily injury by the master secured the bondman his immediate freedom; see p. 537.

In the seventh year of service the bondman goes free, and his master is required at the time of the emancipation liberally to supply the new freedman with an equipment that shall enable him to begin life again with some confidence for the future. This provision is characteristic of the humaneness and philanthropy of the Torah in regard to the bondman.

12. Hebrew woman. This is an addition to the law as stated in Exod. xxi, 1-6, and decrees that the same treatment is to be meted out to a man and woman. Exod. xxi, 7 f refers to a different set of circumstances.

be sold. The Heb. could also mean 'sell himself'. According to the Talmud, Scripture here speaks of the case where a person is sold by the court of law because he had committed a burglary and could not repay what he had stolen; Exod. xxii, 2.

14. liberally. The compliance with this command must be more than sour obedience of the letter of the law.

out of thy flock . . . winepress. The freed slave is thus to be helped to make a fresh start in life. This principle (העזקה) has become part of Jewish social ethics.

15. land of Egypt. Let him remember that he owes his own freedom to the Divine grace; cf. xvi, 12.

16. I will not go out. On this and the following verse, see on Exod. xxi, 5 f.

thee'; because he loveth thee and thy house, because he fareth well with thee; 17. then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear and into the door, and he shall be thy bondman for ever. And also unto thy bondwoman thou shalt do likewise. 18. It shall not seem hard unto thee, when thou lettest him go free from thee; for to the double of the hire of a hireling hath he served thee six years; and the LORD thy God will bless thee in all that thou doest. *vii. ¶ 19. All the firstling males that are born of thy herd and of thy flock thou shalt sanctify unto the LORD thy God; thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox, nor shear the firstling of thy flock. 20. Thou shalt eat it before the LORD thy God year by year in the place which the LORD shall choose, thou and thy household. 21. And if there be any blemish therein, lameness, or blindness, any ill blemish whatsoever, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the LORD thy God. 22. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates; the unclean and the clean may eat it alike, as the gazelle, and as the hart. 23. Only thou shalt not eat the blood thereof; thou shalt pour it out upon the ground as water.

17. also unto thy bondwoman. The comment of the Sifri is: 'This refers back to the injunction, thou shalt furnish him liberally (v. 14). Thou mightest say it refers to "thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through the ear"; therefore the Torah states "and it shall be, if he say unto thee"; he, not she.' Accordingly, the female slave had to leave in the seventh year, and was not subjected to the rule of having the ear bored.

18. for to the double. The master gets double value out of a slave of this kind as compared with a hireling, i.e. a day-labourer; the slave being a member of the household, the master could get work done by him at night as well as by day.

19-23. OF FIRSTLINGS

This paragraph, dealing with the firstlings of the cattle, should have followed on xiv, 22-29, the law of the tithe. But the last verses, which mentioned the 'poor tithe', suggested the subject of the treatment of the poor, which has occupied this chapter up to this point.

19. all the firstling males. For the idea of consecrating the firstborn, see on Exod. xiii, 2.

20. year by year. i.e. the offering must not be delayed beyond a year. This is not at variance with what was stated in Exod. xxii, 29 'on the eighth day thou shalt give it Me', for the Mechilta explains that to mean, from the eighth day onwards; cf. Lev. xxii, 27.

21. be any blemish. The law of the firstlings is also dealt with in Lev. xxvii, 26, where it is forbidden to sanctify the firstling by using it as an offering for any other purpose. Also in Num. xviii, 17 f, where the flesh of the firstlings is declared to be the priest's. The words, 'Thou shalt eat it before the LORD,' in this section refer to the person who is entitled to eat it; i.e. the priest, as is prescribed in Numbers. As Deut. is a continuation of the preceding Books of the Pentateuch, it was obvious to Moses' hearers who it was that were to eat the firstling, since it had already been ordained and well understood (Hoffmann).

CHAPTER XVI

(e) THE THREE PILGRIMAGE FESTIVALS

The law concerning the three annual pilgrimages to the Temple has already been given in Exod. xxiii, 14 f; xxxiv, 18 f; Lev. xxiii, 4 f; and Num. xxviii, 16 f. What distinguishes the statement of the law in Deut. is the emphasis upon the Central Sanctuary, at which all Israel must gather on these Festivals. These Pilgrimage-Feasts had a double signification. They each had reference to a historical event of national importance, but they also marked the three seasons of the agricultural year. 'It is well to keep in view the agricultural aspect of the Three Festivals. It helps us to realize the fact that Israel was once an agricultural people and that its commercial character is not, as is commonly

1-8. THE PASSOVER

by night. In Num. xxxiii, 3 it is mentioned, 'on the morrow after the passover, the children of Israel went out.' The deliverance took place during the night (Exod. xii, 31), though the Exodus itself did not begin until the break of the day following the Passover-offering.

2. and thou shalt sacrifice. As a token of gratitude for God's mercies.

of the flock and the herd. In Exod. xii, 3 f it is ordained that a lamb was to be used as the Paschal offering; but that restriction was for that special occasion only, not for the perennial observance to be carried out in the Temple. Another explanation is that the lamb was for the Paschal sacrifice, and the ox for the Festival-sacrifice (חגיגה). This is confirmed by what is narrated in II Chron. xxxv, 7 f. In v. 13 of that chapter, it is stated that the lambs, which were the Passover-offering, 'they roasted with fire according to the ordinance'; and the oxen, which were 'the holy offerings', were boiled—this being forbidden with the Paschal sacrifice, but allowed with the Festival-sacrifice.

3. with it. i.e. with the Paschal offering.

leaven is treated as conditioned by the sacrifice of the Passover immediately preceding, and regulated by the same principle established in the first instance for the Passover.

the bread of affliction. So called because the bread was prepared while the people were in a state of stress and hardship, consequent upon their hasty departure from Egypt (Exod. xii, 34, 39). There is, of course, an obvious association of ideas with servitude in Egypt.

in haste. That alone would make it impossible for the Israelites to think that they had gained their liberty by the might of their hand.

And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose; and thou shalt tarry in the morning, and go unto thy tents. 8. Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread; and on the seventh day shall be a solemn assembly to the LORD thy God; thou shalt do no work therein. ¶ 9. Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee; from the time the sickle is first put to the standing corn shalt thou begin to number seven weeks. 10. And thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the LORD thy God after the measure of the freewill-offering of thy hand, which thou shalt give, according as the LORD thy God blesseth thee. 11. And thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy manservant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are in the midst of thee, in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to cause His name to dwell there. 12. go unto thy tents. i.e. return home; or, to the temporary dwellings of the pilgrims in Jerusalem (Ehrlich).

8. six days. In v. 3 and Exod. xiii, 6 f, the command is to eat unleavened bread for seven days. There are several methods of reconciling the two statements. The most obvious is to connect v. 8 with what immediately precedes. After leaving the Holy City, unleavened bread is to be eaten for six more days. The Rabbis deduce from the passages that the eating of unleavened bread is obligatory on the first day of the Festival only; on the six other days, the Israelite may not eat that which is leavened, but he is not compelled to eat unleavened bread. He would not contravene the law if, e.g., he subsisted on fruit.

on the seventh day. Of the Passover Festival.

Passover is the greatest of all the historical festivals, at once the starting-point of Israel's national life and a well-spring of its religious ideas. In the Biblical age, we find the Passover celebrated with especial solemnity at important epochs in the national life; such as the religious revivals which marked the reign of pious kings, like Hezekiah, II Chron. xxx, and Josiah, II Chron. xxxv.

9-12. THE FEAST OF WEEKS

9. from the time the sickle. See on Lev. xxiii, 15.

10. the feast of weeks. Heb. Shavuot. In Exod. xxiii, 16 it is called 'the feast of harvest', and in Num. xxviii, 26 'the day of the first-fruits', alluding to its agricultural aspect. In the Liturgy it is described as זמן מתן תורתנו 'the Season of the Giving of our Torah', viz. the Revelation at Sinai. It is thus both a nature and a historical festival; see pp. 318 and 521.

freewill-offering. i.e. with a gift adequate to the ability of the offerer. On Passover, the Israelite's offering was prescribed; but on the Feast of Weeks, each pilgrim offered what he felt disposed to give.

11. thou shalt rejoice. Cf. xii, 12, xiv, 29. 'It is a man's duty to be joyful and glad at heart on the festivals, he and his wife and his children and those dependent upon him. Make the children happy by giving them sweets and nuts; and the womenfolk by buying them frocks and jewellery according to your means. It is also a duty to give food to the hungry, to the fatherless, and to the widow, as well as to other poor people' (Shulchan Aruch).

12. a bondman in Egypt. 'It was with the view that thou shouldest do these statutes, that I redeemed thee from Egypt' (Rashi).

Unlike Passover and Tabernacles, the Feast of Weeks has no distinctive ceremony. In many rites, the Book of Ruth, presenting a charming picture of agricultural life in ancient Palestine, is thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt; and thou shalt observe and do these statutes. *^m. ¶ 13. Thou shalt keep the feast of tabernacles seven days, after that thou hast gathered in from thy threshing-floor and from thy winepress. 14. And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates. 15. Seven days shalt thou keep a feast unto the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD shall choose; because the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thine increase, and in all the work of thy hands, and thou shalt be altogether joyful. 16. Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the LORD thy God in the place which He shall choose: on the feast of unleavened bread, and on the feast of read. In many congregations it is also customary to spend the first night of Shavuot in reading selections from the Torah and the Prophets, as well as from Rabbinic literature. The special book of service for this purpose is known as Tikkun leyl Shavuot. A more universal custom is to decorate the synagogues with flowers and plants on this Festival; see p. 521. On Shavuot, the Jewish child was first initiated into the study of the Jewish religion and the Hebrew Language.

13-15. FEAST OF TABERNACLES

13. feast of tabernacles. The name is explained in Lev. xxiii, 42. It is called 'Feast of Ingathering' in Exod. xxiii, 16, xxxiv, 22.

tabernacle. is here used in the sense given by Dr. Johnson, 'casual dwelling.'

15. seven days. It is noteworthy that the Torah does not add here the observance of Shemini Atzeres, the eighth day of solemn assembly, as in Lev. xxiii, 36. But it is evident that this chapter does not aim at giving a list of all the special days, and that is why there is no mention here of the New Year and Day of Atonement. Its purpose is to describe the three occasions in the year when the Israelite must make a pilgrimage to the Temple (see the summary in the next v.). The reason for the omission of Shemini Atzeres is perhaps to be sought in the fact that it was considered 'a separate Festival' שְׁמִינִי רֵגֶל בְּפָנָי עֲצֻמוֹ, and the Israelite was not commanded to make the pilgrimage specially for this eighth day. Being in the Holy City for Tabernacles, he remains there until after Atzeres.

altogether joyful. Since this Festival marked the reaping of the fruits of the year's toil, it was an occasion of great rejoicing. It is sometimes referred to as 'the Festival', par excellence.

'Joyous worship has always been the keynote of the festival of Tabernacles. In Temple days, the priests, with Lulav and Ethrog, went round the Altar in procession to the sound of the Shofar, chanting, 'Save now, I beseech thee, O LORD: O LORD, I beseech thee, send now prosperity' (Ps. cxviii, 25). The ceremony which appears to have aroused the greatest enthusiasm was the Drawing of water. The Mishnah tells us, 'He that hath not beheld the joy of the Drawing of water hath never seen joy in his life.' There were torch dances by men of piety and renown, and songs and hymns by Levites and people to the accompaniment of flutes, harps, and cymbals.

'The latest feature in the development of the Festival is the festive character given to the last day (Simchas Torah), as marking the occasion of the completion and recommencement of the reading of the Law. In the Middle Ages, it became customary to take all the Scrolls from the Ark and to bear them in procession round the Synagogue. Anxious as Jewish parents have always been to stimulate their children's love and interest in their religion, they made it essentially a Children's festival. In some synagogues, children were called to the reading of the Law. Fruits and sweets were distributed amongst them.

'And thus, in ever-changing surroundings, the note of joy in the festival of Tabernacles can be heard through all the centuries; now as the rejoicing over the harvest, now as the joy of Temple-worship, and now again in triumphant homage to the Law, Israel's inalienable birth-right, "whence with joy he draws water out of the wells of salvation"' (H. M. Adler).

16. three times in a year. This v. occurs substantially in Exod. xxiii, 14-17 and xxxiv, 23. empty. i.e. without offerings.

CHAPTER LIV

CAP. LIV. נד

11. O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest,
And not comforted,
Behold, I will set thy stones in fair colours,
And lay thy foundations with sapphires.
12. And I will make thy pinnacles of rubies,
And thy gates of carbuncles,
And all thy border of precious stones.
13. And all thy children shall be taught of the LORD;
And great shall be the peace of thy children.
14. In righteousness shalt thou be established;
Be thou far from oppression, for thou shalt not fear,
And from ruin, for it shall not come near thee.
15. Behold, they may gather together, but not by Me;
Whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall because of thee.

נד. '16. v. הנה ק'

This is the third of the Haftorahs of Consolation. Its central promise is: 'No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn.' The fulfilment of this promise is dependent on Israel's right choice in regard to the Two Ways, 'Behold I set before you this day a blessing and a curse,' with which the Sidrah opens.

11-17. OUTER AND INNER SPLENDOR OF ZION

13. all thy children shall be taught of the LORD. Or, 'all thy children shall be disciples of the LORD.' Zion's peace will be based not on armed force, but on the God-fearing lives of all its inhabitants. In some ancient manuscripts the second word for 'thy children' (hanayich) in this verse was read as bonayich, 'thy builders.' This proclaims a wonderful truth: the children of a nation are the builders of its future. And every Jewish child must be reared to become such a builder of his People's better future. This verse ('All thy children shall be taught of the LORD') is an important landmark in the history of civilization. In obedience to it, Israel led the way in universal education. Thus, in his History of the World, H. G. Wells records: 'The Jewish religion, because it was a literature-sustained religion, led to the first efforts to provide elementary instruction for all the children of the community.'

14. be thou far from oppression. Be steadfast in righteousness, and panic ('terror') shall not touch thee.

15. not by Me. All those who now stir up strife with thee shall shatter themselves against thee.

17. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper;
And every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn.
This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD,
And their due reward from Me, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER LV. THE RETURN TO ZION SHOULD ALSO BE A RETURN TO GOD

1. A call to rich and poor alike to participate in the blessings of the new era, by coming to the Source whence the knowledge of duty springs—the word of God. The cry is like that of the water-carrier in Eastern cities, and blessings are expressed in Oriental imagery, in terms of quickening water, nourishing milk, and gladdening wine. 'One cannot fail to perceive the note of wistfulness in the appeal, suggestive of the dread of an unspeakable disappointment' (Elmslie-Skinner).

(CHAPTERS XVI, 18–XXI, 9)

(2) GOVERNMENT OF THE PEOPLE
(CHAPTERS XVI, 18–XVIII)

This section defines the status of judges, the king, the priests and prophets—all of them officers of the Hebrew commonwealth.

(a) JUDGES AND JUSTICE

18–20. Provision is to be made for an ordered civil government. Justice must be free, accessible, and absolutely impartial; cf. II Chronicles XIX, 5–11.

18. judges. Local lay magistrates.

with righteous judgment. The judges must be both competent and impartial, and are not to be appointed for social or family reasons; see I, 13.

19. thou. These commands are in the singular, as though they were an exhortation to each judge individually (Ibn Ezra).

wrest. Pervert; cf. Exod. xxiii, 6.

respect persons. The Heb. idiom for 'showing partiality'; cf. Lev. xix, 15. Absolute fairness must be shown in the order of the hearing of the cases, whether the case involve a small sum or a large sum, whether the litigant be rich or poor. The Rabbis, however, ruled that an exception be made in the suit of an orphan, whose case must always be heard first; next in order, that of a widow; furthermore, that a woman's cause must be heard before that of a man. The judge is to give everyone a patient and courteous hearing. He is warned against yielding to the subtle temptation of giving an unjust judgment out of pity to the poor. 'The judge shall not say, "This man is poor and his opponent is rich, and it is the duty of the latter to help him in his need. I shall therefore decide against the rich man, and thereby cause the poor man to be helped without the taint of almsgiving." Nor shall the judge say, "How can I put this rich man to shame in public, on account of a paltry sum? I shall acquit him now, but shall tell him afterwards to make good the amount" ' (Talmud); see on Exod. xxiii, 3.

a gift. A bribe. The acceptance of any gift by a judge is forbidden; see xxvii, 25. In the East, that judge was regarded as still a just judge who took gifts only from the party in the right. But judicial venality is not unknown in Western lands. The absolutely honest intention to accord justice to all is, even in England, only a recent attainment.

blind the eyes. To the facts of the case and their true bearings; and the judge will find it impossible not to seek to justify the giver of the bribe (Talmud).

words of the righteous. Of men who otherwise would be righteous. Some translate 'cause' instead of words; in that case, righteous means, 'those who are in the right,' the innocent.

JUSTICE, JUSTICE SHALT THOU FOLLOW

20. justice, justice. Or 'that which is altogether just'; or, 'justice, and only justice.' Heb. צדק צדק תרדף. The duplication of the word 'justice' brings out with the greatest possible emphasis the supreme duty of even-handed justice to all. 'Justice, whether to your profit or loss, whether in word or in action, whether to Jew or non-Jew' (Bachya ben Asher). A Chassidic rabbi explained this insistence on 'justice, and only justice' to imply, 'Do not use unjust means to secure the victory of justice'—a deep saying. Man is slow to realize that justice is strong enough, Divine enough, to triumph without itself resorting to injustice. In the eyes of the Prophets, justice was a Divine, irresistible force. Isaiah, for example, uses only one word (צדקה) to designate both 'justice' and 'victory' (i.e. the triumph of right in the world); see p. 819.

Justice, justice shalt thou follow. These passionate words may be taken as the keynote of the humane legislation of the Torah, and of the demand for social righteousness by Israel's Prophets, Psalmists and Sages. 'Let justice land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

¶ 21. Thou shalt not plant thee an Asherah of any kind of tree beside the altar of the LORD thy God, which thou shalt make thee.

תִּרְדֹּף לִמְעַן תִּתִּיב וַיִּרְשֶׁת אֶת־דָּאָרְץ אֲשֶׁר־הָיָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ
21 נָתַן לָךְ: ׀ לֹא־תִטֵּעַ לָךְ אֲשֶׁרָה כָּל־עֵץ אֲצֵל מִזְבֵּחַ roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream,' is the cry of Amos. Justice is not the only ethical quality in God or man, nor is it the highest quality; but it is the basis for all the others. 'Righteousness and justice are the foundations of Thy throne,' says the Psalmist: the whole idea of the Divine rests on them.

It must be noted that the idea of justice in Hebrew thought stands for something quite other than in Greek. In Plato's Republic, for example, it implies a harmonious arrangement of society, by which every human peg is put into its appropriate hole, so that those who perform humble functions shall be content to perform them in due subservience to their superiors. It stresses the inequalities of human nature; whereas in the Hebrew conception of justice, the equality is stressed. To understand the idea of justice in Israel we must bear in mind the Biblical teaching that man is created in the image of God; that in every human being there is a Divine spark; and that each human life is sacred, and of infinite worth. In consequence, a human being cannot be treated as a chattel, or a thing, but must be treated as a personality; and, as a personality, every human being is the possessor of the right to life, honour, and the fruits of his labour. Justice is the awe-inspired respect for the personality of others, and their inalienable rights; even as injustice is the most flagrant manifestation of disrespect for the personality of others (F. Adler). Judaism requires that human personality be respected in every human being—in the female heathen prisoner of war, in the delinquent, even in the criminal condemned to death. The lashes to be inflicted on the evil-doer must be strictly limited, lest 'thy brother seem vile unto thee' (xxv, 3); and, if he be found worthy of death by hanging, his human dignity must still be respected: his body is not to remain hanging over night, but must be buried the same day (xxi, 23).

It is thus seen that whereas in Greek the idea of justice was akin to harmony, in Hebrew it is akin to holiness. Isaiah (v, 16) has for all time declared הָאֵל הַקָּדוֹשׁ נִקְדָּשׁ בַּצְדָּקָה, 'The Holy God is sanctified by justice.' In brief, where there is no justice, no proper and practical appreciation of the human rights of every human being as sons of the one and only God of righteousness—there we have a negation of religion. The oppressor, the man who tramples on others, and especially on those like the orphan and the stranger who are too weak to defend themselves, is throughout Scripture held forth as the enemy of God and man. The final disappearance of injustice and oppression is represented in the New Year Amidah as the goal of human history, and as synonymous with the realization of God's Kingdom on earth, וְכָל הַרְשָׁעָה כַּעֲשֵׂן תִּכְלֶה כִּי תַעֲבִיר מִמַּשְׁלַת זֶדֶן מִן הָאָרֶץ.

However, justice is more than mere abstention from injuring our fellow-men. 'The work of justice is peace; and the effect thereof quietness and confidence forever' (Isa. xxxii, 17). It is a positive conception, and includes charity, philanthropy, and every endeavour to bring out what is highest and best in others. Just as 'truth' is usually preceded in Scripture by 'loving-kindness' (חֶסֶד וְאֱמֶת), to remind us that the truth must be spoken in love; even so is 'justice' often accompanied by some synonym of 'lovingkindness' (חֶסֶד)—to teach that strict justice must, in its execution, be mitigated by pity and humanity. 'To do justly and to love mercy,' is the Prophet's summing up of human duty towards our fellow-men. The world could not exist if it were governed by strict justice alone (מִדַּת הַדִּין)—say the Rabbis; therefore, God judges His human children by justice tempered with mercy (מִדַּת הַרַחֲמִים). Such being the Jewish understanding of justice (צְדָקָה), it is but natural that in later Hebrew that same word came to denote 'charity' exclusively.

Nor is justice limited to the relation between individuals. It extends to the relation between group and group, and it asserts the claims of the poor upon the rich, of the helpless upon them who possess the means to help. And even as there is social justice, prescribing the duties of class to class, so there is international justice, which demands respect for the personality of each and every national group, and proclaims that no people can of right be robbed of its national life or territory, its language or spiritual heritage. It is this wider recognition of justice that has called into existence the League of Nations. 'I do not know whether you are aware that the League of Nations was first of all the vision of a great Jew almost 3,000 years ago,—the prophet Isaiah' (J. C. Smuts); see Isa. ii, 1-4.

'The world owes its conception of justice to the Jew,' says an American jurist. 'God gave him to see, through the things that are ever changing, the things that never change. Compared with the meaning and majesty of this achievement, every other triumph of every other people sinks into insignificance.'

thou mayest live. The pure administration of justice is thus one of the conditions of Israel's existence as a nation. Our teachers, from the first of them to the last, brand the perversion of the course of justice as the most alarming sign of national decay.

XVI, 21-XVII, 7. AGAINST IDOLATROUS WORSHIP

Idolatry may well be included among laws dealing with government and justice. The Jewish State, as a theocracy, was based on loyalty to God, and idolatry was regarded as high treason. There is a close connection between the commands concerning judges and idolatrous worship: 'He who appoints a judge who is unfit for his office, is as if he were to build an Asherah; a centre of heathen worship' (Talmud).

which the LORD thy God hateth. These additional words distinguish the heathen pillars from the innocent pillars mentioned in Gen. xxviii, 18; xxxv, 14 (Ibn Ezra, Dillmann).

CHAPTER XVII

1. The sacrificing of blemished or injured animals (xv, 21; Lev. xxii, 20-22) is a profanation of the service of God; Malachi i, 8, see p. 103.

2-7. DETECTING AND PUNISHMENT OF IDOLATRY

3. which I have commanded not. i.e. which I have not permitted you to worship.

4. it be told thee . . . the thing certain. The judges were not to act on mere report, but must institute a process of searching inquiry; see xiii, 15.

6. two . . . witnesses. Whose validity as witnesses is unimpeachable, and who must agree in their testimony, if the sentence is to be carried out. There was no torture of the accused to compel confession, or to exact the testimony desired by the Court, such as there was in Greece and in the trials of the Inquisition. A leading principle of Jewish law is, No man can by his own testimony incriminate himself in a capital charge (אין אדם משים עצמו רשע).

7. shall be first. On the convicting witnesses rests the duty of being first to inflict the extreme penalty with their own hands; so they would feel more seriously the responsibility of their testimony.

8-13. THE SUPREME COURT

Not a Court of Appeal, but a High Court at the Central Sanctuary for cases too hard for the local courts. Such a Court is mentioned in and between stroke and stroke, even matters of controversy within thy gates; then shalt thou arise, and get thee up unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose. 9. And thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days; and thou shalt inquire; and they shall declare unto thee the sentence of judgment. 10. And thou shalt do according to the tenor of the sentence, which they shall declare unto thee from that place which the LORD shall choose; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they shall teach thee. 11. According to the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do; thou shalt not turn aside from the sentence which they shall declare unto thee, to the right hand, nor to the left. 12. And the man that doeth presumptuously, in not hearkening unto the priest that standeth to minister there before the LORD thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die; and thou shalt exterminate the evil from Israel. 13. And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously. *ii. ¶ 14. When thou art come unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein; and shalt say: 'I will set a king over me, like all the nations that are round about me';

10. v. חצי חספר במסוקים

II Chronicles XIX, 8 f. Jewish Tradition—both Talmud and Josephus—attests to the continued existence of such a Court from the days of Moses to the destruction of the Jewish State, and beyond. In the first century of the present era, the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem made the laws and acted as Court of Appeal. It consisted of 70 members in addition to the presiding officer, who was generally the High Priest. In the Provincial towns, there were smaller Sanhedrins of twenty-three members.

11. not turn aside. 'Even if in your eyes they seem to tell you that right is left, and left is right, hearken unto them' (Sifri).

12. the man that doeth presumptuously. The decisions of this Court must be strictly obeyed. Refusal to do so would, in a theocracy, be tantamount to revolt against the Constitution, and involve capital punishment for the offender. Tradition explains this v. to refer to a judge (זקן ממרה) who defies the ruling of the Supreme Court.

the priest. The ecclesiastical president of the tribunal.

(b) THE KING

14-20. These verses define the selection, the qualifications, and the duties of the king. It is legitimate to have a king, but he must be a native Israelite and be a constitutional monarch who governs in accordance with the Torah. He was to have no standing cavalry to keep his people in subjection, nor establish a harem; and he was himself to study and obey the laws of the realm.

15. thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the LORD thy God shall choose; one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee; thou mayest not put a foreigner over thee, who is not thy brother. 16. Only he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses; forasmuch as the LORD hath said unto you: 'Ye shall henceforth return no more that way.' 17. Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away; neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. 18. And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book, out of that which foreigner. In the latter days of the Second Temple, the Romans made Herod and his kinsmen—who were of Edomite descent—kings of Judea. When one of these Herodian kings, Agrippa I, read this v. in the Court of the Temple at the close of a Year of Release, 'he burst into tears, deeming himself unworthy of kingship on account of his alien ancestry; whereupon the people reassured him with the words, "Thou art our brother, thou art our brother"' (Talmud).

16. not multiply horses. For war. He was not to cherish military ambitions. 'The early kings possessed horses in direct proportion to the strength of their military establishments; and the mark of their strength was the number of their horses' (Radin).

to the end . . . horses. 'Several of the Hebrew kings,' said a German Professor some years ago, 'seem to have plied a considerable trade in horses'—a remark that was greeted with ironic applause by his students. The Professor continued, however, 'This trade, though not very honourable for kings, is not quite as dishonourable as the trade in human beings that was carried on by German princes during the eighteenth century, in the sale of their subjects as mercenaries in foreign wars.' See also I Kings x, 28.

silver and gold. This warning is necessary in order to protect the people against exploitation by a despotic monarch.

18. a copy of this law. Heb. משנה התורה הזאת; lit. 'a repetition of this law,' wrongly understood by the Septuagint to refer to the whole of the Fifth Book of Moses, and therefore they called it Deuteronomy, 'the Second Law.' According to the Talmud, the king possessed two copies of the Torah; one in his private treasure, and one which he carried about with him. At the crowning of a British monarch, the Bible is delivered to him with the words, 'We present you with this Book, the most valuable thing the world affords. Here is wisdom; this is the royal law; these are the lively (i.e. living) oracles of God'; cf. II Chron. xxiii, 11.

and these statutes. Or, 'and especially these statutes' (Koenig). Whenever a king in Israel threw off the yoke of the Torah and disregarded its precepts of righteousness, then the evils of despotic Oriental rule made their appearance unchecked. Cruelty, callous indifference to the welfare of the weaker and poorer classes, avarice, corruption, and disorder in all public affairs were rampant; and these are precisely the sins which the true prophets of Israel were continually denouncing (Harper).

And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life; that he may learn to fear the LORD his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them; 20. that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left; to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he and his children, in the midst of Israel. *iii.

CHAPTER XVIII

(c) PRIESTS AND LEVITES

1-8. The priests and Levites were not to possess any allotments of land. The history of the European peoples would have been a happier one than it has been, if the priesthood had been debarred from ownership of land.

1. the priests the Levites. See on x, 9.

the offerings of the LORD. These were (a) the burnt-offering; (b) the meal-offering; (c) the thank-offering; and (d) the trespass-offering. Certain specific parts in all of these sacrifices belonged to the priests.

His inheritance. God's inheritance; i.e. what was appropriated to Him, and from Him to the tribe of Levi; such as heave-offerings, tithes and first-fruits.

2. as He hath spoken unto them. See Numbers xviii, 20.

3. priests' due. The reference is here to further 'dues' not previously mentioned in Numbers; viz., those which accrued from the animals slaughtered for ordinary consumption, as distinguished from those brought as sacrifices.

6. if a Levite come. Only a portion of the tribe of Levites would live in Jerusalem. Most of them would be scattered among the tribes. Unlike the non-Levites living on the land in their own clan, these Levites had necessarily no fixed abode; cf. Judges xvii, 7-9, xix; 1 Sam. ii, 36. The officiating priests would tend to close their ranks against the wandering priests. It is here enacted that should any of these latter come to the Central Sanctuary, he should be allowed to minister and share in the priestly emoluments.

place which the LORD shall choose; 7. then he shall minister in the name of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, who stand there before the LORD. 8. They shall have like portions to eat, beside that which is his due according to the fathers' houses. ¶ 9. When thou art come into the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. 10. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, one that useth divination, a soothsayer, or an enchanter, beside . . . fathers' houses. lit. 'besides his sellings according to the fathers'. This refers to the proceeds of the sale of his local possessions, which a Levite inherited from his ancestors (Lev. xxv, 33), or of private dues accruing to him. If a Levite had such extra income, his brother-Levites were not permitted to say to him, 'You have enough, you must not expect or accept any priestly emoluments!' He still has his right to share alike with the others.

Modern writers seldom do justice to the priesthood. They exalt the prophet, and almost invariably depreciate the priest. It is true that 'the centre of gravity in religion lies for the priest elsewhere than for the prophet; it lies in man's attitude, not toward his fellow men, but toward God; not in his social, but in his personal life' (Kuenen). To the priest, man is more than a social being; he has also an individual life of his own, his joys and sorrows, his historical claims, his traditions of the past, and his hopes for the future; and all these are brought by the priest under the influence of religion, to become sanctified through their relation with God. All the details of human life are with the priest so many opportunities for the worship of God (Schechter).

The priest's indispensable function was to conserve the spiritual discoveries of the past by means of religious institutions. He gave the daily bread of religion to the people, treasured up whatever had been gained, and kept the people nurtured on it and admonished by it. To picture the priest as exalting external observance at the expense of moral values is a controversial fiction. Though Malachi had much to complain of the priests of his day, his estimate of what Levi had been in the past is no exaggeration. 'The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity.' See further the note at the end of the chapter.

(d) PROPHETS

9-22. The description of the place of the prophet in Israel is preceded by a stern and detailed denunciation of any dealings with soothsayers and wizards—a restatement of the injunction in Lev. xix, 26, 31. The people may naturally desire to know the future or to learn the Divine mind; and they will be living among nations who hold that the will of the gods was best learned through augury and sorcery. But Israel does not need such means of obtaining Divine guidance. 'Alone in the antique world, Israel has the high honour of having broken with this entire system of approaching the Divine' (Welch). Its communion with the spiritual world was through a spiritual channel—that of the prophet. As it is said in Num. xxiii, 23, 'There is no enchantment in Jacob, neither is there any divination in Israel: at the right time it is said to him what God doeth.'

The problem of sorcery confronts every administrator of primitive races. 'Attempts to advance them to a higher life in our own day are being rendered futile by the sorcerer; at his instigation the darkest crimes are committed. To what depths of wickedness his practices can bring men is seen in the horrors of the secret cult of the negroes of Haiti' (Harper).

10. pass through the fire. Human sacrifice was an essential part of Moloch worship.

divination. This is the most general term for the magical practices that follow. A Gold Coast official recently complained that the numbing effect of omen-taking and consultation with soothsayers had not hitherto received the attention it deserved.

Thou shalt be whole-hearted with the LORD thy God.*v. 14. For these nations, that thou art to dispossess, hearken unto soothsayers, and unto diviners; but as for thee, the LORD thy God hath not suffered thee so to do. 15. A prophet will the LORD thy God raise up unto thee, from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken; 16. according to all that thou didst desire of the LORD thy God in Horeb in the day of the assembly, saying: 'Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not.' 17. And the LORD said unto me: 'They have well said that which they have spoken. 18. I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee; and I will put My words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. 19. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto My words one that consulteth a ghost. Heb. ob. Saul, desirous of speaking to Samuel on the night before the fateful battle of Gilboa (1 Sam. xxviii, 7), said unto his servants, 'Seek me a woman that divineth by a ghost'. From Isaiah viii, 19 it would seem that the ob was a kind of ventriloquist who impersonated the dead by speaking in a faint voice from the ground.

or a familiar spirit. Heb. ידעני. Coming from the root ידע ('know') it would seem to correspond to the English word wizard, which originally meant 'wise or knowing one', without any hint of sorcery or evil.

necromancer. An inquirer of the dead. 'In the Hebrew religion the spiritual part of man was conceived not as ghostly, but under the attribute of holy. It is a significant fact that stories of ghosts or apparitions are almost absent from the Old Testament; and necromancy, which attempts to come into communication with the dead, that is, to deal with ghosts, was especially abhorrent' (F. Adler).

13. thou shalt be whole-hearted. And not given over in part to demoniac powers, or other evil superstitions of the heathen. 'Walk with Him whole-heartedly and hope in Him. Pry not into the veiled future, but accept whatever lot befalls you. Then will you be His people and His portion' (Rashi).

Whole-heartedness is one of the great requirements of Religion; hence תמים is written in some texts with a large initial letter.

14. hath not suffered thee so to do. To turn to soothsayers, because God would raise up a Prophet from amongst the Israelites themselves, and thus reveal to them whatever they desired to know from God.

15. a prophet. In each generation.

16. in Horeb. Israel had refused the high honour of hearing directly the voice of God. As Moses was the intermediary at Horeb, so the Prophets shall be the intermediaries in their generation.

18. command him. The office of the Prophet is thus conceived not so much as a foreteller, but in spiritual succession to Moses as the teacher and religious guide of his age, though the gift of predicting the future, where this serves a moral purpose, cannot be denied him.

19. require. I will seek out his disobedience, and judge him for it. 'The rigorous punishment would deter anyone from coming forward as a prophet, who had not an absolute conviction of his Divine call' (Dillmann).

which he shall speak in My name, I will require it of him. 20. But the prophet, that shall speak a word presumptuously in My name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, that same prophet shall die.' 21. And if thou say in thy heart: 'How shall we know the word which the LORD hath not spoken?' 22. When a prophet speaketh in the name of the LORD, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the LORD hath not spoken; the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously, thou shalt not be afraid of him.

CHAPTER XIX

1. When the LORD thy God shall cut off the nations, whose land the LORD thy God giveth thee, and thou dost succeed them, and dwell in their cities, and in their houses; 2. thou shalt separate three cities for thee in the midst of thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it. 3. Thou

22. follow not. The test of the false prophet was the non-fulfilment of the specific prediction that he announced as the credentials of his Divine call, though signs and miracles performed by a 'prophet', are not necessarily a proof of his truth (XIII, 2, 6). 'The ultimate criterion of the true prophet is the moral character of his utterance' (Dummelow).

Even as the kingship ensured stability to national and social life, and the priesthood gave stability in religion, so the Prophetic order secured spiritual progress and averted stagnation. The Prophets are the inspired declarers of the Divine will. 'The mere foretelling of future events is the lowest stage of prophecy, and in the eyes of the great Prophets of Israel it was of quite secondary importance. Their aim was to fathom the secrets of holiness; and their striving, by means of admonition and moral suasion, to guide the peoples in the paths which lead mankind to spiritual and political well-being' (Shemtob ibn Shemtob).

The competence of the Prophet, however, is not unlimited. He too is bound by the Torah, to which he may neither add nor subtract, except as a temporary measure of extreme urgency (horaath shaah). Nor may he venture, solely in virtue of the prophetic gifts with which he is endowed, to give a ruling in matters of Law. In this respect he must yield place to the Judge, the sage in whom alone is vested the authority to interpret and to apply the sanctions of the Law according to the accepted norms of Biblical interpretation.

'There is no quarrel between prophet and priest; nor was there ever one. As guardians of the Law of God, they both cherish common ideals.

The prophets never preached the abrogation of the Law. What they did stress—and it is what the most resolute formalist can endorse word for word—was that only the heart which is right with God can find fit and proper expression in the well-ordered Temple-worship, and be brought nearer to the Eternal by ritual and ceremony. Nor did the good and genuine priest—for there were false priests as there were false prophets—ever hold that one could shelter himself behind sacrifices from the judgment of Heaven upon his moral turpitude and waywardness of conduct' (I. Epstein).

(3) CRIMINAL LAW AND WARFARE

(CHAPTERS XIX-XXI, 1-9)

(a) LAWS RELATING TO CRIME

XIX, 1-13. CITIES OF REFUGE

Three cities shall be set aside in the future territory to serve as 'sanctuary' to the manslayer; see Num. xxxv, 9-34 and Deut. iv, 41-3. In this way the immemorial custom of blood-revenge that to this day rests like a curse upon many Bedouin tribes is curbed; and the heathen conception of 'sanctuary' for the wilful murderer is abolished.

1. dost succeed. Or, 'shalt dispossess.'

3. prepare thee the way. Affording every facility to the fugitive to reach the place of refuge. According to the Talmud, a sign-post bearing the inscription, 'To the City of Refuge,' was at every cross-road, pointing out the direction in which the City of Refuge lay.

flee thither. The three Cities of Refuge should be equidistant from one another.

borders. Territory.

shalt prepare thee the way, and divide the borders of thy land, which the LORD thy God causeth thee to inherit, into three parts, that every manslayer may flee thither.

4. And this is the case of the manslayer, that shall flee thither and live: whoso killeth his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in time past; 5. as when a man goeth into the forest with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of these cities and live; 6. lest the avenger of blood pursue the manslayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and smite him mortally; whereas he was not deserving of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past. 7. Wherefore I command thee, saying: 'Thou shalt separate three cities for thee.' 8. And if the LORD thy God enlarge thy border, as He hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which He promised to give unto thy fathers—9. if thou shalt keep all this commandment to do it, which I command thee this day, to love the LORD thy God, and to walk ever in His ways—then shalt thou add three cities more for thee, beside these three; 10. that innocent blood be not shed in the midst of thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee. ¶ 11. But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die; and he flee into one of these cities; 12. then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die. 13. Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the blood of the innocent from Israel, that it may go well with thee. *vi. ¶ 14. Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set, in thine inheritance which thou shalt inherit, in the

8. enlarge thy border. If Israel comes to possess all the territory that was promised to Abraham (Gen. xv, 18), then three more Cities of Refuge should be added.

10. blood be upon thee. i.e. blood-guiltiness be upon thee. If no provision of such Cities of Refuge were made, the guilt of bloodshed would rest upon the land; see on xxi, 1-9.

11. lie in wait for him. This and the succeeding two verses provide a safeguard against the abuse of the right of sanctuary. A fair trial and acquittal is secured to the innocent slayer; but the wilful murderer cannot, as among Arab tribes, compound for his crime by payment to the kinsmen of the victim. He must die.

One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth; at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall a matter be established. 16. If an unrighteous witness rise up against any man to bear perverted witness against him; 17. then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the LORD, before the priests and the judges that shall be in those days. 18. And the judges shall inquire diligently; and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother; 19. then shall ye do unto him, as he had purposed to do unto his brother; so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee. 20. And those that remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil in the midst of thee. 21. And thine eye shall not pity: life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

14. REMOVING A LANDMARK

14. landmark. The line of stone defining the boundary of a man's field. In Deut. xxvii, 17 it is said, 'Cursed be he that removeth his neighbour's landmark' in order thereby to enlarge his own estate. Such removal was equivalent to theft. Before the introduction of land-measurement, removing landmarks was a crime more difficult to combat than to-day.

In later times, this prohibition of removing a neighbour's landmark (hassagath gevul) received an ethical extension. Thereby any unfair encroachment upon another man's honour or livelihood, any 'poaching on another man's preserves' or sphere of activity, is strictly prohibited.

they of old time. Those of a former age. Moses is here addressing future generations. Num. xxxiv gives the precise divisions of the land under the superintendence of Eleazar, Joshua and one prince out of every tribe.

15-21. PLOTTING WITNESSES

Before guilt can be established, whether in a case of manslaughter, murder, the removal of a landmark, or any other injury to life or property, it is here enacted that the testimony must come from the mouth of at least two witnesses.

Whereas, in Jewish Law, intention to commit a crime was no punishable offence, it is otherwise with plotting witnesses (עדים זוממים). In their case, intention is of the very essence of their crime, and they are to receive the punishment they had intended for the innocent victim.

The Schools differed as to their punishment, if they had succeeded in their criminal intention.

16. unrighteous witness. lit. 'a witness of violence', i.e. a witness who purposes to do harm. perverted witness. lit. 'a turning aside', i.e. rebellion against the Law of God. In xiii, 6 the same word is used in reference to the sin of idolatry.

17. both the men. Both parties must be present at the hearing of the case; see on i, 16. before the LORD. i.e. before the priests and judges, who are God's representatives in judgment. in those days. Whoever the judge of your day may be, due regard must be paid him. 'Jephthah in his generation was the equal of Samuel in his'; see on xvii, 9.

19. as he had purposed. The false witness shall suffer the penalty he had sought to bring on another, in accordance with the lex talionis, v. 21.

20. shall hear. According to the Talmud, it was customary for the court to issue the public proclamation, 'Such and such a person has been punished for being a false witness.'

21. shall not pity. Wilful murder must be punished by death; see on Exod. xxi, 12-14. life for life. See pp. 309 and 403.

1. When thou goest forth to battle against thine enemies, and seest horses, and chariots, and a people more than thou, thou shalt not be afraid of them; for the LORD thy God is with thee, who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. 2. And it shall be, when ye draw nigh unto the battle, that the priest shall approach and speak unto the people, 3. and shall say unto them: 'Hear, O Israel, ye draw nigh this day unto battle against your enemies; let not your heart faint; fear not, nor be alarmed, neither be ye affrighted at them; 4. for the LORD your God is He that goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, to save you.' 5. And the officers shall speak unto the people, saying: 'What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it. 6. And what man is there that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not used the fruit thereof? let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man use the fruit thereof. 7. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man take her.' 8. And the officers shall speak further unto the people, and they

(b) LAWS OF WARFARE

Israel is bidden to display human kindness even in wartime: thus, the betrothed is to be exempt from service; offers of peace are to be made to every city attacked; and fruit-trees are not to be destroyed during a siege. The conduct of war is to be guided by reason and mercy. Israelite kings were famed for their humanity (1 Kings xx, 31); while contemporary Assyrian monarchs delighted in inhuman savagery, and made it a rule to devastate forests and cultivated fields; Isa. xiv, 8.

1-9. EXEMPTION FROM SERVICE

1. horses. The Heb. is in the singular, used in a collective sense. 'In Mine eyes their multitude of horses are as one horse; hence, fear not' (Rashi).

more than thou. lit. 'a people too great for thee.'

who brought thee out. The recollection of God's work for Israel in the past is a pledge of what He will do for them in the future.

2. the priest. Specially appointed for the purpose, and designated in Rabbinical literature as 'the priest anointed for the war.'

3. fear not. In your hearts.

neither be ye affrighted. In action.

5. dedicated it. Rashi renders, 'and hath not begun to live in it.' His heart will be set upon his house, and not upon the battle. Hence, he may flee from battle and cause his companions to do likewise.

6. not used the fruit thereof. lit. 'hath not made it profane', by common use. According to Lev. xix, 23-25, the produce of any fruit-tree was not to be used during its first three years. In the fourth year, the fruit was to be dedicated to God. In the fifth year, the fruit became 'profane'; i.e. it was permitted to be eaten. Hence the words 'he hath not made it profane' mean no more than 'he hath not used the fruit thereof.'

8. faint-hearted. Fear is infectious, and the presence of such persons in the host would be a source of weakness and danger.

In these verses, 1-8, we have 'a shrewd psychological understanding of the dangerous contagion of cowardice, as well as of its probable self-conquest, if given freedom of choice. The contagion of courage would then probably act upon the trembler, and the fear of confessing himself faint-hearted might nerve him to bravery.'

shall say: 'What man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted? let him go and return unto his house, lest his brethren's heart melt as his heart.' 9. And it shall be, when the officers have made an end of speaking unto the people, that captains of hosts shall be appointed at the head of the people. *vii. ¶ 10. When thou drawest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it. 11. And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that are found therein shall become tributary unto thee, and shall serve thee. 12. And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it. 13. And when the LORD thy God delivereth it into thy hand, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword; 14. but the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take for a prey unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the LORD thy God hath given thee. 15. Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations. 16. Howbeit of the cities of these peoples, that the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth, 17. but thou shalt utterly destroy them: the Hittite, and the Amorite, the Canaanite, and the Compare this genial wisdom with the grim "Shot at dawn" of contemporary military law; with that stark brutality of the ritual of Moloch which has sent shell-shocked conscripts in their teens to a dishonoured grave. The Jewish law, at once more merciful and more intelligent, is the combination of universal service with freedom: making militarism its slave, and not its master' (Zangwill).

9. captains of hosts. The army was to be divided into detachments, with a captain for each.

10-18. CAPTURE OF HEATHEN CITIES

10. proclaim peace unto it. War is to be regarded as the last resort. First of all there must be offers of peace. If these are accepted, no one is to be harmed in person or in possession; the city becomes tributary to Israel. All Traditional commentaries agree that these offers of peace had to be made to all enemy cities, to those of the Canaanites as well. The latter were, in addition, to abandon idolatry and adhere to the Seven Commandments given to the descendants of Noah (i.e. the establishment of courts of justice, and the prohibition of blasphemy, idolatry, incest, murder, robbery and unnatural cruelty); see p. 33.

15. very far off. Which do not belong to the nations mentioned in v. 17 (and also in vii, 1-3).

16. nothing that breatheth. If they refuse the offers of peace, and are unwilling to give up idolatry and observe the precepts of Natural Religion; see on v. 10.

17. Hittite . . . Jebusite. Only six nations are mentioned here, whereas in vii, 1-3 seven nations are named. Ibn Ezra accounts for the omission of 'Girgashite' here because it was the smallest of the seven nations, and negligible. The Jerusalem Talmud states: 'A three-fold message Joshua sent to the Promised Land before the Israelites entered it. It was to the following effect: "Who-soever wishes to leave the country, let him do so; whosoever desires to make peace, his desire will be granted; and whosoever is determined on war, battle will be joined with him." The Girgashites left Canaan, and migrated to North Africa; the Gibeonites made peace; and the thirty-one kings of the cities of Canaan chose to make war, and fell.' It is clear from Joshua xi, 19 that peace-offers were made in every case. The stratagem of the Gibeonites may have been due to a desire to obtain some extra privileges.

Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite; as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee; 18. that they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods, and so ye sin against the LORD your God. ¶ 19. When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by wielding an axe against them; for thou mayest eat of them, but thou shalt not cut them down; for is the tree of the field man, that it should be besieged of thee? 20. Only the trees

18. that they teach you not. 'This plainly indicates that, if they are willing to give up their idolatrous abominations, they are to be spared' (Sifri).

BANNING THE CANAANITES

The moral difficulty in v. 10-18 has been variously met by Jewish and non-Jewish authorities. The traditional Jewish view is sufficiently indicated in the comments above. Non-Jewish exegetes of the older school point out that the ban was a pre-Mosaic institution, not confined to the Semitic world. It is found in peoples as far apart as the Romans and the Mexicans: among them all it was but an exhibition of cruelty for cruelty's sake. In Israel alone was it moralized—turned into a potent and terrible weapon for the safe-guarding of the Sacred Cause entrusted to Israel's keeping. Israel's preservation from depravity and decay was the main anxiety of the Lawgiver. Just as in modern days the preservation of the State is reckoned in every country the supreme law which overrides every other consideration, so was in Israel the preservation of Israel's religious character. And rightly so, for the whole moral and spiritual future of mankind was involved in that preservation.

Furthermore, the search for a new homeland, and the conquest of such homeland, are not isolated phenomena in World History. The fact is that the population of nearly every European country to-day had conquered its present homeland and largely destroyed the original inhabitants. Thus, the Saxons all but exterminated the Romanized Celts; and, in turn, the Saxons were 'harried' by the Normans on their conquest of England. Even more dreadful was the enslavement or extermination of the native races by both Catholic and Protestant settlers in their Overseas possessions. Now, no nation has ever been called upon to justify the taking of such lands, or its conduct towards the natives who thus passed under its control. The peoples exhaust the vocabulary of praise for those of their national heroes who secured that homeland or colonial possessions for them. Israel alone has such an ethical justification for the conquest of Canaan and the banning of its inhabitants. In Lev. xviii, dealing with the bestialities and moral depravities of the Canaanites, we read: v. 26-28, 'Ye shall not do any of these abominations . . . (for all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled); that the land vomit not you out also, when ye defile it, as it vomited out the nation that was before you.'

It is thus seen that the Canaanites were put under the ban, not for false belief but for vile action; because of the human sacrifices and foul immorality of their gruesome cults. The judicial extirpation of the Canaanites is but another instance of the fact that the interests of man's moral progress occasionally demand the employment of stern and relentless methods. 'Here is no partiality of a merely national God befriending His worshippers at the expense of others, without regard to justice; here rather is a Power making for righteousness and against iniquity; yea, a Power acting with a beneficent regard to the good of humanity, burying a putrefying carcass out of sight, lest it should taint the air. In the execution of His righteous purposes, Almighty God is guided by one supreme aim, namely, the elevation of human character. It is to be observed, that Israel itself is threatened with a similar judgment, in the event of its yielding to the depraved rites and practices of heathendom' (Bruce).

19-20. DESTRUCTION OF TREES

A precautionary warning to Israel—in view of such practices by nomadic warriors—not to devastate the land they are setting out to conquer.

19. is the tree . . . man? The trees of a besieged city must not be cut down, because they are vital to man (Ibn Ezra). The Rabbis deduce from this v. a prohibition of the wanton destruction of anything useful to man (בל תשחית).

20. not trees for food. Should the trees, however, not be fruit-bearing, and hence not vital to man, then by all means let them be cut down, if military necessity demands it.

of which thou knowest that they are not trees for food, them thou mayest destroy and cut down, that thou mayest build bulwarks against the city that maketh war with thee, until it fall.

CHAPTER XXI

1. If one be found slain in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it, lying in the field, and it be not known who hath smitten him; 2. then thy elders and thy judges shall come forth, and they shall measure unto the cities which are round about him that is slain. 3. And it shall be, that the city which is nearest unto the slain man, even the elders of that city shall take a heifer of the herd, which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke. 4. And the elders of that city shall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which may neither be plowed nor sown, and shall break the heifer's neck there in the valley. 5. And the priests the sons of Levi shall come near—for them the LORD thy God hath chosen to minister unto Him, and to bless in the name of the LORD; and according to their word shall every controversy and

This chapter contains various laws concerning the sacredness of human life, and regard for the rights and dignity of human nature.

1-9. ON THE EXPIATION OF AN UNTRACED MURDER

If a slain man be found in the open country, the murderer being unknown, the elders of the nearest town shall slay a young heifer in an uncultivated valley with a stream, and testify that they neither shed this blood nor saw it shed, and pray for forgiveness. In Israel, murder is not only a crime committed against a fellow-man, but also a sin against God, in whose image man was made; hence, no money-compensation was permitted in the case of the wilful murderer (Num. xxxv, 33), 'for the soul is not the possession of the nearest of kin, but of the Holy One, blessed be He' (Maimonides). 'According to the oldest Hellenic idea, the murderer violated only the family sphere. Mosaism, however, by virtue of its conception of the human being as of Divine image, recognized in murder above all a sin against the Holy God, the Creator and Master of human life, Gen. ix, 5-6, which sin has to be atoned for by the extermination of the guilty murderer from the Holy Land defiled by blood-guilt' (Oehler). When the murderer is not known, the whole community is held responsible for the crime perpetrated on one of its members; see on v. 7.

thy judges. Each village would naturally desire to get rid of the responsibility of providing a heifer, and its elders would be apt to exaggerate the distance between their home and the body. Hence, the presence of the judges was required, as arbiters and overseers, that all matters connected with the measurement and resultant responsibility are equitably settled (Welch).

3. not been wrought with. i.e. not been used for ploughing or subjected to any forced labour; and, therefore, unprofaned by common use.

4. a rough valley. lit. 'a strong valley'; i.e. a rough, uncultivated, unfrequented territory, with a perennial brook. Its running water would carry away the blood of the heifer, and thus symbolize the removal of the defilement from the land.

The Rabbis' explanation of these ceremonies is, 'Let the heifer which has never produced fruit (i.e. which has never been set to do any work) be killed in a spot which has never produced fruit (i.e. a rough, uncultivated ground), to atone for the death of a man who was debarred (through being prematurely made to die) from producing fruit.' According to Maimonides, the object of this rite was to assist in the discovery of the murderer by the publicity attending the performance thereof.

And they shall speak and say: 'Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it. 8. Forgive, O LORD, Thy people Israel, whom Thou hast redeemed, and suffer not innocent blood to remain in the midst of Thy people Israel.' And the blood shall be forgiven them. 9. So shalt thou put away the innocent blood from the midst of thee, when thou shalt do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD.

6. wash their hands. Innocent blood shed by violence sticks to the hands of the murderer, and all the seas cannot wash away its stain. It is otherwise with those who—the actual murderer being unknown—are held to be only morally responsible for the crime. In their case, the washing of the hands is a symbolic act to disown the community's guilt; Ps. xxvi, 6. No trace of this symbolic action is found in Greek or Roman life (contra Matth. xxvii, 24).

we failed to befriend him' (Sifri). Thus did the Rabbis bring home to the people the great principle of mutual responsibility and moral interdependence of men and classes.

8. forgive. This is spoken by the priests. They ask forgiveness because the people of the vicinity had sinned in failing adequately to safeguard the roads against danger (Ibn Ezra).

9. so shalt thou put away. If the murderer is discovered after the ceremony had been performed, he must be put to death. 'Then shalt thou be doing that which is right in the eyes of the LORD.'

CAP. LI. נא

12. I, even I, am He that comforteth you;
Who art thou, that thou art afraid of man that shall die,
And of the son of man that shall be made as grass;

This is the fourth of the Haftorahs of Consolation: Israel shall be redeemed from exile, and be the means of extending God's salvation to all mankind. The Haftorah sets out a programme of religion—to plant heaven and establish the earth for the children of men. The Sidrah, in one of its luminous commands—'justice, justice, shalt thou follow'—gives the fundamental prerequisite for all human living on earth.

13. And hast forgotten the LORD thy Maker,
That stretched forth the heavens,
And laid the foundations of the earth;
And fearest continually all the day
Because of the fury of the oppressor,
As he maketh ready to destroy?
And where is the fury of the oppressor?
14. He that is bent down shall speedily be loosed;
And he shall not go down dying into the pit,
Neither shall his bread fail.
15. For I am the LORD thy God, Who stirreth up the sea, that the waves thereof roar;
The LORD of hosts is His name.
16. And I have put My words in thy mouth,
And have covered thee in the shadow of My hand,
That I may plant the heavens,
And lay the foundations of the earth,
And say unto Zion: 'Thou art My people.'

as he maketh ready to destroy. 'As if he intended to destroy you' (Ehrlich).

where is the fury of the oppressor? Cyrus has no intention to destroy you. On the contrary.

14. pit. Grave.

15. stirreth up the sea. Restrains its fury, so that its waves beat in vain against the shore. 'By the roar and crash of the ocean on the beach, the Hebrew prophet sought to render the futile rage of the world, as it dashed on the steadfast will of God' (G. A. Smith).

16. I have put. He Who had in the beginning created the heavens and the earth would now, through the Righteous Remnant, the sanctified minority in Israel, create a new heaven and a new earth. This v. is of wonderful depth, and is in fact a summary of Israel's place and function in the spiritual life of humanity.

put My words in thy mouth. God's message to man was through Israel. 'As long as the world lasts, all who want to make progress in righteousness will come to Israel for inspiration, as the people who have the sense for righteousness most glowing and strongest' (Matthew Arnold).

covered thee. Wonderful as had been the Election of Israel, equally so has been Israel's preservation through all the fires and floods of history. Both such Divine Election and miraculous Preservation were for purposes that embrace all mankind. The Prophet now enumerates three of these purposes.

that I may plant the heavens. The new heavens and the new earth; see LXV, 17. With the break-up of the heathen kingdoms and the restoration of Israel begins a new epoch for humanity. Heb. לִנְטַע שָׁמַיִם, lit. 'to plant Heaven.' Heaven is here compared to a seed that will grow into a tree, and yield fruit and shelter to the children of men. And Heaven may be planted! Whenever we teach a child by word or example a noble thought, deed, or way of life, we plant Heaven. In the same way, Heaven can be planted in the soul of a people, or peoples. Israel was chosen and Providentially preserved, in order that through Israel God might plant Heaven—i.e. righteousness and mercy—in the soul of humanity.

lay the foundations of the earth. i.e. to teach mankind what are the true foundations of human society: not 'blood and iron', but Truth, Justice, Peace—ideals which the Servant of the Lord was to teach the children of men.

thou art My people. Israel to remain throughout history a witness of God among the nations.

17-23. THE END OF ZION'S TRIBULATION

17. awake, awake. From thy despair. Since her fall, Jerusalem is in a stupor, having drained the staggering cup of misfortune and ruin to its very dregs.

18. There is none to guide her Among all the sons whom she hath brought forth;
Neither is there any that taketh her by the hand
Of all the sons that she hath brought up.

19. These two things are befallen thee;
Who shall bemoan thee?
Desolation and destruction, and the famine and the sword;
How shall I comfort thee?

20. Thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets,
As an antelope in a net;
They are full of the fury of the LORD,
The rebuke of thy God.

21. Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted,

And drunken, but not with wine;

22. Thus saith thy Lord the LORD,
And thy God that pleadeth the cause of His people:

Behold, I have taken out of thy hand
The cup of staggering;
The beaker, even the cup of My fury,

Thou shalt no more drink it again;

23. And I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee;

That have said to thy soul:

'Bow down, that we may go over';

And thou hast laid thy back as the ground,

And as the street, to them that go over.

18. none to guide her. A drunken person needs someone to guide him.

19. two things. In this verse and the two following, the Prophet pictures the misery wrought by the siege and destruction of Jerusalem; ruin (desolation and destruction), and the death of her citizens (famine and the sword).

full of the fury. The despondency that has come upon them through God's wrath.

21. not with wine. But with affliction from God.

23. said to thy soul. Those who afflicted Israel have at all times demanded of Israel that it give up its soul for them to go over. This Israel has ever refused to do; only its back would it give for the oppressor to go over. Therefore it survived. When others are thus fallen, they rise not again; המה כרעו ונפלו (Psalm xx, 9).

that we may go over. Eastern conquerors would walk, or even ride, over the backs of captive foes.

CHAPTER LII

Jerusalem will rise again from its present degradation. Let her array herself as a queen, surrounded by her restored children. The mountains and waste places of Judea shall rejoice at the Lord's triumphal return to Zion.

I-6. THE TRIUMPH OF ZION

1. unclean. No alien garrison is to remain within her.

2. Shake thyself from the dust;
Arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem; Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck,
O captive daughter of Zion.

3. For thus saith the LORD:
Ye were sold for nought;
And ye shall be redeemed without money.

4. For thus saith the Lord God:
My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there;
And the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.

5. Now therefore, what do I here, saith the LORD,
Seeing that My people is taken away for nought?
They that rule over them do howl,
saith the LORD,
And My name continually all the day is blasphemed.

6. Therefore My people shall know
My name;
Therefore they shall know in that day
That I, even He that spoke, behold, here I am.

7. How beautiful upon the mountains Are the feet of the messenger of good tidings,
That announceth peace, the harbinger of good tidings,
That announceth salvation;
That saith unto Zion:
'Thy God reigneth!'

2. sit down. On thy throne (Rashi).
loose thyself from the bands. Better, loosen for thyself the bonds of thy captivity.

3. sold for nought. Her captors paid no price and, therefore, have no claim upon her.
redeemed without money. 'Egypt and Assyria never became Israel's purchasers and legal owners; so it is now with Babylon. Babylon has no permanent property in Israel whom it so heavily oppresses; therefore the Lord, who punished Israel by giving him over for a time to his enemies, will now restore him' (M.
Arnold).

4. without cause. Without having acquired any right over Israel by services rendered to God.

5. what do I here. Why do I linger and cause
My sons to linger here? (Rashi). The situation is unendurable, and inconsistent with the honour of God! If Egyptian and Assyrian tyranny have passed away, why should not Babylonian?

(4) LAWS OF DOMESTIC LIFE AND HUMAN KINDNESS

(a) XXI, 10-21. FAMILY LAWS

10-14. MARRIAGE WITH A CAPTIVE OF WAR

A female war-captive was not to be made a concubine till after an interval of a month. The bitter moments of the captive's first grief had to be respected. She must not subsequently be sold or treated as a slave.

10. goest forth to battle. Outside Palestine.

12. bring her home. This law inculcates thoughtfulness and forbearance under circumstances in which the warrior, elated by victory, might deem himself at liberty to act as he pleased (Driver). 'After the countless rapes of conquered women with which recent history has made us so painfully familiar, it is like hearing soft music to read of the warrior's duty to the enemy woman, of the necessary marriage with its set ritual and its due delay. And the Legislator proceeds to trace the course of the husband's duty in the event of the conquered alien woman failing to bring him the expected delight. "Then thou shalt let her go whither she will; but thou shalt not sell her at all for money, thou shalt not deal with her as a slave, because thou hast humbled her" ' (Zangwill).

shave . . . nails. Rites of purification and renunciation of her former heathendom, so as to render herself fit and worthy of acceptance in the fold of Israel; Lev. xiv, 9. Onkelos translates, 'she shall suffer her nails to grow'; and the Rabbis explain the whole procedure as designed to render her unattractive to the captor, and deter him from marrying her; see on v. 14.

13. raiment of her captivity. The clothes worn when she was taken captive were to be laid aside by reason of their heathen impurity. a full month. For her grief to spend itself and to accustom herself to her new condition of life. she shall be thy wife. And enjoy the full rights and duties of a Jewish wife; Exod. xxi, 10.

14. no delight in her. i.e. no longer any delight in her. The Rabbis deemed such a marriage a concession to human weakness, as a preventive against worse manifestations of the unbridled passions of man. Even though permissible, such an alliance should be discouraged. 'Holy Writ,' they say, 'here clearly indicates that a wife taken in this fashion will probably end by becoming an object of aversion to her husband.'

let her go. Divorce her; and, if she should be ill, he must not do so before her complete recovery (Sifri).

not sell her. Nor by any other method dispose of her (Ibn Ezra); see on Exod. xxi, 8.

deal with her as a slave. 'Make merchandise of her' (AV). He must not reduce her in the home to the level of a bondwoman (Sifri).

humbled her. Dishonoured her.

thou shalt not deal with her as a slave, because thou hast humbled her. ¶ 15. And all the men of his city shall stone

15-17. THE RIGHT OF THE FIRST-BORN

Succession to property is a source of discord in a family, as is the favouritism of parents. But the double portion due to the first-born son is inalienable, though his mother be the less loved wife.

15. beloved . . . hated. Relative terms only, denoting that one is preferred to the other, as Leah and Rachel (it is in this sense that Mal. i, 2, 3, p. 102, is to be understood). Rabbi Ishmael said, 'Human experience shows that, in every bigamous marriage, one wife is always more loved than the other.'

16. in the day. Not necessarily at the approach of death, but at any time when he announces what the division of his property is to be at his death. The Rabbis forbid a man to distribute his possessions, Lear-like, in his life-time; and they also warn a man against any discrimination between his children, aside from the privileges of the first-born.

of all that he hath. The Talmud deduces from this that the first-born is not entitled to claim a double portion from the estate that will accrue after the father's death.

first-fruits of his strength. Cf. Gen. XLIX, 3.

18-21. A DISOBEDIENT SON

Israelite parents were particularly affectionate, and even indulgent. However, an incorrigible son, whom milder measures failed to reclaim, might be tried by the elders at the gate, and was liable to death by stoning.

19. unto the gate. The gateway; the Oriental forum.

20. glutton. Includes not only gluttony, but is a term for a general debauchee, 'riotous liver' (RV).

21. all the men . . . stone him. The Hebrew parent did not possess the power of life and death over his child. In Greece, weak children were exposed, i.e. left on a lonely mountain to perish; and in Rome, a father could at will put even a grown-up son to death. In Israel, however, even when vice and insubordination in an adolescent son had become intolerable, the parents must appeal to the decision of an impartial tribunal. The death-penalty could only be inflicted by the community, with the sanction of the elders of the city.

And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree; 23. his body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt surely bury him the same day; for he that is hanged is a reproach unto God; that thou defile not thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

CHAPTER XXII

1. Thou shalt not see thy brother's ox or his sheep driven away, and hide thyself from them; thou shalt surely bring them back unto thy brother. 2. And if thy brother be not nigh unto thee, and thou know him not, then thou shalt bring it home to thy house, and it shall be with thee until thy brother require it, and thou shalt restore it to him. 3. And so shalt thou do with his ass; and so shalt thou do with his garment; and so shalt thou do with every lost thing of thy brother's,

The Rabbis tell us that this law was never once carried out; and, by the regulations with which the infliction of the death-penalty was in this case surrounded, it could not be carried out (see also on xxii, 22). Its presence in the Torah was merely to serve as a warning, and bring out with the strongest possible emphasis the heinous crime of disobedience to parents.

and thou hang him. After he had been put to death; the fiendish punishment of crucifying men alive, nailing them to the cross and prolonging their death-agonies for days, was a Roman invention. There were four methods of execution in ancient Israel—stoning, burning, the sword, and strangulation. Hanging was sometimes added after death, in token of infamy, or as a further deterrent; Josh. x, 26.

23. bury him. Burial, and not cremation, is the Jewish method of disposal of the dead; see p. 80.

a reproach unto God. Or, 'involves the cursing of the judges' (Rashbam), by his relations. The former explanation is the more probable. 'It is a slight to the King, because man is made in the Divine image' (Rashi); and the dignity of humanity must be respected even in a criminal. Death, Judaism teaches, atones his sin; therefore, his body shall, at the earliest moment, receive

CHAPTER XXII

1-3. RESTORING LOST PROPERTY

We have in these three verses a repetition of the law in Exod. xxiii, 4, 5, regarding our duty of restoring the strayed ox or ass, and of the lifting up of the fallen beast of burden. The law is here widened to include other lost articles that require restoration to their owners. Exodus speaks of the things belonging to 'thine enemy'; here the wider term, 'thy brother,' is used. Whether thy neighbour be thy brother or enemy, his property must be protected and restored.

1. ox . . . sheep. These names are typical, and the law applies to all domestic animals alike.

hide thyself from them. Fail to notice them or trouble about them, saying, 'It is no concern of mine.'

2. restore it. Failure to do so is accounted theft, and punished with a fine one-fifth over and above the value, if denied on oath; Lev. v, 20-24 (Chap. vi, 1-5 in English Bible).

which he hath lost, and thou hast found; thou mayest not hide thyself. ¶ 4. Thou shalt not see thy brother's ass or his ox fallen down by the way, and hide thyself from them; thou shalt surely help him to lift them up again. ¶ 5. A woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment; for whosoever doeth these things is an abomination unto the LORD thy God. ¶ 6. If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, in any tree or on the ground, with young ones or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young; 7. thou shalt in any wise let the dam go, but the young thou mayest take unto thyself; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days. *iii. ¶ 8. When thou buildest a new house, then thou shalt make a parapet for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall from thence. ¶ 9. Thou shalt not sow

4. ASSISTING TO LIFT FALLEN BEASTS

4. help him. lit. 'help with him'; i.e. in company with the owner. The owner must not stand by idle and leave the work to others. A Chassidic Rabbi lamented that this law was little observed, and he devoted himself to its fulfilment. He was continually to be seen in the streets, helping one man to load his wagon, another to drag his cart out of the mire.

(c) XXII, 5-12. MISCELLANEOUS LAWS—
FIRST GROUP

5. DISTINCTION OF SEX IN APPAREL

5. An interchange of attire between man and woman would promote immodesty and, in consequence, immorality. This law is probably directed against rites in Syrian heathenism, which included exchange of garments by the sexes and led to gross impurities.

6-7. SPARING THE MOTHER-BIRD

The ground of sympathy here is the sacredness of the parental relationship. The mother-bird is sacred as a mother; and length of days is promised to those who regard the sanctity of motherhood in this sphere, as it is promised to those who observe the Fifth Commandment. 'When the mother is sent away, she does not see the taking of her young ones, and does not feel any pain. The eggs over which the bird sits, and the brood that are in need of the mother, are generally unfit for food. Consequently, this commandment will cause man to leave the whole nest untouched. The Torah provides that such grief should not be caused to cattle

(Lev. xxii, 28) or birds; how much more careful must we be that we should not cause grief to our fellow men' (Maimonides); see xxv, 4.

7. prolong thy days. Rabbi Akiba, referring to this promise of long life, supposes the case of a man who climbs a tower and takes the young from the nest, sparing the mother-bird in accordance with this commandment. But on his way down, he falls and dies. To the question, 'Where is the well-being and prolonging of days in this case?' Akiba answers, 'In the Life to Come, where all goes well, and all is abiding.'

8. PARAPETS TO HOUSE-ROOFS

As the houses in all Eastern countries possessed flat roofs, which were used for walking, sleeping, and other domestic purposes, it was necessary to erect a parapet to prevent accidental falling off. According to the Rabbis, the parapet was to be at least two cubits high.

8. blood. Blood-guiltiness; failure to protect human life exposes the builder, owner, or resident of the house to blood-guiltiness in the eyes of God. The Rabbis extended this prohibition to cover all cases where danger to life exists through our negligence; such as keeping a dangerous dog, or placing a broken ladder against a wall.

9. AGAINST MIXING SEEDS

This law—as well as the two laws following it against ploughing with an ox and an ass together, and the wearing of a garment composed of a mixture of wool and linen—is based on the idea that God has made distinctions in the natural world which it is wrong for man to obliterate by processes of intermixing; see on Lev. xix, 19.

thy vineyard with two kinds of seed; lest the fulness of the seed which thou hast sown be forfeited together with the increase of the vineyard. ¶ 10. Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together. 11. Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff, wool and linen together. ¶ 12. Thou shalt make thee twisted cords upon the four corners of thy covering, wherewith thou coverest thyself. ¶ 13. If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14. and lay wanton charges against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say: 'I took this woman, and when I came nigh to her, I found not in her the tokens of virginity'; 15. then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate. 16. And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders: 'I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17. and, lo, he hath laid wanton charges, saying: I found not in thy daughter the tokens of virginity; forfeited. lit. 'to become consecrated'; the resultant crop would have to be consigned to the flames. The man would lose both his grapes and his other crop, as a penalty for his irreligious act.

10. YOKING AN OX AND AN ASS

10. ox and an ass. They differ greatly in their nature, in size, and strength; it is, therefore, cruel to the weaker animal to yoke them together.

11. SHAATNES

11. mingled stuff. The etymology and meaning of this word are both uncertain. Some derive it from the Egyptian. The reason underlying the prohibition may possibly be the same as that against mixing seeds, v. 9. The Rabbis class it with the prohibition of swine's flesh and other chukkim, which provoke the ridicule of scoffers, Jewish and non-Jewish, but which the loyal Israelite nevertheless willingly obeys, because they are the commands of his Father Who is in Heaven.

12. TZITZIS

12. twisted cords. Heb. gedilim; lit. 'twisted threads,' identified by the Rabbis with the tzitzis in Num. xv, 37-41. Among all peoples, knots have been used as reminders and symbols. The tzitzis are a constant reminder of the special relationship in which the Israelite stands to God, and the consequent duty of withstanding temptation to sin. There is a well-known Talmudic story of a reprobate and riotous liver who was recalled to his better self by the tzitzis he wore, so as to break completely with his wicked past.

(d) XXII, 13-XXIII, 9. HOLINESS OF MARRIAGE

13-21. CHARGES AGAINST A BRIDE

He who falsely accuses his wife of unchastity during betrothal shall be rebuked, fined, and he loses the right ever to divorce her. However, if such charge be true, it is a case of capital punishment. Betrothal in Bible times united the bridal couple as husband and wife for all purposes, save living together; and any infidelity on the part of the wife was considered adultery; see on v. 22. 'In considering these plain-spoken laws (v. 13-21), it is just to remember that they represent an upward stage in the struggle against the animal passions of men. That we do not need some of them to-day is due to the fact that their enforcement under religious sanction was needed at the time of their origin. It is only ignorance or ingratitude which can cavil at their spirit or their form' (G. A. Smith).

13. and hate her. The man had entered on marriage merely for the satisfaction of his passions, and then turned against his wife by a revulsion of feeling frequent in such characters (Bertholet); see on xxi, 14, and cf. II Sam. xiii, 15.

15. the tokens. Such evidence was regarded as essential by many ancient races, though the absence of those tokens is by no means conclusive of guilt. Some of the Rabbis, therefore, took the phrase concerning the tokens as a metaphorical expression (בוררין את הדבר כשמלה) for clearly establishing the falsity of his charge by witnesses and expert evidence.

and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity.' And they shall spread the garment before the elders of the city. 18. And the elders of that city shall take the man and chastise him. 19. And they shall fine him a hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel; and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away all his days. ¶ 20. But if this thing be true, that the tokens of virginity were not found in the damsel; 21. then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die; because she hath wrought a wanton deed in Israel, to play the harlot in her father's house; so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee. ¶ 22. If a man be found lying with a woman married to a husband, then they shall both of them die, the man that lay with the woman, and the woman; so shalt thou put away the evil from Israel. ¶ 23. If there be a damsel that is a virgin betrothed unto a man, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her; 24. then ye shall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die: the damsel, because she cried not, being in the city; and the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's wife; so thou shalt put away the evil from the midst of thee. ¶ 25. But if the man find the damsel that is betrothed in the field, and the man take hold of her, and lie with her; then the man only that

22. ADULTERY

22. both of them die. The man as well as the woman; cf. Lev. xx, 10. There is to be no double standard of conjugal morality in Israel.

As in the case of all capital offences, the Rabbis required that the guilty parties be warned of the seriousness of their proposed action. Without such warning (hathraah), the death penalty could not be carried out. Furthermore, the law of evidence in capital offences and the proof of premeditation were made so severe that a death verdict was almost impossible. R. Tarphon and R. Akiba said, 'If we had been in the Sanhedrin, a man would never have been executed by it.' A few lines before it is stated, 'A Sanhedrin that executes a person once in seven years is called destructive.' R. Eleazar ben Azaryah says, 'Once in seventy years.'

26. no sin. Where there is compulsion, force majeure, there is no sin, or any of the legal consequences of sin.

27. cried. The woman is given the benefit of the doubt (Rashbam, Sforno). A similar provision, with similar phrasing, is found in the newly-discovered Hittite Law, going back to the year 1350 B.C.E. It seems, therefore, that in the laws concerning rape we have the Common Law of the more advanced Semitic nations, just as we have seen in the Code of Hammurabi parallels to the Civil Legislation in Exodus; see p. 403.

28-29. A VIRGIN NOT BETROTHED

The man must pay the 'bride-price' and marry her, without right of divorce.

CHAPTER XXIII

1. PROHIBITION OF MARRIAGE WITH STEPMOTHER

This law was aimed at the ancient heathen custom of inheriting women in the same way as other possessions of the deceased.

1. his father's skirt. Or, 'his father's bed-cover'; a euphemism for marital relation; see Ruth iii, 9.

2-9. CLASSES EXCLUDED FROM CONGREGATION

2. enter into the assembly of the LORD. Be counted as belonging to the community. He shall not therefore be permitted to marry an Israelite woman. The first to be excluded are the self-mutilated or unsexed in the service of some heathen cult. Isa. lvi, 3 f speaks of men whose mutilation was not voluntary.

3. bastard. Heb. מִמֹּר. This does not mean a child born out of wedlock, but the child of an adulterous or an incestuous marriage (i.e. one with the forbidden degrees of kinship as laid down in Lev. xviii and xx).

tenth generation. i.e. never. The numeral 'ten' here denotes an indefinitely large number; cf. Gen. xxxi, 7.

4. Ammonite or a Moabite. From the use of the masculine and not the feminine, the Talmud deduces that it is only the male Ammonite and the male Moabite that are excluded. But the females could, after proselytization, marry male Israelites; e.g. Ruth, who was a Moabitess, entered the Jewish fold and became the ancestress of King David.

According to the Rabbis this prohibition in regard to the admission of Ammon, Moab, Edom, and Egypt into the community ceased with Assyrian conquest, which drove the inhabitants from their original homes and led to a comingling of tribes and races.

because they met you not with bread and with water in the way, when ye came forth out of Egypt; and because they hired against thee Balaam the son of Beor from Pethor of Aram-naharaim, to curse thee. 6. Nevertheless the LORD thy God would not hearken unto Balaam; but the LORD thy God turned the curse into a blessing unto thee, because the LORD thy God loved thee. 7. Thou shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days for ever. *iv. ¶ 8. Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother; thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his land. 9. The children of the third generation that are born unto them may enter into the assembly of the LORD. ¶ 10. When thou goest forth in camp against thine enemies, then thou shalt keep thee from every evil thing. 11. If there be among you any man, that is not clean by reason of that which chanceth him by night, then shall he go abroad out of the camp, he shall not come within the camp. 12. But it shall be, when evening cometh on, he shall bathe himself in water; and when the sun is down, he may come within the camp. 13. Thou shalt have a place also without the camp, whither thou shalt go forth abroad. 14. And thou shalt have a paddle among thy weapons; and it shall be, when thou sittest down abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shalt turn back and cover that which cometh from thee. 15. For the LORD thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, they hired. In the Heb. the singular is used, because Moab alone hired Balaam against Israel; Num. xxii, 5.

6. turned the curse. See Num. xxiii, 11, 25, and xxiv, 10.

7. not seek their peace. i.e. thou shalt not invite them to be on terms of amity with thee; as a punishment for their inhuman treatment of Israel. 'Not hatred, but indifference, is commanded here' (Oettli).

8. thy brother. Thy blood-brother, therefore must not be placed under a ban of exclusion.

an Egyptian. The oppression of the Egyptians was the act of the Pharaohs rather than the will of the people. Israel had found a home in Egypt, and the Israelites were 'guests' (גֵּרִים) in that land. For this the Egyptians must be remembered with gratitude. National gratitude is as rare as national self-criticism: Israel is the classical example of both.

stranger. Heb. גֵּר; here in the meaning of 'guest'.

(e) XXIII, 10-25. MISCELLANEOUS LAWS A SECOND GROUP

10-15. HOLINESS OF THE CAMP

10. every evil thing. This refers to both personal and moral pollution. The camp was hallowed by the Divine Presence, and must therefore be a place of purity. Uncleanliness leads to ungodliness. Morals, religion, and even the elementary rules of sanitation, were absent in ancient camps. It was to be otherwise in Israel.

11. chanceth him by night. See Lev. xv, 16.

13. a place. 'A prepared place' (Targum). Sanitation is of vital importance in a camp. In this respect also, the Mosaic Law is thousands of years in advance of its age.

15. unseemly thing. lit. 'nakedness of anything'; i.e. anything that one would be ashamed of. turn away from thee. The camp must be 'holy', otherwise there is no place in it for God.

to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy; that He see no unseemly thing in thee, and turn away from thee. ¶ 16. Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a bondman that is escaped from his master unto thee; 17. he shall dwell with thee, in the midst of thee, in the place which he shall choose within one of thy gates, where it liketh him best; thou shalt not wrong him. ¶ 18. There shall be no harlot of the daughters of Israel, neither shall there be a sodomite of the sons of Israel. 19. Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the price of a dog, into the house of the LORD thy God for any vow; for even both these are an abomination unto the LORD thy God. ¶ 20. Thou shalt not lend upon interest to thy

16-17. FUGITIVE SLAVES

The number of slaves was comparatively small in Israel; and the slave-trade could not have been extensive, since no slave-markets are mentioned in Scripture. Slaves had human rights in Jewish law, and were generally well-treated. In all Jewish history, there is no record of a servile insurrection, nor of runaway slaves. In the latter case, he was not to be restored to his master. 'What an honourable contrast to the law of Hammurabi, which condemned to death anyone who sheltered a runaway slave!' (McFadyen). Among the Greeks and Romans the runaway bondman was, on recapture, branded with a red-hot iron. Readers of Uncle Tom's Cabin will remember that, as late as the middle of the last century, fugitive slaves were tracked and pursued by blood-hounds. In this Mosaic law, however, we have the same legislation which it is the peculiar boast of England to have introduced into the modern world:

'Slaves cannot breathe in England . . .

They touch our country, and their shackles fall' (Cowper).

On the position of the slave in Greece and Rome, see p. 537. Among the Greeks, slave-hunting was a not unfamiliar sport among them. As to Rome, Seneca records that the most gruesome punishments—torture, crucifixion, being thrown to the wild beasts in the arena—were inflicted on the slave for slight misdoings. Even the Stoics debated whether in a shipwreck one should sacrifice a valuable horse to save a slave. The Romans could not understand the humane treatment which the Judeans extended to their slaves. During the Hadrianic persecutions, one of the grave counts against Rabbi Eleazar ben Perata was that he had set free his slaves.

16. a bondman. A fleeing non-Israelitish slave, seeking refuge in Palestine from the harsh treatment of an unjust master, Jew or non-Jew, outside Palestine.

17. with thee. He was not only free, but was to be protected and helped to earn his livelihood and lead a useful life.

within one of thy gates. In any city of Israel, in any part of the land.

not wrong him. Better, not vex him, by words; this forbids wounding his feelings by speaking mockingly of his past or his race; see on Lev. XIX, 33.

18-19. IMMORALITY

18. harlot. In Canaanite cults, there were males and females who committed acts of immorality as part of the idolatrous worship.

19. hire of a harlot. The profits, either in money or kind, earned in an infamous way must not be brought to the Sanctuary in fulfilment of a vow or for any other religious purpose.

a dog. The Semitic term for a male person who practised immoral conduct as a religious rite. The Rabbis, however, took the phrase in its literal sense, as anything obtained in exchange for a dog.

abomination. We dishonour God with gifts secured by unrighteous and impure means.

20-21. INTEREST

Israel is a brotherhood whose sons are linked together by kindly feeling. Hence, an Israelite must lend money to a necessitous brother without expectation of any profit whatsoever. It is otherwise in the case of the alien merchant, who requires money not to relieve his poverty but as a business investment; see on Exod. XXII, 24, and Lev. XXV, 36, 37.

20. not lend upon interest. lit. 'not exact interest,' moderate or excessive.

'One of the great duties of charity is here prescribed—to assist persons in reduced circumstances with timely loans, so that they may be brother: interest of money, interest of victuals, interest of any thing that is lent upon interest. 21. Unto a foreigner thou mayest lend upon interest; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon interest; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all that thou puttest thy hand unto, in the land whither thou goest in to possess it. ¶ 22. When thou shalt vow a vow unto the LORD thy God, thou shalt not be slack to pay it; for the LORD thy God will surely require it of thee; and it will be sin in thee. 23. But if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee. 24. That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt observe and do;

21 גִּשְׁךְ בְּסֶחֱךָ גִּשְׁךְ אֶכֶל גִּשְׁךְ כָּל־דָּבָר אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁכָּךְ לְנֹכְרִי

מַשְׁלַח יָדְךָ עַל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־אַתָּה בָּא־שָׁמָּה לְרִשְׁתָּהּ:

וְעָשִׂיתָ כַּאֲשֶׁר נִדְרָתָ לַיהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ נִדְבָה אֲשֶׁר דִּבַּרְתָּ enabled to maintain themselves by their own industry, without resorting to the degrading necessity of accepting alms. If the poor man was to derive any real assistance from the loan granted him, it was absolutely indispensable that no more was to be required of him than the actual amount that had been lent' (H. Adler).

21. unto a foreigner thou mayest lend upon interest. In contrast to the גֵר, the resident alien, the נֹכְרִי, 'foreigner,' is only temporarily in the land of Israel. He was usually a merchant in transit through Palestine. 'The caravan trade was very extensive, and the foreign trader enjoyed ample protection in the customs and laws of the land. The uninterrupted course of trade and absence of complaints relative to acts of violence against caravans speak plainly in favour of this fact. Some differentiation between the Israelite and foreigner was inevitable. The foreigner could not very well be expected, in a year which the Israelites celebrated as a Release Year, to remit the debt of his Israelitish debtor. Nor could he be expected to lend money to his Israelitish customer without taking interest. If an equal basis for trading between Israelites and foreigners was to be established, it could be attained only in this way: that the restrictions of the Release Year and the law of interest that were not binding on the foreigner a priori were also void for the Israelite, in so far as trade with foreigners was concerned' (Guttmann).

This permission to exact interest from a foreigner applied only to sums borrowed for mercantile purposes. When the Gentile needed the money for his subsistence, there was no longer any difference between Israelite and foreigner. 'And if thy brother be waxen poor, and his means fail with thee; then thou shalt uphold him: as a stranger and a settler shall he live with thee. Take thou no interest of him or increase; but fear thy God' (Lev. xxv, 35, 36). The Talmud maintains the interest prohibition throughout, even in regard to foreigners; and nowhere do we find stronger condemnation of the usurer than in Rabbinical literature. The Rabbis teach that the testimony of a usurer must not be accepted in a court of justice. He is classed in the same category with thieves and professional gamblers. These noble sentiments in regard to usury only deepen the moral tragedy of the Jew in the Middle Ages. Debarred from normal means of livelihood, money dealings were forced upon him throughout Christian Europe. 'If we prohibit the Jews from following trades and other civil occupations, we compel them to become usurers,' said Martin Luther. When, on the eve of the French Revolution, the National Assembly hesitated in emancipating the Jews because of the charge of usury, a noted delegate, the Abbé Grégoire, pleaded: 'O nations, if you record the past faults of the Jews, let it be to deplore your own work.' However, if much may be brought forward in extenuation of the past, nothing can be said in defence of contemporary Jewish money-lenders. 'No amount of money given in charity, nothing but the abandonment of this hateful trade, can atone for this great sin against God, Israel, and Humanity' (H. Adler).

not lend. Rabbinic law forbids the Jewish lender to demand interest from Jew and non-Jew alike, and forbids the Jewish borrower from a Jew to pay it.

22-24. Vows

22. not be slack to pay it. The sacred and binding character of the vow is given in Num. xxx, 3.

No one is under any obligation to make a vow. It is a purely voluntary act; but once made, it must be faithfully fulfilled. Ecclesiastes (v, 4) says, 'Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.' See VOWS AND VOWING IN THE LIGHT OF JUDAISM, p. 730.

24. that which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt observe. 'You must be careful to perform any promise you have made' (Moffatt). A much-needed warning as to the sacred duty of keeping one's word; see p. 499.

When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes until thou have enough at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel. ¶ 26. When thou comest into thy neighbour's standing corn, then thou mayest pluck ears with thy hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn.

When a man taketh a wife, and marrieth her, then it cometh to pass, if she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some unseemly thing in her, that he writeth her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house, 2. and she departeth out of his house, and goeth and becometh another man's wife, 3. and the latter husband hateth her, and writeth her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, who took her to be his wife; 4. her former husband, who sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the LORD; and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance. *vi. ¶ 5. vessel. The bag or wallet into which field or garden produce was put. Hunger, not greed, may be satisfied. Kindness must not be abused.

CHAPTER XXIV

(f) 1-4. DIVORCE

What we have here is no law instituting or commanding divorce. This institution is taken for granted, as in Lev. xxi, 7, and Num. xxx, 10. We are merely given one regulation in regard to it; viz., that a man who has divorced his wife may not remarry her, if her second husband divorced her or died. See Additional Note, MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE IN JUDAISM, p. 930.

1. some unseemly thing. Heb. ערוות דבר. The School of Shammai translated these words by 'a thing of indecency', and maintained that divorce could only be allowed if the wife was guilty of unchastity; whereas the School of Hillel rendered them by 'indecent in anything,' implying that a wife may be divorced also for reasons other than unchastity.

bill of divorcement. lit. 'a writing of cutting off,' a certificate of total separation from her with whom he had hitherto lived 'as one flesh' (Gen. ii, 24). The later name for the document was גט. Divorce was no longer to be at the arbitrary will and pleasure of the husband and by mere word of mouth, but upon reason given and by means of a formal document which demanded the intervention of a public authority. The marriage bond is holy; but whilst it is inviolable, it is not indissoluble.

4. defiled. To her former husband only, by her marriage with another man. The strong expression defiled is used in order to condemn the easy passage of a woman between one man and another, which must always entail some degradation of the wifely ideal, and might lead to virtual adultery though the formality of the law would be observed (Nachmanides, Sforno). 'Woman is a moral personality and not a thing, that a man may hand over to another, and then take back again at pleasure' (Koenig). David remarried Michal (ii Sam. iii, 14), but she was taken from him, and not divorced by him.

If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and he deal with him as a slave, and sell him; then that thief shall die; so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee. ¶ 8. 5. EXEMPTION FROM WAR

Another instance of the universality of these laws of mercy—their penetrative sympathy, and their superhuman impartiality, courtesy, and consideration (Welch).

cheer. lit. 'make to rejoice.'

6. MILLSTONE NOT TO BE TAKEN IN PLEDGE

The mill consisted of two circular stones, one above the other. The removal of one would make the other useless, and would deprive the family of its daily supply of bread.

6. a man's life. To deprive a man of any tools indispensable for his livelihood is equivalent to depriving him of his life. This was also forbidden among the Greeks and Romans, and in the ancient Common Law of England.

7. MAN-STEALING

A repetition, with expansion, of the law in Exod. xxi, 16; see p. 308.

7. deal with him as a slave. Or, 'as a chattel'; the same phrase is used in xxi, 14.

shall die. The Code of Hammurabi decrees death for stealing a slave, the interest being not in human but in property rights.

8-9. LEPROSY

8. take heed. The laws of leprosy are to be rigorously followed. These are laid down in

Lev. xiii and xiv. 'Even though the leper be a king like Uzziah, they must not honour him (by exempting him from the prescribed restrictions), but must shut him out from the camp in isolation' (Rashbam).

9. Miriam. Prophetess and sister of Moses though she was, when smitten with leprosy, she was yet separated from the camp seven days; Num. xii, 14 f.

10-13. TAKING AND RESTORING A PLEDGE

As usury was forbidden in Israel, and there were elaborate precautions against excessive indebtedness, there were fewer possibilities of oppression in connection with debt than elsewhere. It was permitted to give pledges, but in the taking of these, the creditor must spare the debtor's feelings. He may not insolently invade the debtor's house, and select as a pledge any article that he deems fit. The dignity, as well as the need, of the poor man must be respected. 'Even finer than the humanitarianism of these laws is their noble respect for human personality. Deuteronomy strikes the note of what is finest in Hebrew ethics and one of its great contributions to the world. Perhaps it is seen most finely, because most simply, in the direction, When thou dost lend thy neighbour any manner of loan, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch the pledge. For every Israelite, however poor, has the right to invite into or to exclude from the four walls of the cabin he calls his home' (Welch).

11. thou shalt stand without. Unless he invites thee to enter. Just because he requires our help, we are to remember how it deteriorates the poor to be dealt with in an unceremonious, tactless way, even by the benevolent (Harper).

lend shall bring forth the pledge without unto thee. 12. And if he be a poor man, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge; 13. thou shalt surely restore to him the pledge when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his garment, and bless thee; and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the LORD thy God. *vii. ¶ 14. Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates. 15. In the same day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it; lest he cry against thee unto the LORD, and it be sin in thee. ¶ 16. 13. sleep in his garment. If the debtor be a poor man he would probably give as security some necessary article of clothing, such as the simlah, worn for protection against wind and rain, and used as a covering during sleep. In Palestine the nights are mostly cold, and the poor man has no covering save his clothes. Hence the command that the creditor return such garment at nightfall, and not heartlessly deprive him of what is an essential of everyday life. Such heartlessness was peculiarly offensive to Israelite feeling; Amos ii, 8, p. 152.

The spirit of the above law is in absolute contrast to the Greek and Roman attitude towards the poor; see p. 929.

14-15. TREATMENT OF WORKMEN

The workman is not to be wronged by being kept waiting for his wage. It must be punctually paid him the day he earns it; Lev. xix, 13.

14. or of thy strangers. One and the same law must protect the Israelite and the non-Israelite worker.

lest he cry. Cf. the end of v. 13.

16. INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

In ancient times the family of a criminal often suffered supreme punishment with him.

Though the family is a moral unity, and the ethical solidarity of the nation is never to be lost sight of, no judge or tribunal must assume the power of putting the parents to death for a sin committed by the children, nor of putting the children to death for a sin committed by the parents. Ezekiel strikingly emphasized this fundamental teaching: 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die; the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father with him, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son with him' (xviii, 4, 20).

16. for the fathers. Or, 'in addition to the fathers' (Koenig). In ii Kings xiv, 5-6, Amaziah king of Judah slays 'his servants who had slain the king his father; but the children of the murderers he put not to death', in obedience to this law of Deuteronomy. Some explain the prohibition to mean: the fathers shall not be permitted to die instead of the children, nor shall the children be permitted to die instead of the fathers. This was actually the case in Babylonian Law. If, through faulty construction, a house collapsed and a child was killed, then it was not the jerry-builder, but the child of the jerry-builder, that was put to death; see 'Son for son, and daughter for daughter, in Code Hammurabi', p. 405.

17-18. INJUSTICE TO THE STRANGER, ORPHAN, AND WIDOW

'It is astonishing to find how many of the laws—especially in the great-hearted Book of Deuteronomy—are expressly designed to protect the interests of the impoverished and defenceless members of society' (McFadyen). 'No other system of jurisprudence in any country at any

But thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee thence; therefore I command thee to do this thing. ¶ 19. When thou reapest thy harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go back to fetch it; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thy hands. ¶ 20. When thou beatest thine olive-tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. 21. When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it after thee; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. 22. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt; therefore I command thee to do this thing.

period is marked by such humanity in respect to the unfortunate' (Houghton). The stranger, fatherless, and widow should be treated with a generous perception of the peculiar difficulties of their lot. Care for them is characteristic of Jewish civilization generally, whether in ancient, medieval, or modern times.

19-23. GENEROSITY TO THE LANDLESS

19. forgot a sheaf. As this commandment could not be consciously observed, Rabbi Zadok grieved over the fact that he had never carried out this mitzvah. When at last he forgot some sheaves on his fields, he rejoiced, and made a festival for himself and his household.

20. olive-tree. The Rabbis declared that the law of leaving the corner of the field unreaped (Lev. XIX, 9), so that the poor might come and take it, applied also to trees. 'In gathering olives, the fruit is brought to the ground either by shaking the boughs or beating them with a long palm branch. At the present time, the trees are beaten on a certain day announced by a crier, after which the poor are allowed to glean what is left. Gleaning is a beautiful and kindly custom still surviving to some extent in Palestine, but fast disappearing before the introduction of modern methods of harvesting' (Dummelow).

CHAPTER XXV

1-3. AGAINST EXCESSIVE PUNISHMENT

In ancient societies, that had no system of imprisonment for lighter crimes, corporal punishment was of necessity much more frequent than in modern times. There was, therefore, great need for regulating it, if its possible barbarities were to be prevented.

1. controversy. Litigation. justifying the righteous. Acquit the innocent.

2. to be beaten. No stripes were to be inflicted before or during the investigation; and the application of torture to extort confession from a criminal (or evidence from witnesses) was unknown in Israel. Only after he was found guilty was the punishment to take place.

judge . . . before his face. In his presence, as a precaution against indiscriminate or unlimited flogging.

by number. The literal meaning is: the number is to be proportionate to his wickedness (Ibn Ezra, Mendelssohn, and all moderns). The Traditional explanation combines the last Heb. word of v. 2 with the first word of v. 3, and deduces therefrom that the 39 stripes are to be carefully counted, cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to the measure of his wickedness, by number. 3. Forty stripes he may give him, he shall not exceed; lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should be dishonoured before thine and the number inflicted to be in accordance with the physical strength of the offender.

3. stripes. By means of a leathern belt, and not by rods or any instrument that might prove fatal. he shall not exceed. The Rabbis fixed the maximum at 39, for fear of exceeding the legal number by miscount.

be dishonoured. Or, 'seem vile.' Become an object of contempt, by destroying his human dignity which must be respected even in a criminal. The Rabbis point out that 'previous to receiving his punishment the wrong-doer is termed the wicked man, but that after being punished he is designated thy brother. Once a man has expiated his offence, let his past be entirely forgotten; and let him be received once again into the brotherhood of Israel!' That punishment must have a decidedly moral aim; viz. the improvement of the criminal. 'It may in some cases be a man's duty to punish, and in other cases to pardon, but it is in all cases a man's duty to be merciful to a criminal' (Seeley). The wonderful spirit of humanity of this Biblical law is quite absent from the codes of ancient and even relatively modern times. In nearly all those codes, the intention seems to be both to humiliate the offender and to inflict torment.

4. KINDNESS TO ANIMALS

The love of God regards not only the poor and the slave, but takes account also of the lower animals.

4. not muzzle the ox. This prohibition applies to all animals employed in labour, and not to the ox alone. 'A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast' (Prov. xii, 10)—he has consideration for its feelings and needs. It is a refinement of cruelty to excite the animal's desire for food and to prevent its satisfaction. Prof. Cornill writes:—

'What a truly humanitarian sentiment finds expression in the law, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. The brute should not perform hard labour, and at the same time have food before its eyes without the possibility of eating therefrom. I remember some time ago to have read that one of the richest Italian real-estate owners, at the grape-harvest, fastened iron muzzles to his miserable, fever-stricken workmen, so that it might not occur to these poor peasants, working for starvation wages under the glowing sun of Southern Italy, to satiate their burning thirst and their gnawing hunger with a few of the millions of grapes of the owner.' Jewish legislation extended the prohibition of muzzling the ox to workmen employed on production of articles of food; they must not be prevented from eating them; see p. 850.

The claims of the lower animals on human pity and consideration are characteristic of the Hebrew Scriptures. 'In Psalm xxxvi, 7, there is an implication that, morally speaking, there is no complete break of continuity in the scale of sentient life; and (Gen. viii, 1; Jcr. xxi, 6) the domesticated animals are in fact regarded as part of the human community. In the Decalogue, the animals that labour with and for man have their share of Sabbath rest, and the produce of the fields during the Sabbatical year (Exod. xxi, 11) is to be for them as for the poor' (Harper).

The duties to our dumb friends have been strangely overlooked in most ethical systems, not excluding Christianity. Paul dismisses as an idle sentimentalism the notion of man's duty to animals. 'Is it for oxen that God careth?' he asks mockingly. And this remained the attitude of the Church till recent times. 'In the range and circle of duties,' says the historian Lecky, 'inculcated by the early Fathers, those to animals had no place.' In the Talmud, however, kindness to animals (צער בעלי חיים) becomes the basis of a whole code of laws. A great Rabbi is said to have been punished with long and continued physical pain because, when a calf which was about to be killed ran to him bleating for protection, he repulsed the animal, exclaiming, 'Go, that is thy destiny.' In a beautiful legend which the poet Coleridge has paraphrased, the Rabbis tell how Moses, while he is still Jethro's shepherd, seeks out a stray lamb and tenderly carries the tired creature in his arms back to the fold, and how a voice from Heaven cries, 'Thou art worthy to be My people's pastor.' 'This sympathy for the dumb animals is all the more remarkable because the terrible scenes in the Roman arena are only too clear an indication of the inhumanity which prevailed in the civilized world during the Talmudic period' (M. Joseph).

It is only in our day that legislation at long last forbade cruelty to animals. Until the middle of the nineteenth century, it was nowhere illegal—except in Jewish law. It is, therefore, but another of the 'conventional lies of our civilization', eyes. ¶ 4. Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. ¶ 5. If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not be married abroad unto one not of his kin; her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her. 6. And it shall be, that the first-born that she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother that is dead, that his name be not blotted out of Israel. 7. And if the man like not to take his brother's wife, then his brother's wife shall go up to the gate unto the elders, and say: 'My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me.' 8. Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him; and if he stand, and say: 'I like not to take her'; 9. then shall his brother's wife draw if the duty of preventing cruelty to animals is invoked against one of the major requirements of Jewish life—Shechitah.

As is well known, the Rabbinical regulations concerning Shechitah, the Jewish mode of slaughtering animals intended for food, are in part due to a desire to prevent the slightest unnecessary suffering to the animal. 'Since the need of procuring food necessitates the slaying of animals, the Law enjoins that the death of the animal should be the easiest. It is not allowed to torment the animal by cutting the throat in a clumsy manner, by pole-axing, or by cutting off a limb while the animal is still alive' (Maimonides). The Jewish method of slaughter is one continuous cut with the sharpest of knives, applied by a skilled operator. Such cut severs all the great blood-vessels of the neck, and produces instantaneous insensibility in the animal. A leading physiologist declares: 'I should be happy to think that my own end were likely to be as swift and painless as the end of these cattle killed in this way undoubtedly is' (Prof. C. Lovatt Evans). Similar opinions in regard to Shechitah have been given some years ago by no less than 446 non-Jewish Professors of physiology and veterinary surgeons in the principal European countries. If, nevertheless, Shechitah is prohibited in enlightened lands like Switzerland and Norway, this is due to the ignorance on the part of the electorate as to what the Jewish method of slaughter actually is. In Nazi Germany such prohibition was enacted not so much out of sympathy with the beast, as out of a desire to inflict pain on human beings: 'they that sacrifice men kiss calves' (Hosea XIII, 2).

(h) 5-10. LEVIRATE MARRIAGE

Levirate marriage (in Latin, levir is a husband's brother) is the technical name for the marriage with the widow of a childless brother (יבום). To avert the calamity of the family line becoming extinct, of a man's name perishing and his property going to others, the surviving brother of such a childless man was required to marry the widow, so as to raise up an heir to that man's name. This custom occurs in various forms among many ancient peoples. It existed in Israel in Patriarchal times (Gen. xxxviii), but is here modified in important particulars.

5. dwell together. Not necessarily in the same community, but at the same time (Talmud).

no child. Heb. ben, in the sense of child, whether male or female. The Rabbis extended its meaning in this instance to grandchild, from this or any other wife.

married abroad. One who is outside the family.
the duty of the husband's brother. He shall take the place of the dead brother; i.e. he shall 'build up the house' which the deceased had begun, and perpetuate his name.

8. speak unto him. 'The elders counsel him as to what is the best course for him to follow' (Sifri). There are cases in which the levirate marriage was inadvisable, and they counselled that the rite of Chalitzah take its place. The latter course has been almost universally followed in later centuries, especially after the formal excommunication of all polygamists by Rabbenu Gershom in the year 1000.

9. loose his shoe. Or, 'strip his sandal.' The loosening of one's shoe by another was emblematic of the transfer of property. It betokened the giving up to that other of some property or right; Ruth iv, 7.

spit before him. This is a departure from the rendering of AJ, as of RV, as their rendering is contrary both to fact and Heb. idiom. Spitting nigh unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit before him; and she shall answer and say: 'So shall it be done unto the man that doth not build up his brother's house.'

10. And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that had his shoe loosed.

¶ 11. When men strive together one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets;

12. then thou shalt cut off her hand, thine eye shall have no pity. ¶ 13. Thou shalt not have in thy bag diverse weights, a great and a small. 14. Thou shalt not have in thy house diverse measures, a great and a small. 15. A perfect and just weight shalt thou have; a perfect and just measure shalt thou have; that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee. 16. For all that do such things, even all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the LORD thy God. *m. ¶ 17. Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way as ye came forth out of Egypt; 18. how he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, all that were enfeebled in thy rear, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God. 19. 10. had his shoe loosed. Or, 'whose sandal was stripped off.' After that, he could nevermore marry her, nor could any of his brothers. She was free to marry 'a stranger'.

11-12. FLAGRANT IMMODESTY

Even in extenuating circumstances, flagrant immodesty is to be dealt with without pity.

11. strive together. lit. 'are wrestling together.' taketh. Seizes with violence.

12. cut off. The Rabbis commuted this severe penalty into a money-fine, varying 'in accordance with the status of the culprit and the victim'. There is no other case of mutilation in the Torah.

13-16. HONEST WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

13. diverse weights. A large one for buying, and a small one for selling.

15. thy days may be long. Fair dealing, integrity in trade, must necessarily promote social happiness and prolong the life of a nation. 'It is a known fact that every kingdom based on justice will stand. Justice is like a building. Injustice is like the cracks in that building, which cause it to fall without a moment's warning' (Ibn Ezra). 'A false balance is an abomination to the LORD: but a perfect weight is His delight' (Prov. xi, 1).

16. all that do unrighteously. A comprehensive summing-up. 'All that do unrighteously either by mouth or deed, in secret or in open' (Ibn Ezra).

17-19. REMEMBERING AMALEK

Whilst Israel was to make justice and brotherly love its guiding rule, it was not to forget that Amalek had perpetrated a cowardly and unprovoked attack on the feeble and hindmost, when the Israelites were marching from Egypt; Exod. xvii, 8-16.

18. met thee. Better, fell on thee.

smote the hindmost. He attacked the rear of the Israelites, the faint and weary stragglers enfeebled by the march.

he feared not God. He was devoid of pity and fundamental humanity; see p. 208.

19. blot out. A people so devoid of natural religion as to kill non-combatants had forfeited all claim to mercy.

fore it shall be, when the LORD thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget.

CHAPTER LIV

נר. CAP. LIV.

1. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear, Break forth into singing, and cry aloud,
thou that didst not travail;
For more are the children of the desolate
Than the children of the married wife,
saith the LORD.

2. Enlarge the place of thy tent,
And let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitations, spare not;
Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes.

3. For thou shalt spread abroad on the right hand and on the left;
And thy seed shall possess the nations,
And make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

4. Fear not, for thou shalt not be ashamed.
Neither be thou confounded, for thou shalt not be put to shame;
For thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth,
And the reproach of thy widowhood shalt thou remember no more.

3. v. מלא ו' ibid. 4. v. קמץ בז"ק

The fifth Haftorah of Consolation. Its message is the everlasting mercy of God. 'For the mountains may depart, and the hills be removed; but My kindness shall not depart from thee.' This entails for the Israelites the sacred duty of imitating God's ways of lovingkindness, by loyal observance of the precepts of humanity and pity proclaimed in the Sidrah.

JERUSALEM REBUILT

1. more are the children. Zion's cities shall be repopulated; Jerusalem desolate was like a woman forsaken. Now, with her exiles returned, she is like the wife re-united with husband and children.

2. enlarge. Because of the increase of Zion's population.

4. the shame of thy youth. The defeats and humiliations in Israel's earlier history.

6. For the LORD hath called thee
As a wife forsaken and grieved in spirit;
And a wife of youth, can she be rejected?
Saith thy God.

7. For a small moment have I forsaken

But with great compassion will I gather thee.

8. In a little wrath I hid My face from

But with everlasting kindness will I have compassion on thee,

For as I have sworn that the waters of

Should no more go over the earth,
So have I sworn that I would not be

Nor rebuke thee.

And the hills be removed;
But My kindness shall not depart from 7-8. God's anger is but momentary; cf. Psalm xxx, 6. Although the years of the Exile seemed interminably long, they will prove but a brief space in the vast sweep of Israel's history.

9-10. Yet another utterance of comfort.

9. for this. i.e. the Exile and the comfort. The Exile is compared to the Flood; and the comfort, to the Divine promise that the Flood should never recur.

1. And it shall be, when thou art come in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and dost possess it, and dwell therein; 2. that thou shalt take of the first of all the fruit of the ground, which thou shalt bring in from thy land that the LORD thy God giveth thee; and thou shalt put it in a basket, and shalt go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to cause His name to dwell there. 3. (5) CONCLUSION OF CODE

(a) XXVI, 1-11. FIRST-FRUIT AND ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE

The present chapter prescribes the rituals that were to accompany the presentation of the first-fruits and the tithe at the Sanctuary. It was to be an occasion of thanksgiving to God, by whose favour the Israelites had been rescued from the hardships of the past, and raised to become a great nation that dwelt in comfort in a rich and fertile land. This beautiful prayer leads us to believe that other sacrifices at the Sanctuary were likewise not offered in silence; cf. Joel II, 17, p. 894.

2. of the first of all the fruit. Not the first of every kind of fruit, but only of the seven kinds mentioned in Deut. viii, 8 as typical of the fruitfulness of the Land. These are:—wheat, barley, vines, figs, pomegranates, olives, and date-honey.

3. I profess. Heb. הִגַּדְתִּי, 'I solemnly proclaim.' Verses 5-10 are a brief epitome of early Jewish history, and constitute the 'profession'. The Rabbis made the exposition of these verses an important part of the Passover Haggadah.

thy God. Thy is used because the priest is here conceived as standing in a special relationship to God; cf. 'The God of Abraham,' in the Liturgy.

I am come. The thank-offering would be the visible proof that the land was now in the possession of the Israelites, and that the Divine Promise had been faithfully fulfilled.

5. speak. Testify. This prayer (v. 5-10) had to be recited in the Hebrew language. Those who could not do so repeated it after the priest. To avoid putting anyone to shame, it was eventually ruled that all must repeat the words after the priest.

a wandering Aramean. Or, 'a nomad Aramean.' Ibn Ezra, Rashbam, and Sforno refer this to Jacob, because of his straying and unsettled life; cf. 'Jacob fled into the field of Aram' (Hosea xii, 13). The Heb. for wandering often means 'astray', 'ready to perish'; cf. Psalm cxix end. The Passover Haggadah renders it, 'An Aramean (i.e. Laban) sought to destroy my father.'

few in number. Seventy souls in all.

7. our affliction. See Exod. i, 11.

LORD heard our voice, and saw our affliction, and our toil, and our oppression. 8. And the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with great terrible-ness, and with signs, and with wonders. 9. And He hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, a land flowing with milk and honey. 10. And now, behold, I have brought the first of the fruit of the land, which Thou, O LORD, hast given me.' And thou shalt set it down before the LORD thy God, and worship before the LORD thy God. 11. And thou shalt rejoice in all the good which the LORD thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thy house, thou, and the Levite, and the stranger that is in the midst of thee. *ii. ¶ 12. When thou hast made

9. milk and honey. This further brings out the contrast with the state of nomads.

10. which Thou, O LORD, hast given me. Refers to the Land and not to the fruits. The above prayer contains two features that are characteristic of all Jewish prayer: (1) recognition of Israel's historic relationship to God; (2) recognition of God as the Source of all blessings.

thou shalt set it down. The bringer of the first-fruits would resume hold of the basket whilst making the declaration contained in v. 5-10, and would now, once again, solemnly deposit it before the Altar.

11. thou shalt rejoice. The yearly dedication of the first-fruits must be made a family festivity, in which, as in the case of the fixed annual Feasts mentioned in xvi, 9-17, the Levite, who had no portion in the land, as well as the 'stranger', were to participate.

The following description of the Procession of the first-fruits to the Temple is given in the Mishnah:—

'How do they set apart the first-fruits? When a man goes down to his field and sees for the first time a ripe fig or a ripe cluster of grapes or a ripe pomegranate, he binds it round with reed-grass and says, "Lo, these are first-fruits."

'How do they take up the first-fruits to Jerusalem? The men of all smaller towns that belonged to the Maamad (i.e. the local delegation to the Temple, see p. 429) gathered together in the town of the Maamad, and spent the night in the open place of the town. Early in the morning the officer of the Maamad said, "Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion, unto the LORD our God."

'They that were near to Jerusalem brought fresh figs and grapes, and they that were far off brought dried figs and raisins. Before them went the ox, having its horns overlaid with gold and a wreath of olive-leaves on its head. The flute was played before them until they drew nigh to Jerusalem. When they had drawn nigh to Jerusalem, they sent messengers before them and bedecked their first-fruits. The rulers and the prefects and the treasurers of the Temple went forth to meet them. According to the honour due to them that came in, used they to go forth. And all the craftsmen in Jerusalem used to rise up before them and greet them, saying, "Brethren, men of such-and-such a place, ye are welcome."

'The flute was played before them until they reached the Temple Mount. When they reached the Temple Mount, even Agrippa the king would take his basket on his shoulder and enter in as far as the Temple Court. When they reached the Temple Court, the Levites sang the song, "I will exalt thee, O LORD, for thou hast raised me up, and not made mine enemies to triumph over me."

'While the basket was yet on his shoulder, a man would recite the passage from I profess this day unto the LORD thy God, until he reached the end of the passage. R. Judah says, Until he reached the words A wandering Aramean was my father. When he reached the word Aramean, he took down the basket from his shoulder and held it by the rim. And the priest put his hand beneath it and waved it; and the man then recited the words from A wandering Aramean until he finished the passage. Then he left the basket by the side of the Altar, and bowed himself down and went his way.

'The rich brought their first-fruits in baskets overlaid with silver and gold, while the poor brought them in wicker baskets of peeled willow-branches: and baskets and first-fruits were given to the priests' (Bikkurim, Chapter iii).

(b) 12-15. TRIENNIAL DISTRIBUTION OF TITHES, AND PRAYER

There were three tithes. The first tithe was applied to the maintenance of the landless Levites; Num. xviii, 21-32. The second tithe was taken by the owner to Jerusalem, where he

I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I put away thereof, being unclean, nor given thereof for the dead; I have hearkened to the voice of the LORD my God, I have done according to all that Thou hast commanded me. 15. Look forth from Thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless Thy people Israel, and the land which Thou hast given us, as Thou didst swear unto our fathers, a land flowing with milk and honey.' *iii. ¶ 16. This day the LORD thy God commandeth thee to do these statutes and ordinances; thou shalt therefore observe and do them with all thy heart, and with all thy soul. 17. Thou hast avouched the LORD this day to be thy God, and that thou wouldst and the members of his family consumed it, or else redeemed it for money; Deut. xiv, 22 f. In the third year, this second tithe was devoted entirely to the poor and dependent classes (xiv, 29), whose sufferings so often excite the compassion or indignation of the Prophets and Psalmists. It was later called מעשר עני, 'the tithe of the poor.' The third year was also known as 'the year of removal'. In it the landowner had to remove all his tithes out of the house; that is, pay all his arrears. This 'removal' was accompanied by a solemn declaration, and a prayer for Divine blessing on Israel.

nor given thereof for the dead. Not used any part of the tithe to provide a coffin or grave-clothes for a dead person (Sifri), or towards a meal in the house of mourning. Some commentators refer these words to the Egyptian custom of placing articles of food inside the tomb. According to others, the allusion is to actual sacrifices offered to the dead in order to render them propitious to the survivors. However, the cult of the dead is opposed to both the letter and spirit of the Torah; see xviii, 11 and Psalm cvi, 28.

(c) 16-19. FORMULATION OF THE COVENANT BETWEEN GOD AND ISRAEL

17. avouched. Avowed, acknowledged; -lit. 'thou hast caused the LORD to say' (Herxheimer); probably a technical legal term by which either of the two parties to a covenant made the other utter a declaration of his obligation under it. Israel, by pledging himself to obedience to all that God hath enjoined, has given occasion to Him to declare Himself to be Israel's God.

walk in His ways, and keep His statutes, and His commandments, and His ordinances, and hearken unto His voice. 18. And the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be His own treasure, as He hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all His commandments; 19. and to make thee high above all nations that He hath made, in praise, and in name, and in glory; and that thou mayest be a holy people unto the LORD thy God, as He hath spoken.*iv.

CHAPTER XXVII

1. And Moses and the elders of Israel commanded the people, saying: 'Keep all the commandment which I command you this day. 2. And it shall be on the day when ye shall pass over the Jordan unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, that thou shalt set thee up great stones, and plaster them with plaster. 3. And thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over; that thou mayest go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, a land flowing with

18. the LORD hath avouched thee. In the same way, God hath given occasion to the Israelites to say that they were His treasured People, in accordance with Exodus xix, 5, 6.

19. make thee high above all nations. Such is the glorious distinction in store for an Israel that is obedient and loyal. The idea is elaborated in xxviii, 10, 'And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the LORD is called upon thee.'

as He hath spoken. See Exodus xix, 6, 'And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation.'

D. MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE ENFORCEMENT OF THE LAW (XXVII-XXX)

CHAPTER XXVII. PROCEDURE ON CROSSING JORDAN

The nation, upon entering the land, was to declare the terms of its tenure by expressive ceremonies. These are four in number. The Law was to be written on twelve stones at Mt. Ebal; an Altar was to be erected there; the Covenant was to be ratified on Ebal and Gerizim; and twelve dooms on various malefactors were to be pronounced; see Josh. viii, 30-35.

1-4. Erection of Stones for the inscription of the Law—a symbolic act, declaring that the Israelites took possession of the land by virtue of their covenant with God, and on condition of their own faithfulness thereto.

great stones. As they were to contain 'all the words of this law'. Some commentators have held that only a brief summary of the Law could have been inscribed on the stones. However, since the discovery of the Hammurabi Code, consisting of 232 paragraphs, with a lengthy introduction and conclusion, in all about 8,000 words, engraved on one block of diorite, it is seen that the laws of Deuteronomy, or even the whole Torah, could have been written on twelve stones. The Behistun inscription of Darius is, in its triple form, twice as long as the Code (xii-xxvi), and is carved on the solid rock. There is, therefore, no reasonable doubt that, as Saadyah and Ibn Ezra hold, the 613 Precepts of the Torah were inscribed on those great stones.

Such writing would not long survive the winter rainstorms of Palestine; but the purpose was not so much permanency, as that the Law be before the eyes of the Israelites at the time when they heard the Blessings and the Curses.

5-8. BUILDING AN ALTAR

This command is not contrary to chap. xii, that an Altar be erected only in the Central Sanctuary, as the latter law came into force only after the conquest of the Holy Land.

It is noteworthy that the building of an Altar, i.e. the institution of Public Worship, was to be the first duty of the Israelites on their entering into Canaan. Throughout the ages, provision for public worship and the religious instruction of the children was ever the first care of the loyal Jew on coming into a new land.

5. no iron tool. See Exod. xx, 22. 'The purpose of the Altar is to promote peace between Israel and his Father in Heaven. Let it not, therefore, be polluted by the touch of an iron tool, the symbol of division and destruction' (Talmud).

6. unhewn stones. lit. 'whole,' or, 'peaceful stones,' the adjective שלמות being of the same root as שלום, 'peace.' The Altar, whose purpose is the expiation of sin, can only fulfil its mission when peace and brotherhood reign in Israel.

7. peace-offerings. An emblem of Israel's peaceful association with God.

8. upon the stones. Not on the stones of the Altar, which were rough and unhewn, but upon those of v. 4.

very plainly. Heb. באר היטב, so that the words of the Law could be easily read and understood. 'In 70 languages,' is the deep comment of the Rabbis, as its message was for all the children of men. They welcomed any serious attempt to make the Scriptures known and understood by those unable to read the Hebrew Original. 'The words baer hetev, demanding that the words on the stones of the Altar be lucidly explained, gave rise to the School of Sopherim, the Scribes, whose office it was to read the Book of the Law of God, distinctly, giving the sense, and causing the people to understand the reading (Nehemiah viii, 8). In time, this activity resulted in the various Targumim, the versions in the Aramaic vernacular of Onkelos and Jonathan ben Uzziel, and in the Greek of Aquila, the pupil of Akiba. In the course of the ages, the Scribe of old became the Rabbi of to-day. He expounds the Law at the solemn convocations in the synagogue, applies it to the every-day needs and problems besetting the lives of the worshipper, and perpetuates it by teaching it diligently to the children of the community under his guidance' (Schechter).

The fulfilment of the command concerning the stones and Altar is given in Josh. viii, 30-32.

9-10. 'NOBLESSE OBLIGE'

9. this day. The erection of the Altar and the initiation of the sacrificial rites connected therewith, that were to take effect on the Israelites' entry into Canaan, made them become God's people, charged with the obligation of fulfilling His commandments and statutes. The consequences of obedience and disobedience are given in the next chapter.

11-14. MANNER OF THE SOLEMN BLESSING AND DOOM

The ceremony was antiphonal in character, the Levites speaking, and the people responding with an Amen. According to Tradition, the Levites stood round the Ark in some spot in the valley, midway between Gerizim and Ebal. They would first turn towards Gerizim and pronounce the Blessing, and the whole multitude on the slopes answered Amen. Turning then to Ebal, they would pronounce the Doom, followed by the same response. 'Never did human imagination conceive a scene so imposing, so solemn, so likely to impress the whole people with deep and enduring awe, as the final ratification of their polity commanded by the dying Lawgiver' (Milman).

12. to bless. The Blessings, however, are not mentioned. According to the Talmud, a Blessing and a Doom were pronounced alternately, the Blessing being in each case the negative form of the Doom. Thus the first Blessing would be, 'Blessed is the man who maketh not a graven or molten image,' and so on.

14. the Levites. The Levitical priests. speak. Solemnly pronounce.

15-26. THE SOLEMN DOOMS

In their clarity and succinctness, these denunciations recall the Decalogue. They relate to extreme cases of irreligion and immorality: (1) idolatry; (2) dishonour of parents; (3) removal of landmarks; (4) want of humanity to the blind; (5) injustice to the helpless; (6-9) incest and immorality; (10) murder; (11) bribery; and (12) general disobedience of the Law. The offences selected are such as could not readily be brought to justice before a human tribunal.

15. cursed be. Or, 'cursed is.' The words announce the inevitable result in God's righteous government of a certain line of conduct.

Amen. 'So be it'; see p. 591. On the prohibition, cf. iv, 16.

16. dishonoureth. The Heb. is the exact opposite of 'honour thy father and thy mother'; cf. Exod. xxi, 17; Lev. xx, 9.

17. his neighbour's landmark. See Deut. xix, 14.

18. the blind. This includes the inexperienced and morally weak, who by disingenuous advice can be led to commit irretrievable, or even fatal, mistakes (Rashi); see p. 500.

19. that perverteth the justice. See Deut. xxiv, 17. Moffatt renders, 'A curse on the man who tampers with the rights of an alien, an orphan, or a widow.'

20. his father's skirt. See on Deut. xxiii, 1; Lev. xviii, 8.

skirt. And all the people shall say: Amen. ¶ 21. Cursed be he that lieth with any manner of beast. And all the people shall say: Amen. ¶ 22. Cursed be he that lieth with his sister, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother. And all the people shall say: Amen. ¶ 23. Cursed be he that lieth with his mother-in-law. And all the people shall say: Amen. ¶ Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbour in secret. And all the people shall say: Amen. ¶ 25. Cursed be he that taketh a bribe to slay an innocent person. And all the people shall say: Amen. ¶ 26. Cursed be he that confirmeth not the words of this law to do them. And all the people shall say: Amen.'

1. And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe to do all His commandments which I command thee this day, that the LORD thy God will set thee on high above all the nations of the earth. 2. And all these blessings shall come upon thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God. 3. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field. 4. Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy

21. any manner of beast. See Lev. xviii, 23.

22. with his sister. By either parent; cf. Lev. xviii, 9, 17. As such marriages were often contracted before the Giving of the Torah, it was necessary to emphasize their heinousness.

23. mother-in-law. 'The Persians married their nearest blood-relatives; thus, Cambyses had two of his sisters in his harem. Similar abominations had to be fought in the early Church' (Koenig).

24. smiteth his neighbour. 'By calumny' (Rashi), which smites the honour, peace, and happiness of one's neighbour; cf. Exod. xxi, 12.

25. bribe. Cf. Exod. xxiii, 8; Deut. xvi, 19.

26. that confirmeth not. 'A comprehensive summing up of the foregoing in general terms, making the Torah, as a whole, binding on every individual Israelite, as contrasted with Israel' (Wiener).

THE BLESSINGS AND THE WARNINGS

import. 'The Prophet has taught the higher law; he has rooted all human duty, both to God and man, in love of God; and now he tries to enlist man's natural fear and hope as allies of his highest principle' (Harper). The Warning (תּוֹכַחָה), as this chapter is called in Hebrew, is far more detailed than the parallel Warning in Lev. xxvi. On the significance of these Warnings, see p. 542; and p. 555, on their similarity with Code Hammurabi. 'The language rises in this chapter to its sublimest strains: and the prophecies respecting the dispersion and sufferings of the Jewish people in latter days are among the most remarkable in Scripture' (Speaker's Bible).

1-14. THE BLESSINGS

2. overtake thee. The blessings (and curses, v. 15) are personified as actual beings overtaking their objects.

The LORD will cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thee; they shall come out against thee one way, and shall flee before thee seven ways. 8. The LORD will command the blessing with thee in thy barns, and in all that thou puttest thy hand unto; and He will bless thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee. 9. The LORD will establish thee for a holy people unto Himself, as He hath sworn unto thee; if thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, and walk in His ways. 10. And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the LORD is called upon thee; and they shall be afraid of thee. 11. And the LORD will make thee overabundant for good, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, in the land which the LORD swore unto thy fathers to give thee. 12. The LORD will open unto thee His good treasure the heaven to give the rain of thy land in its season, and to bless all the work of thy hand; and thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow. 13. And the LORD will make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if thou shalt hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them; 14. and shalt not turn aside from any of the words which I command you this day, to the right hand, or to the left, to go after other gods to serve them. ¶ 15. But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe to do all His commandments and His

6. comest in . . . goest out. The blessing of safety in all the manifold activities of ordinary life.

7-13. The Divine blessing will rest also on their larger enterprises, whether in peace or war. Theirs will be victory over enemies; material success in all forms of labour, accompanied by religious and cultural supremacy among the nations.

7. seven ways. A round number, indicating a great quantity. The compact array of the advancing foe is contrasted with his dispersion, in manifold directions, after defeat.

9. a holy people. Set apart for Himself, and therefore inviolable.

10. called upon thee. i.e. that He is thy Owner, and, as such, surrounds thee with His protection.

12. good treasure. The celestial reservoirs, in which the rain was conceived to be stored; cf. Job. xxxviii, 22.

shalt lend. A sign of wealth, as well as of power and independence.

13. only. Here in the meaning of 'nothing but'; ever rising in reputation.

15-68. THE WARNINGS

In the remainder of this chapter, the Lawgiver sets forth in words of awful power the fact that God's laws have a reverse, as well as an obverse, side; that the Divine Covenant was indeed a hope statutes which I command thee this day; that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee. 16. Cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field. 17. Cursed shall be thy basket and thy kneading-trough. 18. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the young of thy flock. 19. Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out. 20. The LORD will send upon thee cursing, discomfiture, and rebuke, in all that thou puttest thy hand unto to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the evil of thy doings, whereby thou hast forsaken Me. 21. The LORD will make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until He have consumed thee from off the land, whither thou goest in to possess it. 22. The LORD will smite thee with consumption, and with fever, and with inflammation, and with fiery heat, and with drought, and with blasting, and with mildew; and they shall pursue thee until thou perish. 23. And thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. 24. The LORD will make the rain of thy land powder and dust; from heaven and an encouragement, but also a responsibility and a warning. 'The sublimity of the denunciations surpasses anything in the oratory or the poetry of the whole world. Nothing, except the real horrors of Jewish history, can approach the tremendous maledictions which warned Israel against the violation of the Law' (Milman). 'Three times does the wave of holy passion rise and fall. At first the exuberance of the woes enumerated overpowers our attention; the musically parallel sentences, which in other speeches make perorations, here come for intervals of relief. Another stream of denunciation brings the serving the LORD with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart by reason of the abundance of all things, into contrast with the serving of the enemy in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things; and the siege laid by the enemy is extended in picture to the last horrors the mind can conceive. Yet another flood of speech begins with the "glorious and fearful" Name; and there passes before us the fading of the life of promise into plagues and exile; in exile, the trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and pining of soul; until for a final climax the original salvation of Israel is reversed in a voluntary returning to the land of bondage, the people selling themselves to their enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, a climax yet more final than this, for "no man shall buy you" ' (Moulton).

The curses are national and not individual. They are all of them conditional, declaring what God would bring on Israel in the event of its complete apostasy. Israel's survival of the Divine Judgment is due to the fact that Israel always possessed a 'righteous remnant'.

16-19. These curses take the same verbal form as the blessing, v. 1-6, and express failure in every department of national life.

20-26. Disastrous years, fevers, droughts, and ruinous defeat in battle.

20. cursing. The general term, particulars of which follow.

discomfiture. Inability to complete a task undertaken (Ibn Ezra).

rebuke. Failure to enjoy the fruit of one's labours through constant anxiety and vexation.

21. pestilence. Any dangerous epidemic.

22. will smite thee. With seven plagues; five on men, and two on crops. The identification of the names of the plagues is by Macalister.

consumption. A wasting fever of the Mediterranean type.

fever. Malaria.

inflammation. Typhoid fever.

fiery heat. lit. 'irritation', erysipelas.

24. powder and dust. An allusion to the sirocco, with its fogs of sand and dust.

shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed. 25. The LORD will cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies; thou shalt go out one way against them, and shalt flee seven ways before them; and thou shalt be a horror unto all the kingdoms of the earth. 26. And thy carcasses shall be food unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and there shall be none to frighten them away. ¶ 27. The LORD will smite thee with the boil of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. 28. The LORD will smite thee with madness, and with blindness, and with astonishment of heart. 29. And thou shalt grope at noonday, as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not make thy ways prosperous; and thou shalt be only oppressed and robbed alway, and there shall be none to save thee. 30. Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her; thou shalt build a house, and thou shalt not dwell therein; thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not use the fruit thereof. 31. Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof; thine ass shall be violently taken away from before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee; thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies; and thou shalt have none to save thee. 32. Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look, and fail with longing for them all the day; and there shall be nought in the power of thy hand. 33. The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up;

25. a horror unto. Or, 'a shuddering unto'; an awe-inspiring spectacle.

26. frighten. As Rizpah's mother-love did, II Sam. xxi, 10. So complete would be the rout, that the dead would lie unburied.

27-37. Incurable diseases, mental blindness, a prey to cruel invaders, and ignominious exile.

27. the boil of Egypt. Cf. vii, 15.

28. astonishment of heart. Dismay; confusion of mind.

29. grobe. Reduced to blind helplessness.

as the blind gropeth in darkness. 'Rabbi José said, All my days I grieved at my not being able to explain this verse; for what difference can it be to the blind man, whether he gropeth in the light or in the dark? Until one night I was walking in the road, and met a blind man with a lighted torch in his hand. "Son," said I, "why dost thou carry that torch? thou canst not see its light." "Friend," replied the blind man, "true it is I cannot see, but as long as I carry this torch in my hand, the sons of men see me, take pity on me, and save me from pitfalls, from thorns and briers" (Talmud). Thus, the apparently superfluous phrase in darkness was to emphasize the greatness of the calamity that would befall Israel. Even at noonday they were to grope as the blind do in the darkness, without a ray of light to exhibit their distress to the compassion of men.

30. not use the fruit thereof. See xx, 6. The helpless inhabitants would be at the mercy of insatiable conquerors, so that they could call nothing they possessed—not even their wives and children—their own.

31. before thine eyes. Whilst thou art looking on, unable to raise a hand to prevent it.

32. thy sons and thy daughters. History records several large deportations of Israelites to distant lands beyond the Euphrates.

and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed alway; 34. so that thou shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see. 35. The LORD will smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a sore boil, where of thou canst not be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the crown of thy head. 36. The LORD will bring thee, and thy king whom thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation that thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone. 37. And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword, among all the peoples whither the LORD shall lead thee away. ¶ 38. Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather little in; for the locust shall consume it. 39. Thou shalt plant vineyards and dress them, but thou shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes; for the worm shall eat them. 40. Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout all thy borders, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil; for thine olives shall drop off. 41. Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but they shall not be thine; for they shall go into captivity. 42. All thy trees and the fruit of thy land shall the locust possess. ¶ 43. The stranger that is in the midst of thee shall mount up above thee higher and higher; and thou shalt come down lower and lower. 44. 37. a proverb. A taunt.
byword. lit. 'the object of biting remarks.'

38-44. Impoverished Israel reduced to dependence on the resident foreigner.

41. shall not be thine. With transportation to a foreign land, estrangement from their fathers, Faith and People must inevitably follow. Such estrangement is deemed a curse in Mal. iii, 24; see p. 970. Byalik calls attention to a similar estrangement of the children from their Faith and People in the present age, and considers it the supreme tragedy of the Spiritual Golus of the emancipation era.

43. the stranger. He who had received the charity of the Israelites, to him would they now have to look for commiseration. They must learn to live as servants where they had once been masters.

45.-48. The reason for these terrible calamities.

45. because. A return to the keynote of this whole chapter, v. 15.

46. for a sign and for a wonder. The calamities shall testify to the truth of the Divine interposition in history. As soon as they were prepared to acknowledge that what they suffered was not unmerited, there was still soundness in them, and they would receive mercy at the hands of God.

upon thy seed for ever. i.e. as long as they maintained their disobedience and rebelliousness. But, as stated in Deut. xxx, 1-3, should they overtake thee, till thou be destroyed; because thou didst not hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep His commandments and His statutes which He commanded thee. 46. And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever; 47. because thou didst not serve the LORD thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, by reason of the abundance of all things; 48. therefore shalt thou serve thine enemy whom the LORD shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things; and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee. ¶ 49. The LORD will bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as the vulture swoopeth down; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; 50. a nation of fierce countenance, that shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favour to the young. 51. And he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy ground, until thou be destroyed; that also shall not leave thee corn, wine, or oil, the increase of thy kine, or the young of thy flock, until he have caused thee to perish. 52. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fortified walls come down, wherein thou didst trust, throughout all thy land; and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which the LORD thy God hath given thee. 53. And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters whom the LORD thy God hath given thee; in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemies shall straiten thee. 54. The man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil against his brother, and against the wife of his bosom, and against the remnant of his children whom he hath remaining; 55. so that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children whom he shall eat, because he hath nothing left him; in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemy shall straiten thee in all thy gates. 56. The tender and delicate woman among you, who would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil against the husband of her bosom, and

56-58. CONCLUDING WARNING

58. fear this glorious and awful Name. The adjective 'glorious' has reference to the majesty of God, to Whom fear (i.e. reverence) is due; 'awful' denotes God's awe-inspiring nature. Name is occasionally used as a synonym for Deity, or as denoting the Divine Presence; cf. Lev. xxiv, 11.

59. wonderful. Extraordinary, exceptional.

63. the LORD rejoiced over you. When a son walks in the right way, it is the father's joy to help him and to show him kindness. Should, however, the son fall into evil ways, then it is equally the father's 'joy' to find some means—even painful ones—to bring him back to the right path. In like manner, God 'rejoices' to bring upon sinful Israel the trials and sufferings of exile, in order thereby to purify and elevate him, and thus restore him to His favour.

64. shall scatter thee . . . and stone. See on v. 36.

65. among these nations. Israel is to have no rest—never-ceasing anxiety, life in perpetual jeopardy, an unendurable present, and a future of undefined terrors.

And the LORD shall bring thee back into Egypt in ships, by the way whereof I said unto thee: 'Thou shalt see it no more again'; and there ye shall sell yourselves unto your enemies for bondmen and for bondwomen, and no man shall buy you. ¶ 69. These are the words of the covenant which the LORD commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, beside the covenant which He made with them in Horeb. *vii.

gradual extinction of all hope; or, the eyes refuse their office, because they see only horror. languishing of soul. A mind tortured and restless.

66. life shall hang in doubt before thee. Like an object suspended by a tender thread and held in front of one's eyes—about to fall down and break at any moment; but see next comment. no assurance of thy life. 'Thou shalt expect every moment to be thy last' (Driver). Better, thou shalt not believe in thy life; i.e. thou canst not believe that these happenings are happening to thee, that they are real; deluding thyself with the vain hope that it is all an evil dream (Steinthal).

67. in the morning thou shalt say. Even as he that suffers acute pain yearns for the hours to pass. This v. graphically depicts the agonized uncertainty, protracted by day and by night.

68. bring thee back into Egypt. A culminating calamity. God repeals the prohibition mentioned in xvii, 16, and they would be returned to Egypt, to the degradation of their erstwhile Egyptian serfdom. At the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, both Titus and Hadrian consigned multitudes of Jews into slavery; and Egypt received a large proportion of those slaves.

in ships. They came forth from Egypt '600,000 men on foot', a disciplined host of free warriors, but would be carried thither cooped up in slave-ships. The Romans had a fleet in the Mediterranean, and this was an easier and safer way of transporting prisoners than by land across the desert.

no man shall buy you. Josephus records that when, at the Destruction of Jerusalem, the Roman troops grew weary of slaughter, 97,000 of the younger prisoners were spared. Those over seventeen years were sent to the mines, or to the arenas to fight as gladiators or against wild beasts; those under seventeen were sold as slaves; but the market was so glutted that, though offered at nominal prices, none would buy them! Those who remained unpurchased were sent into confinement, where they perished by hundreds and thousands from hunger.

69. SUPERScription

'If, in Hellas, the beautiful was conceived to be the fruit of joyful play; if, in Rome, serious will was held to lead to power and right; in Jerusalem, everything high and holy was deemed to be the vintage of suffering and sorrow' (Steinthal).

In this and the succeeding chapters, Moses sums up the argument in the previous discourses. He reviews the journey of Israel from Egypt to Moab. Israel now stands ready to enter God's Covenant; let none dream to escape the curse of disobedience. God's wrath will be manifest

And when ye came unto this place, Sihon the king of Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, came out against us unto battle, and we smote them. 7. And we took their land, and gave it for an inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of the Manassites. 8. Observe therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may make all that ye do to prosper.

And the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

2. For, behold, darkness shall cover the earth,

And gross darkness the peoples;
But upon thee the LORD will arise,
And His glory shall be seen upon thee.

3. And nations shall walk at thy light,
And kings at the brightness of thy rising.

4. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see:

They all are gathered together, and come to thee;

Thy sons come from far,
And thy daughters are borne on the side.

5. Then thou shalt see and be radiant,
And thy heart shall throb and be enlarged;

Because the abundance of the sea shall be turned unto thee,

The wealth of the nations shall come unto thee.

v. 4. דָּם' בפתח

The Sidrah brings the Second Discourse of the Lawgiver to a close with the Divine promise to make Israel 'high above all nations.' The Haftorah of the sixth Sabbath of Consolation gives the highest spiritual interpretation of that promise ('Upon thee the LORD will arise, and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And nations shall walk at thy light'). It proclaims in ecstatic terms the glories which Jerusalem will enjoy in the era of Divine favour. The light of Deliverance, so long waited for, is about to shine. 'Thick darkness enfolds the earth, the darkness which typifies alienation from God. But God has begun to reveal Himself anew—not as yet to the whole earth, but to its central people, Israel. As "the children of Israel had light in their dwellings" when there was "thick darkness in all the land of Egypt", so now there are beaming over Israel the first rays of a newly risen sun' (Cheyne).

1. arise. Zion is addressed: arise out of the night of despair and oppression.

thy light is come. Thy salvation is at hand (Kimchi).

2. shall cover. Better, doth cover. The Prophet sees the kingdoms of the earth breaking up amid gloom and misery; with Israel alone is light and joy in the LORD (M. Arnold).

3. at thy light. Or, 'towards thy light'; from the outer darkness, to share the Divine light with Israel.

4. thy sons. The longing of her heart can only be satisfied by the restoration of her banished children.

7. All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee,
The rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee;
They shall come up with acceptance on Mine altar,
And I will glorify My glorious house.

8. Who are these that fly as a cloud,
And as the doves to their cotes?

9. Surely the isles shall wait for Me,
And the ships of Tarshish first,
To bring thy sons from far,
Their silver and their gold with them,
For the name of the LORD thy God,
And for the Holy One of Israel, because He hath glorified thee.

10. And aliens shall build up thy walls,
And their kings shall minister unto thee;
For in My wrath I smote thee,
But in My favour have I had compassion on thee.

Day and night, they shall not be shut;
That men may bring unto thee the wealth of the nations,
And their kings in procession.

glorify. Beautify.

8. doves to their cotes. Having looked landward and watched the coming of the caravans, the Prophet now looks seaward and sees the white-sailed ships speeding across the Mediterranean to Palestinian harbours, as if they were a flight of doves returning to their nests. The emphasis is also on the swiftness of their flight, for 'they fly more swiftly on their return to their nests with food for their young than when they departed' (Kimchi).

11. in procession. Or, 'led with them' (RV). 'Accompanied by a large retinue' (Kimchi); or, 'one after another' (Luzzatto). Realizing that their prosperity depends on their relations with Israel (see next v.), the kings of the distant lands come in procession, one after the other, to Zion, accompanied by their retinue and followers.

12. that nation. Every nation shall fail unless it serves the LORD, the righteous God of Israel, through Whom alone is salvation. 'It was to be a voluntary submission before the evidence of Jerusalem's spiritual superiority' (G. A. Smith).

XXIX, 9-28. MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE
CONTINUED

Moses reviews the different orders of people before him, all assembled to enter into a Covenant with God: heads of tribes, elders, officers, all the men of Israel, the little ones, the wives, the strangers; he thinks of others who shall hereafter take part in such solemn acts. He warns every man or woman, every family or tribe, against nourishing evil in their hearts, and trusting to escape in the general righteousness. He proclaims how the sinful individual shall be separated for doom, the land of a sinful tribe overthrown in a curse. But he adds words of mercy; and he makes solemn appeals to choose life and not death (Moulton).

9. standing this day all of you. Moses spoke these words to the multitudes of Israel, whom he had assembled to stand before God on the day of his death (Rashi).

Israelites. Thus, all classes of the population are to be included in the Covenant.

11. and into His oath. A covenant sealed by an oath; Gen. xxvi, 28.

13-28. ISRAEL, PRESENT AND FUTURE, IS A UNITY

The Covenant is one which must be held to bind not only the living who were present that day, but their distant posterity as well.

15. for ye know. 'For ye have experience of the idolatry rife both in Egypt and among the other nations bordering on Canaan; and can judge consequently of the necessity of including future generations in the terms of the obligation' (Driver).

And the generation to come, your children that shall rise up after you, and the foreigner that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses wherewith the LORD hath made it sick; 22. and that the whole land thereof is brimstone, and salt, and a burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboiim, which the LORD overthrew in His anger, and in His wrath; 23. even all the nations shall gall. Heb. rosh, a poisonous herb.

gall and wormwood. Poison and bitterness—the consequences of idolatry. The sinner is here pictured as a bitter root bearing deadly fruit, destroying the life of a nation.

18. bless himself in his heart. Congratulate or delude himself. Because of God's oath to Israel, this man flatters himself that he is secure, no matter how recklessly he indulges in evil.

that the watered be swept away with the dry. Or, 'to sweep away the well-watered soil with the dry'; a proverbial phrase, denoting a hurricane of destruction that would annihilate the community through the sinfulness of individual members here and there. As often in Scripture, the consequences of the idolater's self-congratulation are here represented ironically as his purpose. Others translate: 'to add drunkenness to thirst';

i.e. to increase desire by indulgence; as indulgence increases desire, and desire in turn hastens to satisfy itself by indulgence (Maimonides, M. Lazarus).

19. shall be kindled. i.e. shall break forth in a destructive fire; cf. Psalm xviii, 9.

shall lie upon him. The Heb. root of this word is used to denote the crouching of a wild beast at the moment of pouncing upon its prey. So here, retribution will pounce upon the evil-doer unawares.

20. shall separate him. 'If the sinners be a whole tribe, then shall it be sundered from the other tribes, and its members carried away into exile' (Ibn Ezra)—a fate which later befell the Ten Tribes (II Kings xvii, 6).

21–28. The whole land and people will suffer for apostasy, and future generations and the most distant nations will learn with horror God's judgment upon the depopulated land.

22. brimstone . . . wrath. The imagery is drawn from the desolate surroundings of the Dead Sea; Gen. xix, 24–29.

The secret things belong unto the LORD our God; but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law. *iv (ii).

25. not allotted unto them. See on iv, 19.

27. as it is this day. As we see it to be the case now; cf. II, 30.

28. the secret things . . . that we may do. 'The secret things (of the sin) are for God to discover, but the judgment when revealed is before us for ever as a warning' (Moulton). In Jewish thought, this v. has been made into a great law of life. There are limits to what mortal beings can know. Certain things are in the hands of God alone, and must be left with Him. But there are other things which are 'revealed'—the words and ordinances of the Torah—and to these we and all successive generations must render willing obedience. Benjamin Szold pointed out that the accentuation likewise emphasizes this truth. If we follow the accents (גרשיים), this v. reads: 'The secret things belong to the LORD our God and the revealed things; for us and our children it is to carry out all the words of this Law.'

This v. is one of the fifteen passages of the Bible in which words (לנו ולבנינו ע) are dotted. The most probable explanation of these dots is, that they were intended to call attention to important homiletical teachings in connection with the words thus dotted.

CHAPTER XXX

MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE:
CONCLUDED1-10. OMNIPOTENCE OF REPENTANCE: RETURN FROM EXILE

A fuller restatement of the vital lesson taught in iv, 29-31. Punishment is not God's last word unto Israel. If Israel seeks God, Israel will find mercy at the hands of the LORD, and be brought back to the Land of his fathers.

1. and thou shalt bethink thyself. A consoling prediction that Israel's woes would lead to Israel's betterment (תשובה).

2. shalt return. Israel would take to heart the hard lessons taught him by his exile.

3. God will turn thy captivity. He will change thy fortune, restore thee to thy former happy state (Luzzatto, Ewald). The Talmud renders it, 'And the LORD thy God will return with thy captivity.' When Israel was in exile, God was, so to speak, in exile along with him. The Divine Cause which it is Israel's mission to champion was in eclipse; see p. 886.

the LORD thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the peoples, whither the LORD thy God hath scattered thee. 4. If any of thine that are dispersed be in the uttermost parts of heaven, from thence will the LORD thy God gather thee, and from thence will He fetch thee. 5. And the LORD thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and He will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. 6. And the LORD thy God will open thy heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. *v (*iii). 7. And the LORD thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, that persecuted thee. 8. And thou shalt return and hearken to the voice of the LORD, and do all His commandments which I command thee this day. 9. And the LORD thy God will make thee over-abundant in all the work of thy hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good; for the LORD will again rejoice over thee for good, as He rejoiced over thy fathers; 10. if thou shalt hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep His commandments and His statutes which are written in this book of the law; if thou turn unto the LORD thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul. *vi. ¶ 11. For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not too hard for thee, neither is it far off. 12. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say: 'Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, and make us to hear it, that we may do it?' 13. Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say: 'Who shall go over the sea for us, 4-6. Though the Israelites be scattered to the four winds of heaven, yet will God reunite them in the Land of the Fathers, and work in Israel a change of heart.

6. open thy heart. So that it be no longer closed up, impenetrable, and unreceptive of spiritual teaching. God would help Israel to fulfil his ideal of duty. The words of Jer. xxxi, 32, 'I will put my law in their inward parts, and in their heart will I write it,' are taken by Nachmanides to express this particular teaching of Deuteronomy.

7-10. Israel will again enjoy the blessings of obedience on his own land.

11-14. THE NATURE OF GOD'S COMMANDMENT God's commandment is not too hard nor distant; but nigh, clear, and practicable. Sheer life and death, good and evil, are set before Israel. Obedience means blessing; disobedience, destruction.

11. this commandment. In the collective sense, meaning all the laws in Deuteronomy.

too hard. Or, 'too wonderful' to understand and beyond one's power to do; nothing abstruse or esoteric, like the heathen mysteries (Hirsch).

neither is it far off. Out of reach, out of ken, far removed from the sphere of ordinary life.

12. it is not in heaven. It is not something inaccessible or supernatural, making it necessary for a man to scale the heights of heaven to find it, and bring it down to earth!

13. beyond the sea. In some distant land, among strange peoples.

and bring it unto us, and make us to hear it, that we may do it?" 14. But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it. *vii (iv).

¶ 15. See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil, 16. in that I command thee this day to love the LORD thy God, to walk in His ways, and to keep His commandments and His statutes and His ordinances; then thou shalt live and multiply, and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest in to possess it. 17. But if thy heart turn away, and thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; *m. 18. I declare unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish; ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over the Jordan to go in to possess it. 19. I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before thee life and death, the blessing and the 14. the word is very nigh. The word of God is on the lips of fathers and children, teachers and taught. Man can carry the Torah, unlike the Sanctuary, everywhere with him. 'When thou walkest, it shall lead thee, when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee; and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee' (Prov. vi, 22). R. Jose the son of Kisma applied those words to the Torah, thus: when thou walkest, it shall lead thee—in this world; when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee—in the grave; and when thou wakest, it shall talk with thee—in the world to come.

that thou mayest do it. Moses does not say it is easy, 'but more justly and finely, that it carries with it the conscience and provocation to its fulfilment by man' (G. A. Smith).

15-20. PERORATION TO THE DISCOURSES OF DEUTERONOMY

A final reminder, as in xi, 26, that two ways lie before them, one leading to life and good, the other to death and evil. The choice lies in their own hands. Only if they choose wisely will they enjoy long life and prosperity upon the land which they were about to inherit.

19. I call heaven and earth to witness. Heaven and earth are chosen as witnesses because they abide for ever, outlasting all the changes of human life; iv, 26, Micah vi, 1.

FREE-WILL IN JUDAISM

therefore choose life. Jewish ethics is rooted in the doctrine of human responsibility, that is, freedom of the will. 'All is in the hands of God, except the fear of God,' is an undisputed maxim of the Rabbis. And 'to subject our will to the will of our father in Heaven' is the great purpose of man's life on earth. Josephus states that the doctrine of Free-will was maintained by the Pharisees both against the Sadducees, who attributed everything to chance, and the Essenes, who ascribed all the actions of man to predestination and Divine Providence. 'Free-will is granted to every man. If he desires to incline towards the good way, and be righteous, he has the power to do so; and if he desires to incline towards the unrighteous way, and be a wicked man, he has also the power to do so. Since this power of doing good or evil is in our own hands, and since all the wicked deeds which we have committed have been committed with our full consciousness, it befits us to turn in penitence and forsake our evil deeds; the power of doing so being still in our hands. Now this matter is a very important principle; nay, it is the pillar of the Law and of the commandments' (Maimonides).

We are free agents in so far as our choice between good and evil is concerned. This is an undeniable fact of human nature; but it is an equally undeniable fact that the sphere in which that choice is exercised is limited for us by heredity and environment. As the earth follows the sun in its vast sweep through heavenly space, and yet at the same time daily revolves on its axis, even so man, in the midst of the larger national and cultural whole of which he is a part, ever revolves in his own orbit. His sphere of individual conduct is largely of man's own making. It depends upon him alone whether his life be a cosmos—order, law, unity ruling in it; or whether it be chaos—desolate and void, and darkness for evermore hovering over it. Thus, in the moral universe man ever remains his own master. Though man cannot always even half control his destiny, God has given the reins of man's conduct altogether into his hands. See Exod. xx, 11, p. 298.

to cleave to Him, is to have life and length of days. Ibn Ezra translates, with RV Text, 'for he is thy life,' and interprets the phrase in a mystical sense as 'God is our life.'

CHAPTER LXI

CAP. LXI. סא

10. I will greatly rejoice in the LORD,
My soul shall be joyful in my God;
For He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation,
He hath covered me with the robe of victory,
As a bridegroom putteth on a priestly diadem,
And as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11. For as the earth bringeth forth her growth,
And as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth;

שׁוֹשׁ אֲשִׁישׁ בַּיהוָה תִּגְלֵנִי נַפְשִׁי
בְּאֱלֹהֵי כִי הִלְבִּישָׁנִי בְּגָדֵי-יֵשׁוּעַ מַעֲלֵל צְדָקָה יַעֲטֵנִי כְּחַתָּן
יִכְתֵּן פָּאֵר וּבִכְלָה תַעֲרֶה בְּלִיָּהּ: כִּי כְּאֶרֶץ תּוֹצִיא צִמְחָה 11
וּבְגִנָּה יִרְוַעֶיהָ תִצְמֹחַ בֵּן אֶרֶץ יְהוָה יִצְמֹחַ צְדָקָה וְתִהְיֶה נִגְדָה בְּלִידְנוּתָם:

So the Lord Goo will cause victory and glory
To spring forth before all the nations.

This is the last of the Haftorahs of Consolation. It is invariably read on the Sabbath before Rosh Hashanah. The opening words of the Haftorah reflect the spiritual exaltation which at that season possesses the soul of the loyal and God-fearing Israelite.

putteth on a priestly diadem. Or, 'decketh himself with a garland.' Song of Solomon III, 11. This ancient Jewish custom ceased after the Roman wars, when, as a sign of passionate grief over the ruin of the nation, even brides were not permitted to wear such crowns.

11. as the earth . . . growth. 'The Prophet compares the salvation of Israel from Exile to the sprouting of the seed from the earth. The seed decays in the earth, and yet it quickens with life; it then renews itself to something better and fresher than it formerly was, and in ever so much greater quantities than before. In the same way, Israel was many years in Exile, disintegrating and despairing; and yet when the hour of Redemption struck he sprouted, renewed his youth, and increased in number, dignity, and greatness beyond his earlier state. And all the nations shall witness and acknowledge this wonderful event' (Kimchi).

1. For Zion's sake will I not hold My peace,
And for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest,
Until her triumph go forth as brightness,
And her salvation as a torch that burneth.

2. And the nations shall see thy triumph,
And all kings thy glory;
And thou shalt be called by a new name,
Which the mouth of the LORD shall mark out.

3. Thou shalt also be a crown of beauty in the hand of the LORD,
And a royal diadem in the open hand of thy God.

4. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken,
Neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate;
But thou shalt be called, My delight is in her,
And thy land, Espoused;
For the LORD delighteth in thee,
And thy land shall be espoused.

5. For as a young man espouseth a virgin,
So shall thy sons espouse thee;
And as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride
So shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6. I have set watchmen
Upon thy walls, O Jerusalem,

Himself will intervene for His people. In a short drama of wonderful forcefulness of phrase and pictorial power, a startled watchman perceives the majestic figure of a Divine Being approaching Zion. He asks the meaning of the blood-stained garments; and is told that it is God Himself returning from single combat, executing vengeance upon Edom, as the type of enemies who knew neither righteousness nor pity in their dealings with Israel. 'The image presented is one of the most impressive and awe-inspiring in Scripture, and it is difficult to say which is most to be admired, the dramatic vividness of the vision, or the reticence which conceals the actual work of slaughter, and concentrates the attention on the Divine Hero as He emerges victoriously from the conflict' (Skinner). Rashi draws special attention to the marked anthropomorphism of this passage, representing God under the image of a fierce human warrior.

And Thy garments like his that treadeth

3. 'I have trodden the winepress alone,
And of the peoples there was no man

And trampled them in My fury;
And their lifeblood is dashed against My garments,
And I have stained all My raiment.

And My year of redemption are come.

And I beheld in astonishment, and there was none to uphold;
Therefore Mine own arm brought salvation unto Me,
And My fury, it upheld Me.

6. And I trod down the peoples in Mine anger,
And made them drunk with My fury,
And I poured out their lifeblood on the earth.'

7. I will make mention of the mercies
of the LORD,
And the praises of the LORD,
According to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us; ing to His compassions,

(CHAPTER XXXI)

E. THE LAST DAYS OF MOSES (CHAPTERS XXXI-XXXIV)

The remainder of the Book deals with the close of Moses' life, and incorporates his Farewell Song and Blessing, which recapitulate and enshrine in poetry his message unto Israel. One other Song of Moses, Psalm xc, the 'Prayer of Moses the Man of God,' may likewise have been the product of the latest period of the Lawgiver's life. It is a meditation on the lot of humanity, and contrasts the fleeting generations of man with the mountains at whose feet the Israelites wandered, and with the eternity of Him who existed before ever those mountains were brought forth. Stanley speaks of it as 'the funeral hymn of the world'; and in Watts' noble version it has become a cherished spiritual possession of the English-speaking race:—

'O God, our help in ages past,
 Our hope for years to come,
 Our shelter from the stormy blast,
 And our eternal home.

Before the hills in order stood,
 Or earth received her frame,
 From everlasting Thou art God,
 To endless years the same.

A thousand ages in Thy sight
 Are like an evening gone;
 Short as the watch that ends the night
 Before the rising sun.'

1-8. APPOINTMENT OF JOSHUA

Moses announces the approaching close of his leadership and the appointment of his successor.

2. go out and come in. Though, when he died, his eye had not become dim, nor had his natural strength abated, he could no longer attend to the activities of public life.

and the LORD hath said unto me. See iii, 27. This is referred to five times by Moses, and comes again and again as a pathetic break in the majesty of his periods. It forms a most important thread of connection through the different parts of the book (Moulton).

thou shalt not go over this Jordan. Even though I were yet capable to 'go out and come in', I must bow to the Divine decree (Biur).

3. He will go over. You need have no fear that my impending death will weaken you. Joshua will lead you in warfare under Divine guidance.

And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel: 'Be strong and of good courage; for thou shalt go with this people into the land which the LORD hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. 8. And the LORD, He it is that doth go before thee; He will be with thee, He will not fail thee, neither forsake thee; fear not, neither be dismayed.' ¶ 9. And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it unto the priests the sons of Levi, that bore the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and unto all the elders of Israel. *iv. 10. And Moses commanded them, saying: 'At the end of every seven years, in the set time of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, 11. when all Israel is come to appear before the LORD thy God in the place which He shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing. 12. v. 7. קבץ בגולתא

7. in the sight of all Israel. So that Joshua's authority might not henceforth be questioned. Moses now repeats before all Israel the words he had formerly spoken to Joshua alone; iii, 28.

9-13. PUBLIC READING OF THE TORAH

Moses, having committed the Torah to writing, delivers it into the hands of the priests and elders—the religious and secular heads of the nation—and enjoins upon them to have it read periodically to the assembled people. Religion in Judaism was not to be the concern of the priests only, who are to share in its truths with a small esoteric circle of political leaders. The priests are merely its guardians and teachers, and the whole body of religious truth is intended to be the everlasting possession of the entire people. This commandment strikes the keynote of the spiritual democracy established by Moses. The Torah is the heritage of the congregation of Jacob; xxxiii, 4.

10. in the set time of the year of release. According to Tradition, the reference here is to the 'Sabbatical year', called in xv, 9 'the year of release'. The Feast of Tabernacles referred to is that immediately following the conclusion of the Sabbatical year. And there seems to be a special reason why that period was chosen for this public reading of the Law. It was in order to testify that, although there had been neither sowing nor reaping during that year, the Israelites were nevertheless sustained by the mercies of God, to Whose word they were resolved ever to remain loyal, whether in prosperity or adversity (Hoffmann).

11. thou shalt read. This is addressed to the nation, which delegates the performance of this duty to its representatives (Hirsch). In the days of Josephus, it was done by the High Priest. An early Mishnah declares it to be the function of the King.

this law. Rabbinic Tradition reports that the King read from the beginning of Deuteronomy to the end of the first section of the Shema (i-vi, 9), the second section of the Shema (xi, 13-21), and concluded with xiv, 22 to the end of xxviii.

12. men and the women and the little ones. 'The men were assembled,' says Rashi, quoting the Talmud, "to learn"; the women, "to hear"; the little ones, "to cause recompense to those who bring them." 'Let neither woman nor child be excluded from this audience, nay, nor yet the slaves. For it is good that these laws should be so graven on their hearts and stored in the memory that they can never be effaced. Let your children also begin by learning the laws, most beautiful of lessons and a source of felicity' (Josephus). None realized more clearly than the Rabbis the spiritual power that comes from the mouth of babes and sucklings (Psalm viii, 3). 'The moral universe rests upon the breath of school children,' is one of their deep sayings.

hear . . . learn . . . observe. Merely 'to hear' the Torah read once every seven years in a public assembly would not be sufficient. It was to be 'learnt'; i.e. made an object of study. Further, the Torah must be made the rule of life, and its teachings 'observed'.

your God, and observe to do all the words of this law; 13. and that their children, who have not known, may hear, and learn to fear the LORD your God, as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over the Jordan to possess it.'*v (vi). ¶ 14. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Behold, thy days approach that thou must die; call Joshua, and present yourselves in the tent of meeting, that I may give him a charge.' And Moses and Joshua went, and presented themselves in the tent of meeting. 15. And the LORD appeared in the Tent in a pillar of cloud; and the pillar of cloud stood over the door of the Tent. 16. And the LORD said unto Moses: 'Behold, thou art about to sleep with thy fathers; and this people will rise up, and go astray after the foreign gods of the land, whither they go to be among them, and will forsake Me, and break My covenant which I have made with them. 17. Then My anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide My face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall come upon them; so that they will say in that day: Are not these evils come upon us because our God is not among us? 18. And I will surely hide My face in that day for all the evil which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods. 19. Now therefore write ye this song for you, and teach thou it the children of 13. and that their children . . . may hear, and learn. The 'children' are identical with 'the little ones' in the preceding verse. Their presence in such an assembly would mean their initiation into the knowledge of the Torah, and of the duties which it prescribes. Here we have another instance of the vital importance of religious education, so characteristic of the Book of the Farewell Orations of the Lawgiver. The Rabbis worked in the spirit of the Lawgiver when they determined to make the Torah the Book of the People by translating it into the vernacular, and expounding it for the masses. They went far beyond the requirement of reading to the people a portion of Deuteronomy every seven years. They divided the Torah in 156 portions, and had a portion read on each Sabbath in the Synagogue, so as to cover the whole Torah in three years. In the large and influential Jewry of Babylon, the custom prevailed of completing the whole of the Torah in the course of one year; and this eventually became the rule throughout the Diaspora. An appropriate selection from the Prophets—the Haftorah—early accompanied the Pentateuchal lesson on Sabbaths, Festivals, and Fasts.

 The purpose of the Song, and the circumstances in which Moses received the command to compose and teach it.

whither they go to be among them. The land amidst whose people the Israelites go to dwell.

17. because our God is not among us? An acknowledgment of their guilt and of the justice of their punishment.

19. write ye this song for you. The Song in the following chapter. Moses and Joshua were both to write it. According to Ibn Ezra, this command is addressed to each Israelite. The Rabbis deduced from this the recommendation to each Israelite that he write for himself a copy of the Torah. In recent centuries, the custom has grown up for the sopher (scribe) who completes the writing of a Scroll to trace the final sentences of the Torah in outline merely. At the festive celebration, called the Siyyum, Israel; put it in their mouths, that this song may be a witness for Me against the children of Israel.*vi (vii). 20. For when I shall have brought them into the land which I swore unto their fathers, flowing with milk and honey; and they shall have eaten their fill, and waxen fat; and turned unto other gods, and served them, and despised Me, and broken My covenant; 21. then it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are come upon them, that this song shall testify before them as a witness; for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed; for I know their imagination how they do even now, before I have brought them into the land which I swore.' 22. So Moses wrote this song the same day, and taught it the children of Israel. 23. And he gave Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said: 'Be strong and of good courage; for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I swore unto them; and I will be with thee.' ¶ 24. And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished,vii. 25. that Moses commanded the Levites, that bore the ark of the covenant of the LORD, saying: 26. 'Take this book of the Law, and put it by the side of the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee. 27. For I know thy rebellion, and thy stiff neck; behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against the LORD; and how much more after my death?'m.

26. by the side of the ark. In the Ark were the Ten Words, the ten foundation principles of the Sinaitic Covenant. The entire Book of the Law, which contained both the laws of the Sinai Covenant and those of the Covenant in the Plains of Moab (xxviii, 69), was placed by the side of the Ark (Koenig).

The Traditional explanation is that the Sefer was placed on a ledge projecting from the Ark; others hold that it was placed within the Ark, by the side of the Tables of Testimony.

And Moses spoke in the ears of all the assembly of Israel the words of this song, until they were finished.

HOSEA XIV, 2-10; MICAH VII, 18-20; JOEL II, 15-27

CHAPTER XIV

CAP. XIV. יד

2. Return, O Israel, unto the LORD thy God;
For thou hast stumbled in thine iniquity.

3. Take with you words,
And return unto the LORD;
Say unto Him: 'Forgive all iniquity,
And accept that which is good;

שׁוּבָה יִשְׂרָאֵל עַד יְהוָה

3 אֱלֹהֶיךָ כִּי כָשַׁלְתָּ בְּעֲוֹנֶךָ: קַח עִמָּכֶם דְּבָרִים וְשׁוּבוּ אֵלַי

So will we render for bullocks the offering of our lips.

Hosea is the Prophet of the Decline and Fall of Northern Israel. He is a deeply affectionate nature, whose message is the unwearying love of God to Israel. 'Let Israel come back to God, and call upon Him in its anguish. Let Israel seek the LORD, it is still time'—such is the burden of his prophecy. The passion of his soul reaches its fullest expression in the concluding chapter of his Book. This is appropriately enough the Haftorah for the Sabbath of Repentance, שבת שובה lit. 'The Sabbath of Return, O Israel, unto the LORD.' The very term Teshuvah, i.e. 'a turning away from sin and a turning towards God,' is taken from the word שׁוּבָה in its opening verse.

The doctrine of Repentance which is derived from it is of fundamental importance in Judaism; see p. 195.

A CALL TO REPENTANCE

2. return . . . unto the LORD. God's love and mercy are unending. Even after the pronouncement of doom, there is hope and forgiveness for repentant Israel.

3. take with you words. God does not require gifts of sacrifices, but sincere confession and penitent words expressing the resolve to amend (Midrash).

4. Asshur shall not save us;
We will not ride upon horses;
Neither will we call any more the work of our hands our gods;
For in Thee the fatherless findeth mercy.
5. I will heal their backsliding,
I will love them freely;
For Mine anger is turned away from him.
6. I will be as the dew unto Israel;
He shall blossom as the lily,
And cast forth his roots as Lebanon.
7. His branches shall spread,
And his beauty shall be as the olive tree,
And his fragrance as Lebanon.
8. They that dwell under his shadow shall again
Make corn to grow,
And shall blossom as the vine;
The scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.
9. Ephraim [shall say]:
'What have I to do any more with idols?'
As for Me, I respond and look on
him;
I am like a leafy cypress-tree;
From Me is thy fruit found.

10. Whoso is wise, let him understand these things,
Whoso is prudent, let him know them.
For the ways of the LORD are right,
And the just do walk in them;
But transgressors do stumble therein.

4. Asshur shall not save us. Israel will no longer put their trust in alliances with foreign, idol-worshipping nations—Assyria or Egypt.

will not ride upon horses. A reference to the help looked for from Egypt; see I Kings x, 28.

5-7. God's gracious and loving reply to those words of repentance and faith.

6. as the lily. A symbol of beauty and faithfulness; but his roots shall be unmovable as Lebanon.

7. his fragrance as Lebanon. On the lower slopes of Lebanon are aromatic shrubs, lavender, and myrtle; Song of Songs iv, 8.

9. is thy fruit found. 'Thy good cometh.'

10. stumble therein. They stumble as if the ways were actually crooked, because their wrong thoughts and desires pervert the meaning of the Divine commands. Thus they do wrong and stumble, even when they would claim to be walking in the ways of the LORD.

Because He delighteth in mercy.

MICAH VII

For the life of Micah, see p. 682. He was a contemporary of Isaiah, and like him dreamt of the time when the nations would learn war no more. Micah was the Prophet of the poor, and fearlessly denounced luxury, irreligion, and degeneracy. In these concluding verses of his Book, he revels in the thought of the Divine Forgiveness. These verses are also read, after the Book of Jonah, at Minchah on the Day of Atonement.

18. like unto Thee. 'The Prophet does not mean that other gods have a real existence, but speaks from the point of view of the other nations, who believe that they do really exist' that pardoneth the iniquity. This and other phrases are a reminiscence of the supreme revelation of the Divine Attributes accorded to Moses on Sinai—'merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abounding in lovingkindness and truth; keeping mercy unto thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin.' These

He will subdue our iniquities;

Thirteen Divine Attributes have always had a wonderful fascination for the Jew, and are the recurrent refrain of the prayers of the Day of Atonement; see on Exod. xxxiv, 6 f.

remnant of His heritage. The Prophets hold fast to the belief in a purified minority in Israel, a righteous nucleus that is indestructible. And historic Israel that has suffered all things, endured all things, and survived all things for its Faith, may well speak of itself as that Remnant, and daily pray: 'O Guardian of Israel, guard the remnant of Israel, and suffer not Israel to perish, who say, Hear O Israel. O Guardian of an only nation, guard the remnant of an only nation, and suffer not an-only nation to perish, who proclaim the unity of thy name, saying, The LORD our God, the LORD is One. O Guardian of a holy nation, guard the remnant of a holy nation, and suffer not a holy nation to perish, who thrice repeat the three-fold sanctification unto the Holy One' (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 64).

delighteth in mercy. In the Neilah Amidah, we pray: 'Thou delightest not in the destruction of the world, but thou art a God ready to forgive: Thou delightest in the repentance of the wicked, and hast no pleasure in their death' (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 268).

19. subdue. Or, 'suppress' (Kimchi). Sins in Scripture are personified as enemies; or as wild animals which man has it in his power to master; Gen. iv, 7.

20. faithfulness. lit. 'truth.'

Jacob . . . Abraham. In God's sight Jacob and Abraham are alive (Cheyne). The Rabbis declared, 'Jacob our father is not dead; even as his children are alive, so is he alive.' Jacob and Abraham are therefore equivalent to 'the seed of Jacob and Abraham.'

The above three verses, with a slight interpolation between verses 19 and 20, are recited during the Tashlich ceremony (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 254), on the afternoon of the First Day of New Year; or on the Second Day if the First fall on Sabbath.

JOEL II

Joel, a Prophet of Repentance, of unknown date, depicts Divine Judgment under the form of a terrible locust plague, which threatens the land with destruction. The people fast and pray unto God, 'and the LORD hath pity on His people'—an appropriate selection for the Sabbath before the Day of Atonement. Joel foresees the day when the LORD will pour out His spirit upon all flesh, 'when your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions'—when youth shall have the knowledge of age, and age the enthusiasm of youth. Is not such rejuvenation of the soul and renewal of the spirit the main purpose of the Day of Atonement?

15-17. All are to take part in public humiliation and fast.

15. horn. The ram's horn, the shofar, summoning the people to a religious gathering.

16. sanctify the congregation. i.e. hold a sacred religious meeting.
pavilion. Nuptial tent.

17. Let the priests, the ministers of the LORD,

Weep between the porch and the altar,
And let them say: 'Spare Thy people,
O LORD,

And give not Thy heritage to reproach,
That the nations should make them
a byword:

Wherefore should they say among the peoples:

Where is their God?

18. Then was the LORD jealous for His land,

And had pity on His people.

19. And the LORD answered and said unto His people:

'Behold, I will send you corn, and wine,
and oil,

And ye shall be satisfied therewith;

And I will no more make you a reproach
among the nations;

20. But I will remove far off from you the northern one,

And will drive him into a land barren and desolate,

With his face toward the eastern sea,

And his hinder part toward the western sea;

That his foulness may come up, and his ill savour may come up,

Because he hath done great things.'

21. Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice;
For the LORD hath done great things.

17. between the porch and the altar. The inner part of the Court of the priests.

make them a byword. For wretchedness.
where is their God? Such would be the taunt of the heathen.

18-20. God's answer to the Prayer of Penitence.

18. was the LORD jealous. Because the heathen argued that He was unable to relieve His people.

19. satisfied. Will have it in abundance.

20. the northern one. The army of locusts.
The 'army' that had devastated the land came from the Syrian desert in the north of Palestine.
A swarm of locusts is appalling in its power of collective devastation. In quantity it is a thing incredible: it literally darkens the sky. Locusts are the incarnation of hunger, and a swarm clears the land of all vegetation as with a razor.
The locusts are then driven by the wind into the desert or the Sea; and their dead bodies are often cast up in heaps, putrefying the atmosphere;
see p. 248.

A God of faithfulness and without iniquity,
Just and right is He.

(CHAPTER XXXII)

(2) THE SONG OF MOSES

XXXII, 1-44

Moses began his ministry at the Red Sea with a song of praise and triumph, and he ends his life of service to God and Israel with another hymn of joy on the banks of Jordan, and in view of the Promised possession. Both songs are an anticipation of the glorious future beyond the wilderness-life. The majestic Farewell Song, distinguished by fire, force, and the sweep of its rhetoric, is a didactic ode. Moses takes his stand in the spirit at a point of time long subsequent to his own death: he makes a retrospective survey of Israel's history, and develops the lessons deducible from it. The result is a vindication of the ways of God in His relations to Israel. The Divine lovingkindness and unchanging faithfulness are contrasted with Israel's faithlessness and ingratitude. God is the loving father, whereas Israel is the wayward, disobedient child. The successive disasters which would befall Israel are a just retribution for his senseless and ungrateful conduct. But let not the heathen exult and say that Israel lies helpless and crushed. God would in the end intervene for Israel, and the Lawgiver calls upon the nations to rejoice in the salvation of the People of God.

1-3. APPEAL TO UNIVERSE FOR ATTENTION

1. give ear, ye heavens, and I will speak. He appeals to heaven and earth as eternal witnesses of the Divine truths he is about to declare; see xxx, 19; Isa. i, 2.

2. doctrine. Better, teaching, message or instruction; cf. Prov. iv, 2. The message conveyed by the Song shall, like rain and dew falling on plants, penetrate to the hearts of the Israelites; refresh, stimulate, and give birth to a new spiritual life. The Song, therefore, is not only one of warning, but of comfort also, to awaken new hope in a suffering Israel.

distil as the dew. God's word is as the dew which, though it falls gently and unheard, yet has a wonderful reviving power; cf. Micah v, 6.

small rain. The tender grass needs the small drops for its revival. Even so is the Divine teaching tempered to meet the wants of the weak and the young.

showers upon the herb. The grown-up grass needs the strong forceful showers.

3. the name of the LORD. This v. states the reason of the invoking of heaven and earth in v. 1, and the wish expressed in v. 2. He will proclaim the Name of the LORD; i.e. His character as revealed in His dealings with Israel.

4-6. GOD'S FAITHFULNESS AND ISRAEL'S FOLLY

A contrast between the unchangeable rectitude of God and the fickle behaviour of His people.

4. 'This v. gives a concise and forcible declaration of the ethical perfection of God, maintained by Him uniformly in His moral government of the world' (Driver).

the Rock. 'Nine times in the course of this single hymn is repeated this most expressive figure, taken from the granite crags of Sinai, and carried thence through psalms and hymns of all nations, like one of the huge fragments which it represents, to regions as remote in

5. Is corruption His? No; His children's is the blemish;

A generation crooked and perverse.

6. Do ye thus requite the LORD,
O foolish people and unwise?

Is not He thy father that hath gotten thee?

Hath He not made thee, and established thee? *ii.

7. Remember the days of old,

Consider the years of many generations;
Ask thy father, and he will declare unto thee,

Thine elders, and they will tell thee.

8. When the Most High gave to the nations their inheritance,
When he separated the children of men,
He set the borders of the peoples
According to the number of the children of Israel.

9. For the portion of the LORD is His people,

Jacob the lot of His inheritance.

10. He found him in a desert land,

And in the waste, a howling wilderness;

עם נבל ולא חכם

הוא עשה ויכננה:

בינו שנות דור ודור

זקנה ויאמר לה:

v. 6. ה' רבתי והיבה בפני עצמה aspect as in distance from its original birth-place' (Stanley). It denotes the Divine unchangeableness and its refuge for men. Ages pass away, but the rock remains a place of safety in time of storm and flood.

perfect. Irreproachable.

a God of faithfulness. 'Faithful to give the righteous his due reward in the life after death. Even though to our seeming this reward be unduly delayed in its coming, God will certainly keep faith in bringing it to pass' (Rashi).

iniquity. Better, injustice. Maimonides makes the recognition of the justice of God one of the fundamental principles of the Jewish Faith, even as the Rabbis make it one of the fundamental duties of the Jew (צידוק הדין).

5. His children's is the blemish. The Heb. Text is very difficult, and the Ancient Versions render little help. M. Friedlander took מומם as a parallel form to חנם, ריקם, with the meaning of 'fault-laden': 'Is corruption His? No, O ye His fault-laden children, ye perverse and crooked generation.'

The sinning of Israel is not a blemish upon the goodness of God. He gave them a Law which would render them happy, but they chose sin and its subsequent sorrows (Leeser).

6. requite. Will ye thus treat your Father and Benefactor?

gotten thee. lit. 'acquired thee,' by delivering them out of Egypt.

hath He not made thee? Constituted thee a nation (Rashi).

and established thee. Set thee upon a firm basis so as to play a great and lasting part in world-history.

7-14. THE LESSON OF HISTORY

7. the days of old. The story of Israel's birth as a nation.

many generations. Or, 'each generation.'

father . . . elders. The depositaries of religious tradition.

See Additional Note F, THE HALLOWING OF HISTORY, p. 935.

8-14. THE ANSWER OF THE FATHERS AND ELDERS

When God first allotted the nations a place and a heritage, as described in Gen. x and xi, He had respect to the special necessities of the Israelites.

9. for the portion of the LORD is His people. Israel belonged to God in a more intimate sense than any other ethnic group.

10. He found him in a desert land. This v. and those immediately following depict God's fatherly care of Israel. Israel is represented as an abandoned, starving child left to die in a wilderness (cf. Ezekiel xvi, 3-6). God finds and rescues him. Israel's history begins with the forty years' march through the desert—where he must have perished, had not God supplied the food and the necessary protection.

howling wilderness. Where wild beasts howl.

compassed him about. By a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night.

cared for him. Or, 'gave him understanding'

11. As an eagle that stirreth up her nest,
Hovereth over her young,
Spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them,
Beareth them on her pinions—

12. The LORD alone did lead him,
And there was no strange god with Him. *iii.

13. He made him ride on the high places of the earth,
And he did eat the fruitage of the field;
And He made him to suck honey out of the crag,

And oil out of the flinty rock;

14. Curd of kine, and milk of sheep,
With fat of lambs,

And rams of the breed of Bashan, and he-goats,

With the kidney-fat of wheat;

And of the blood of the grape thou drankest foaming wine.

15. But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked—Thou didst wax fat, thou didst grow thick, thou didst become gross—

the apple of His eye. The pupil of his eye;
the Heb. phrase is equivalent to the English
'as his very life.'

11. as an eagle. God's loving care for Israel is likened to the tender affection that is shown by the eagle towards its young when it teaches them to fly.

stirreth up her nest. When the time comes for the young to leave the nest, the mother-bird does not rouse them suddenly, but strikes her wings against the surrounding branches. Having thus gently awakened them, she 'stirs up' the nest, and allures them to imitate her fluttering in flight.

hovereth over her young. She hovers over them in loving solicitude, and has her wings in readiness to catch them, should they become exhausted.

spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them. If the young are too weak or too timid to fly, the eagle takes them upon her outspread wings and carries them—a picture of the fostering care, the discipline and training to independence, that Israel received at the Divine hands.

13-14. Israel would enjoy all the luxuries of a pastoral people in abundance.

13. ride on the high places. A figure of speech denoting the triumphant and undisputed possession of the land, even of its high mountain fastnesses, which the Prophet-poet foresees as an accomplished fact.

of the earth. Better, of the land.

honey . . . rock. Even from the rocks He had given them honey, and the flinty soil produced the olive tree. Palestine is by its flora (it has 3,000 species of flowers), and by its innumerable caves and fissures of the dry limestone rocks, well suited to honey-culture.

suck. Enjoy with relish.

14. curd of kine . . . wine. The very products for which the Trans-Jordanic lands they had just conquered were famous.

Bashan. Famous for its cattle.

the kidney-fat of wheat. The best and the most nutritious wheat, even as the fat of the kidneys is the choicest of fat.

15-18. ISRAEL'S INGRATITUDE

15. Jeshurun. This title of honour for Israel is formed from the root ישר, 'to be righteous,' and designates Israel under its ideal character as 'the Upright One'. It is used here ironically, as a rebuke to Israel's ingratitude and perfidy.

waxed fat, and kicked. Like an ox grown intractable through good feeding, and refusing to bear the yoke of the master.

become gross. Or, 'wast gorged with food' (Driver).

God. Heb. אלה is used only in poetry; it is a singular obtained from אלהים.

contemned. lit. 'and treated as a נבל,' a senseless person who only deserves contempt. 'How often in their superstition do men act as if God could be tricked; and in their immorality, as if He were senseless' (G. A. Smith).

16. They roused Him to jealousy with strange gods,
With abominations did they provoke Him.

17. They sacrificed unto demons, no-gods,

Gods that they knew not,
New gods that came up of late,
Which your fathers dreaded not.

18. Of the Rock that begot thee thou wast unmindful,
And didst forget God that bore thee.*iv.

19. And the LORD saw, and spurned, Because of the provoking of His sons and His daughters.

20. And He said: 'I will hide My face from them,

I will see what their end shall be;

For they are a very froward generation,
Children in whom is no faithfulness.

21. They have roused Me to jealousy with a no-god;

They have provoked Me with their vanities;

And I will rouse them to jealousy with a no-people;

I will provoke them with a vile nation.

22. For a fire is kindled in My nostril,
And burneth unto the depths of the nether-world,

And devoureth the earth with her produce,

And setteth ablaze the foundations of the mountains.

I will spend Mine arrows upon them;

v. 15. קמץ בו"ק. 17. v. חול. 18. v. י' זעירא. 21. v. חול. ibid. קמץ בו"ק.

16. roused Him to jealousy. See on iv, 24. strange gods. False gods, served with 'abominations', i.e. wicked and idolatrous practices.

17. demons. Heb. שדים. In Assyrian, shidu are the demi-gods usually represented by the bull-colossi in front of palaces.

new gods. Upstart deities recently invented or imported.

dreaded not. The Heb. verb is from the root שער, 'hair'; gods in whose presence your fathers 'shuddered' not, and the hair of their head did not stand on end (Sifri, Rashi).

18. of the Rock that begot thee . . . bore thee. A figure as bold as it is beautiful. God is represented as a Father, to whom Israel owed its existence as a people; and, at the same time, as a Mother, travailing with her infant, and forever watching over it with tender affection.

19-25. THE MERITED PUNISHMENT

19. provoking. Vexation, disappointment at the unmerited dishonour.

20. hide My face. Leave them to themselves. a froward generation. lit. 'a generation given to perverseness,' i.e. evasions of truth and right; a falsehood-loving race (Driver). no faithfulness. No loyalty to a tender Parent.

21. vanities. lit. 'breaths'—something insubstantial, vaporous, unreal; hence false gods. no-people. Measure for measure. Just as they had angered God by adopting a no-god, so would God anger them by bringing against them a no-people; i.e. a horde of barbarians. a vile nation. Or, 'foolish nation' (RV). Ignorant and, hence, barbarous and inhuman in its habits and methods (Ibn Ezra). And this people will win successes over Israel!

22. setteth ablaze . . . mountains. Possibly a reference to volcanic activity, conceived as an expression of Divine anger.

23. spend Mine arrows. Exhaust the whole quiverful of evils upon them. 'The evils, like arrows, fall suddenly upon their unprotected victims' (Ibn Ezra).

24. The wasting of hunger, and the devouring of the fiery bolt,
And bitter destruction;
And the teeth of beasts will I send upon them,
With the venom of crawling things of the dust.

25. Without shall the sword bereave,
And in the chambers terror;
Slaying both young man and virgin,
The suckling with the man of gray hairs.

26. I thought I would make an end of them,
I would make their memory cease from among men;

27. Were it not that I dreaded the enemy's provocation,
Lest their adversaries should misdeem,
Lest they should say: Our hand is exalted,
And not the LORD hath wrought all this.*

28. For they are a nation void of counsel,
And there is no understanding in them.*v.

29. If they were wise, they would understand this,

They would discern their latter end.

30. How should one chase a thousand,
And two put ten thousand to flight,
Except their Rock had given them over,
And the LORD had delivered them up?

24. fiery bolt. Of fever. Others understand by רשף, fiery darts that produce pestilence; Hab. III, 5. bitter destruction. Deadly pestilence and malignant plague.

25. without . . . terror. War, the climax to these natural horrors. Death will stalk through the streets and invade the homes. Neither age nor sex is spared.

26-33. THE STAY OF GOD'S VENGEANCE

God's resolve on Israel's annihilation was stayed by the consideration of the adversaries' taunts. Nothing could save Israel, but God's respect for His own Name.

26. I thought. Better, I would have said. make an end. Or, 'cleave them in pieces.'

27. enemy's provocation. The taunts of Israel's foes. They would fail to see God's retributive justice in it all.

misdeem. Misapprehend.

29. If they were wise. If those enemies were wise, they would look at things in the right light, past their temporary triumph over Israel. They would see their own inevitable undoing, as soon as Israel returned to God.

Even our enemies themselves being judges.

32. For their vine is of the vine of Sodom,
And of the fields of Gomorrah;
Their grapes are grapes of gall,
Their clusters are bitter;

30. how should one chase a thousand. Their victory over Israel is not their work. How should Israel be so completely crushed unless it were that God had abandoned His people?

31. for their rock is not as our Rock. 'All this the heathens have understood; viz. that God had delivered Israel into their hands and that, therefore, the victory belonged neither to them nor to their gods' (Rashi).

themselves being judges. They must admit that such deeds as were performed by Israel's God stand unrivalled; cf. Exod. xiv, 25.

32. the vine of Sodom. Neither is the victory over Israel due to God's approval of the deeds and spirit of the heathens. They are corrupt in root and fruit. The nations are compared to a vine whose stock is derived from Sodom and Gomorrah; hence, tainted by the corruption of which these cities are a type. Ancient writers (Strabo, Pliny, and Tacitus) speak of apples of Sodom that 'have a colour as if they were fit to be eaten; but, if you pluck them with your hands, they dissolve into smoke and ashes' (Josephus).

gall. Poison; xxix, 17. The grapes on a vine of Sodom are a mockery—fair outside, but ashes within.

33. Their wine is the venom of serpents,
And the cruel poison of asps.

34. 'Is not this laid up in store with Me,
Sealed up in My treasures?

35. Vengeance is Mine, and recompense, Against the time when their foot shall

For the day of their calamity is at hand,
And the things that are to come upon them shall make haste.

36. For the LORD will judge His people,
And repent Himself for His servants;
When He seeth that their stay is gone,
And there is none remaining, shut up or left at large.

37. And it is said: Where are their gods,
The rock in whom they trusted;

Let him rise up and help you,
Let him be your protection.

And there is no god with Me;
I kill, and I make alive;
I have wounded, and I heal;
And there is none that can deliver out of My hand. *vi.

33. asps. Cobras, poisonous snakes.

34-43. THE LOT OF ISRAEL'S ENEMIES

34. is not this laid up in store with Me. Such corruption and mortal poison as is the life and example of the heathens could not remain forever unpunished. God would, therefore, interpose on His people's behalf. The punishment to be meted out to Israel's enemies has been duly written down and sealed in the Divine archives.

35. vengeance. Is here used in the general sense of punishment. God's long-suffering towards the heathen doers of evil must not be taken for forgetfulness on His part. Retribution would assuredly come.

against the time when. As soon as.
the day of their calamity. The occasion of their sudden and irreparable disaster.

36-42. Hitherto Moses spoke to the Israelites words of warning, so that the Song might testify against them in the day of their calamity. In the remainder of this Song, he utters words of consolation—what would befall them, if they turned from their evil ways in consequence of the calamities that befell them (Rashi).

And Israel, to whom this Divine purpose had been revealed, could endure through this dark night of the world. It alone had hope, and men who can hope can endure' (Welch).

from what it has learnt of the utter helplessness of the idols and their worshippers, that the God of Israel is the only true God; and that with Him alone is the power of life and death.

to 'I swear.'

the usual phrasing of an oath, As I live.

41. if. When.

take hold on judgment. The figure is that of God marching forth as a warrior with justice (‘judgment’) as his invincible weapon. The ‘judgment’ over the foes would be remorseless and complete.

that hate Me. Israel's enemies are God's enemies.

43. CONCLUSION OF THE SONG

43. sing aloud, O ye nations, of His people.
The Poet calls upon the nations to join Israel in its song of deliverance. That deliverance has been so great that even the heathen, seeing it, must rejoice at it and celebrate it in song. ‘They will see His justice and His faithfulness and will gain new confidence in the stability and moral character of the forces which rule the world’ (Harper).

His adversaries. They alone who had brought Israel to the brink of destruction are threatened with vengeance, and not the heathen in general, who are invited to rejoice with Israel.

and doth make expiation for the land of His people. The expiation is for the massacred innocent Israelites whose blood was in the land of Israel, and for other defilements wrought either by enemies or earlier by backsliding Israelites on the soil of the Promised Land.

44. Hoshea the son of Nun. Hoshea, the original name of Joshua, before he came into prominence as Moses' lieutenant and future successor (Num. xiii, 16), was still the name by which he was popularly known. ‘Why is Joshua here called Hoshea? It is to show us his modesty.
Although he was now about to become the Divinely-appointed Leader of Israel, he still felt himself the same humble youth that he was in the days of his obscurity’ (Sifri).

45-47. THE LAW IS ISRAEL'S LIFE

46. that ye may charge. One more reference to the duty of impressing the coming generation with the necessity of observing the Torah.

47. no vain thing. Or, ‘no empty thing’; the Torah is no mere book of empty words, without meaning or message.

it is your life, and through this thing ye shall prolong your days upon the land, whither ye go over the Jordan to possess it.'*^m ¶ 48. And the LORD spoke unto Moses that selfsame day, saying: 49. 'Get thee up into this mountain of Abarim, unto mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, that is over against Jericho; and behold the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel for a possession; 50. and die in the mount whither thou goest up, and be gathered unto thy people; as Aaron thy brother died in mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people. 51. Because ye trespassed against Me in the midst of the children of Israel at the waters of Meribath-kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin; because ye sanctified Me not in the midst of the children of Israel. 52. For thou shalt see the land afar off; but thou shalt not go thither into the land which I give the children of Israel.'

ye shall prolong your days. Obedience to the Torah tends to length of life, in that it restrains from sin, which shortens it. A life led in harmony with the demands of the Torah is a life of health and cheerfulness and holiness. 'The fear of the LORD prolongeth days; but the years of the wicked shall be shortened' (Prov. x, 27).

48-52. MOSES ORDERED TO ASCEND MOUNT NEBO

48. that selfsame day. The day on which Moses rehearsed the Song in the hearing of the people.

49. into this mountain of Abarim. The mountain range in the north-west of Moab, overlooking the north end of the Dead Sea.

in the midst of the children of Israel. It seems that these words are intended to be emphatic. Moses had made Pharaoh acknowledge the greatness of God; the chiefs of Edom and mighty men of Moab trembled at this achievement (Exod. xv, 15)—but all this was among those outside Israel. In Israel itself, both princes and masses remained unimpressed. Moses' work, therefore, was in this sense not a success—'ye sanctified me not in the midst of the children of Israel'; see on Lev. xxii, 32.

CHAPTER XXII

CAP. XXII. כב

1. And David spoke unto the LORD the words of this song in the day that the LORD delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul; 2. and he said:

The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer;

3. The God who is my rock, in Him I take refuge;
My shield, and my horn of salvation, my high tower, and my refuge;
My saviour, Thou savest me from violence.

4. Praised, I cry, is the LORD,
And I am saved from mine enemies.

5. For the waves of Death compassed me,

The floods of ¹Belial assailed me.

6. The cords of ¹Sheol surrounded me;
The snares of Death confronted me.

7. In my distress I called upon the LORD,

Yea, I called unto my God;

And out of His temple He heard my voice,

And my cry did enter into His ears.

This magnificent Song of Thanksgiving, which is almost identical with Psalm xviii, forms an appropriate parallel to the Farewell Song of Moses read on this Sabbath. David traces Divine Providence in his own marvellous escapes from persecution and peril, and renders thanks to God Almighty for his deliverance and victories. Such also was the last lesson that Moses endeavoured to impress upon Israel in his Song—trust in Providence, loyalty to God, and gratitude for His infinite mercies. On the character of David, see p. 458.

and delivers me. 'The horn is symbol of victorious strength, and is borrowed from animals who push with their horns' (Rashi).

5-7. PRAYER IN PERIL

5. waves of Death. Dire adversity threatened to engulf him.

Belial. 'Ungodliness'; here in the meaning of destruction, mortal peril.

6. Sheol. The nether-world, the grave. Sheol and Death are like hunters lying in wait for their prey with nets and snares.

His temple. In heaven (Kimchi).

8-20. HIS PRAYER IS ANSWERED

'The manifestation of God's power to deliver is poetically described as the physical appearance of God Himself, accompanied by earthquake and thunderstorm. He is conceived as dwelling in the heart of the thunderstorm, surrounded by fires which break forth as lightning through the cloud' (Dummelow).

8. then. Forthwith earthquake, lightning and storm show God's power against His and Israel's enemies.

9. Smoke arose up in His nostrils,
And fire out of His mouth did devour;
Coals flamed forth from Him.

10. He bowed the heavens also, and came down;

And thick darkness was under His feet.

11. And He rode upon a cherub, and did fly;

Yea, He was seen upon the wings of the wind.

12. And He made darkness pavilions round about Him,

Gathering of waters, thick clouds of the skies.

13. At the brightness before Him
Coals of fire flamed forth.

14. The LORD thundered from heaven,
And the Most High gave forth His voice.

15. And he sent out arrows, and scattered them;

Lightning, and discomfited them.

16. And the channels of the sea appeared,
The foundations of the world were laid bare,

By the rebuke of the LORD,

At the blast of the breath of His nostrils.

17. He sent from on high, He took me;
He drew me out of many waters;

18. He delivered me from mine enemy most strong,

From them that hated me, for they were too mighty for me.

19. They confronted me in the day of my calamity;

But the LORD was a stay unto me.

20. He brought me forth also into a large place;

He delivered me, because He delighted in me.

9. 'The startling boldness of the language will be intelligible if the distinctive character of Hebrew symbolism is borne in mind. It is no "gross anthropomorphism", for the Psalmist did not intend that the mind's eye should shape his figures into a concrete form. His aim is vividly to express the manifestation of the wrath of God, and he does so in figures which are intended to remain as purely mental conceptions,

26. merciful. David had been merciful to Saul and his house, and God had been merciful to him.

27. subtle. God shows His perfection to those who walk in His ways, but opposes those who oppose Him. The crooked man is given over by God to follow his own crooked way, till it brings him to ruin; for example, Pharaoh (Rashi). The Rabbis, who made the Imitation of God a great ethical ideal, laid it down that such imitation must be confined to His qualities of lovingkindness and righteousness, and must not embrace His attributes of severity and rigid justice, jealousy (Deut. vi, 15) or the quality indicated in the words 'with the crooked Thou dost show Thyself subtle'. These qualities are not for mortals to imitate (Schechter).

(3) THE BLESSING OF MOSES

CHAPTER XXXIII

The Song opens the final day of Deuteronomy, and in the course of that day the long-expected summons comes. 'The whole people understand the mysterious doom, and line the route by which Moses sets out on the journey from which there will be no return. Like a father laying his hands from a death-bed on the heads of his children, the departing Leader blesses the several tribes, as he passes along; then turning to behold the whole multitude for the last time, Moses lifts his hands in general blessing:

"There is none like unto God, O Jeshurun,
Who rideth upon the heaven as thy help,
And in His excellency on the skies.
The eternal God is a dwelling place,
And underneath are the everlasting arms."

Simple, bare prose tells the rest: the solitary ascent into the mount, the long gaze over the Land of Promise, the death. But no wealth of poetic imagination could have made a close for Deuteronomy more harmonious with the body of the book. The life of the lonely Leader has passed out into solitude: and "no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day" (Moulton).

1. and this is the blessing. This Blessing is a complement as well as a counterpart to the Song in the preceding chapter. Whereas the Song is an admonition, depicting the calamities that were to befall a wayward and disloyal Israel, here is all blessing, foreshadowing a bright and happy destiny. As to form and contents, it is modelled on the Blessing of Jacob; Gen. XLIX.

the man of God. Moses is given this title in Josh. XIV, 6, and in the heading of Psalm xc, 'A Prayer of Moses the Man of God.' The title is sometimes applied to the Prophets; e.g. I Sam. ix, 6.

before his death. Just prior to his death, probably the very day on which he died; cf. Gen. xxvii, 7.

2-5. INTRODUCTION

God, revealing Himself majestically unto His people in the desert, gave them a Law through Moses, and united the tribes with God as their king. A similar opening is found in Judges v, Habakkuk III, and Psalm LXVIII.

The happiness and felicity of the tribes of Israel is all traced back to the Divine Revelation which God bestowed upon His people, as He came with them through the wilderness.

2. the LORD came from Sinai. The mountain of Revelation, to make His abode in Israel's midst. Sinai was the starting-point in the manifestation of the Divine glory to Israel.

and rose. A metaphor of sunrise. God had 'dawned' on them; had 'risen' for them, and had shed forth the light of His Law upon Israel, so that henceforth they walked in His light.

from Seir. The hill-country of Edom, to the east of Sinai.

mount Paran. Perhaps the mountain-range forming the southern boundary of Canaan. The Divine Presence journeyed, as it were, with Israel from Sinai, through Seir, through Paran, and then finally through the desert; aiding and guarding them, even until they became established in the good inheritance Divinely promised to the Fathers.

holy. Better, of holy ones. As in Psalm LXVIII, 18, God is here poetically depicted as coming forth from the angelic hosts that surround His throne.

a fiery law. A Law given out of the midst of the fire (Deut. v, 19-23, Targum); 'a Law of fire' (Mendelssohn, Hirsch). This translation takes the Heb. אֵשׁ דֵּת, with the Massoretes, as two words. The second of these words, דֵּת 'Law', however, occurs only in the latest books of Scripture. Many translators, therefore, follow the Kethib and translate the phrase, 'at His right hand were streams for them.'

3. Yea, He loveth the peoples,
All His holy ones—they are in Thy hand;
And they sit down at Thy feet,
Receiving of Thy words.

4. Moses commanded us a law,
An inheritance of the congregation of Jacob.

5. And there was a king in Jeshurun,
When the heads of the people were gathered,
All the tribes of Israel together.

6. Let Reuben live, and not die
In that his men become few.

7. And this for Judah, and he said:
Hear, LORD, the voice of Judah,
And bring him in unto his people;

3. He loveth the peoples. i.e. the tribes of Israel; cf. Gen. xxviii, 3. If the word 'peoples' is taken literally, the meaning is that, although the Divine Law was given to Israel alone, God's love embraces all peoples. 'The LORD is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all His works' (Ps. cxlv, 9).

His holy ones. Either of the 'tribes', or of the peoples. If the latter, then the good and pious of all nations are meant, as well as of Israel. RV has 'his saints'; i.e. Israel's Saints.

are in Thy hand. Under Thy protection and guardianship.

they sit down at Thy feet. Like pupils in the presence of the master, ready to receive instruction.

receiving of Thy words. The next v. defines 'Thy words', i.e. 'the Law which Moses commanded us, as an inheritance of the congregation of Jacob.'

4. inheritance. Better, heritage; Heb. מורשה, not ירושה, 'inheritance.' The latter may be spent by the heir at his discretion. A מורשה, however, is an entailed estate, inalienable, and must remain in the family, to be handed on from father to son undiminished. Such is the Torah unto Israel. It is transmitted from age to age and generation to generation, so that it is never forgotten.

the congregation of Jacob. The words of this verse have deservedly become a national motto in Israel. They form part of the little child's Morning Prayer; see Authorised Prayer Book, p. 328.

5. and there was a king in Jeshurun. Thus began God's Kingdom over Israel.

all the tribes of Israel together. In the presence of the whole People gathered together to enter into the covenant at Sinai.

The above section, especially v. 1-3, is among the most difficult passages in Scripture. The different translations are, therefore, both numerous and uncertain. In a popular commentary it is not possible to take note of them all.

6-25. THE BLESSINGS OF THE TRIBES

6. REUBEN

6. let Reuben live. The Heb. idiom is equivalent to 'long live Reuben', or, 'God save Reuben' (as in 1 Kings i, 25).

and not die. Living in Transjordan, he was exposed to constant attacks from numerous enemies.

in that his men become few. Let not the death of Reuben take place through a diminution in his numbers. At the first census taken in the time of Moses, the number of Reubenites capable of bearing arms was 46,500 men (Num. i, 21). At the second, it had dwindled to 43,730 men (Num. xxvi, 7). In David's time much of their territory was conquered by the Moabites. Mesha, in the ninth century B.C.E., when describing his victories against the Eastern tribes, does not even mention the tribe of Reuben.

7. JUDAH

7. hear, LORD, the voice of Judah. 'Hear, O LORD, the prayer of Judah when he goeth forth to battle; and bring him back to his people in peace' (Onkelos). Judah was the first to undertake the conquest of the unconquered portion of Palestine; and for some time, his possessions were an enclave, surrounded by the Canaanites. Hence this prayer that he be united to the other tribes.

his hands shall contend for him. He needs and deserves Divine help, as he will be fighting the fight of all Israel.

8. And of Levi he said:

Thy Thummim and Thy Urim be with Thy holy one,

Whom Thou didst prove at Massah, With whom Thou didst strive at the waters of Meribah;

9. Who said of his father, and of his mother: 'I have not seen him';

Neither did he acknowledge his brethren,
Nor knew he his own children;

For they have observed Thy word,
And keep Thy covenant.

10. They shall teach Jacob Thine ordinances,

And Israel Thy law;

They shall put incense before Thee,

And whole burnt-offering upon Thine altar.

11. Bless, LORD, his substance,

And accept the work of his hands;

Smite through the loins of them that rise up against him,

And of them that hate him, that they rise not again.

8-11. LEVI

We note the omission of Simeon, who is joined with Levi in Jacob's Blessing, Gen. XLIX, 5. The probable explanation is that Jacob had foretold that both Simeon and Levi should have their territories divided up among the other tribes. As Simeon's possessions consisted of only 19 unconnected cities within the territory of Judah (Josh. XIX, 2-9), the tribe of Simeon was regarded as included in Judah.

In blessing Levi, Moses prays that the privilege of guarding the Urim and the Thummim may remain with Levi, who had proved his fidelity to the Divine cause in the Wilderness.

8. thy Thummim and thy Urim. Objects connected with the breast-plate of the High Priest. holy one. i.e. the tribe of Levi, personified as an individual.

didst prove. At Massah (Exod. XVII, 1-7) and at Meribah (Num. XX, 1-13), when the piety of Moses and Aaron, the two great sons of Levi, was put to a severe test.

9. who said of his father . . . children. This describes in emphatic language the disinterested spirit in which the tribe of Levi discharges its office: the disregard of even the closest family ties when they interfere with the performance of religious duties. Thus, the Levites slew every man his companion and every man his neighbour, as a punishment for their worship of the Golden Calf; Exod. XXXII, 27.

and keep Thy covenant. See Mal. II, 5-7 ('My covenant was with him of life and peace . . . The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn away many from iniquity. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth').

10. Thine ordinances. Such being the Levites' record, they are worthy of having the prerogative of teaching Israel the precepts of God as laid down in the Torah, and designed for the maintenance of justice between man and man. The God of Israel 'is distinguished from the gods of Israel's neighbours, and towers above them as the God in Whose name justice was administered, and of Whom it could be said that He was not known where the laws of honour and good faith were violated. The priest, His interpreter, is the bearer and appointed upholder of right' (Kuenen).

they shall put . . . upon Thine altar. In addition to being the guardians and teachers of right in Israel, theirs is the charge of the Altar.

the loins. The seat of bodily strength.

them that hate him. Those who are opposed to the priestly prerogatives, like Korah (Num. XVI).

12. BENJAMIN

12. the beloved of the LORD. Even as Benjamin was the favourite of Jacob, Moses sees in that parental love for Benjamin a reflection of God's love for that tribe.

The twin tribe, Ephraim and Manasseh, receives the temporal blessings of fertility of soil and military prowess, accompanied by uninterrupted enjoyment of the Divine favour.

18b-19. ISSACHAR

in thy tents. In the enjoyment of rest; in the quiet pursuit of a peaceful life, possibly an agricultural one. While Zebulun chose adventure and enterprise, Issachar preferred a 'stay-at-home' existence. The Talmud interprets 'tents' as homes for the study of the Law. In 1 Chron. xii, 32, the men of Issachar are said to have been the religious teachers in Israel. Scripture here links Zebulun, the merchant and man of action, with Issachar, the student, the man of spirit; as if to show how necessary it is that these two types should always work in co-operation.

20-21. GAD

20. that enlargeth Gad. Gad's territory was east of Jordan—the territory of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and was larger than the territory of any of the Western tribes. Gad's 'enlarger' is God.

portion of a ruler. Or, 'commander's portion,' a district worthy of a martial leader. The meaning of this and the following line is very uncertain.

there came the heads. He took his part in the conquest of Western Palestine.

he executed the righteousness of the LORD. He (Gad) fulfilled that which he had promised; viz. to cross the Jordan and assist the other tribes to dispossess their enemies (Num. xxxii, 31 f). This is probably a case of the Perfect of certainty—the future action being viewed as past. In this way he did his duty in carrying out the righteous will and ordinances of God, who had decreed that Israel should inherit the land of Canaan.

22. DAN

22. lion's whelp. In the Blessing of Jacob (Gen. xlix, 17), Dan is compared to a serpent for mischievous subtlety. Here he is spoken of as a lion for agility, as a young lion leaping forth from the crevices and caves of the rocks of Bashan, a land celebrated for the size and strength of its cattle (Deut. xxxii, 14). Both similes refer to the nimbleness and adventurous spirit for which the tribe of Dan was celebrated. Samson was a Danite.

23. And of Naphtali he said:
O Naphtali, satisfied with favour,
And full with the blessing of the LORD:

And let him dip his foot in oil.

the south. On the west side of the sea of Kinnereth, Naphtali's territory was 'so styled in contrast to the main possessions of the tribe which were further north' (Driver). Its soil was specially fruitful in the region of Huleh and on the shore of the sea. The 'fruits of Kinnereth' are celebrated in the Talmud.

24-25. ASHER

24. blessed be Asher above sons. An exposition of the meaning of the name Asher ('happy'). He was to be blessed 'above sons'; i.e. to enjoy exceptional prosperity.

25. iron and brass shall be thy bars. Asher's dwelling shall be impregnable. His territory being in the far north and also on the sea-coast, it needed to be strongly fortified.

'With such golden words Moses takes leave of his people. Israel should have been a brave mountaineer people, if Moses' will had been fulfilled. The land lies apart, surrounded by mountains, seas and deserts—a Divinely blessed corner of the earth that, with industrious cultivation and the security that comes from unity, could have flourished wonderfully. To the north and south of Judea were the trade routes of the ancient world. By its very position alone, it could have become the happiest people of the world, if it had made use of its position and remained faithful to the spirit of its Laws' (Herder).

4. THE DEATH OF MOSES

CHAPTER XXXIV

Before his eyes close for ever, Moses beholds from afar the Promised Land from the top of Pisgah, and dies there according to God's decree. His incomparable rank as a prophet and unique place in the history of Israel.

1. went up . . . Nebo. From that height he came down no more.

'Amidst the tears of the people, the women beating their breasts and the children giving way to uncontrolled wailing, he withdrew. At a certain point in his ascent he made a sign to the weeping multitude to advance no further, taking with him only the elders, the high priest Eleazar and the general Joshua. At the top of the mountain, he dismissed the elders, and then, as he was embracing Eleazar and Joshua, and still speaking to them, a cloud suddenly stood over him, and he vanished in a deep valley' (Josephus).

unto mount Nebo, to the top of Pisgah. 'Pisgah' was the specific name for a series of mountain-ranges in the high plateau of Moab. In Deut. xxxii, 49, as well as in Num. xxvii, 12, these ranges are designated by the more general name of הר העברים, i.e. 'the mountain of the regions beyond'. Nebo was the special name of one of these mountain-ranges (cf. Num. xxi, 20).

even Gilead as far as Dan. Better, all the land—Gilead unto Dan (G. A. Smith).

In the clear air of Palestine, he saw the Land lying before him. From the top of Pisgah all Western Palestine is in sight—the undulating forests of Southern Gilead, the snow-clad top of Hermon, mounts Tabor and Gilboa, Ebal and Gerizim, the heights of Benjamin and Judah, the Mount of Olives, and Zion, Bethlehem and Hebron and Beersheba. Sifri states that Moses was given something more than a mere physical glimpse of the Holy Land. He was shown all the land of Israel as it then was in its prosperity, and as it would be in the days of its adversity. He was given a prophetic vision of the main episodes in the future history of Israel; so that he saw Samson and Gideon, Deborah and David, taking up his unfinished task of leadership, and was vouchsafed a vision of all that would happen unto Israel till the Judgment Day.

And the LORD said unto him: 'This is the land which I swore unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying: I will give it unto thy seed; I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither.' 5. So Moses the servant of the LORD died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the LORD. 6. And he was buried in the valley of the land of Moab over against Beth-peor; and no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day. 7. And Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. 8. And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days; so the days of weeping in the mourning for Moses were ended. 9. And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him; and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the unto this day. These words, like the whole of the latter portion of this chapter, were added by Joshua. This is the opinion of Rabbi Judah. Poetic and touchingly beautiful are the words of Rabbi Meir: 'These verses the Holy One, blessed be He, dictated, and Moses wrote them down in tears.' Such also was the view of Philo:— 'The Divine Spirit fell upon him, and he prophesied with discernment, while still alive, the story of his own death; told, ere the end, how the end came; told how he was buried with none present, surely by no mortal hands but by immortal powers; ... how all the nation wept and mourned for him a whole month and made open display, private and public, of their sorrow, in memory of his vast benevolence and watchful care for each of them and for all.'

7. nor his natural force abated. lit. 'neither had his freshness fled'. He suffered none of the infirmities of age, and the natural freshness of his body had not become dried up.

8. the mourning for Moses were ended. The days of mourning even for the best men must have an end. It is wrong unduly to prolong them. The workman passes, but the work must be continued. 'No sooner did the sun of Moses set, than the sun of Joshua rose' (Talmud).

9. spirit of wisdom. But another name for the Spirit of God (Ibn Ezra).

10. and there hath not risen ... like unto Moses. The pre-eminence of Moses is one of the Articles of Maimonides' Creed. 'To lead into freedom a people long crushed by tyranny; to discipline and order such a mighty host; to harden them into fighting men, before whom warlike tribes quailed and walled cities went down; to repress discontent and jealousy and mutiny ... require some towering character—a character blending in highest expression the

According to Jewish custom, the completion of any of the Five Books of the Torah is marked in the Synagogue by the congregation exclaiming חֲזַק חֲזַק וְנַחֲזִיק, 'Be strong, be strong, and let us strengthen one another.' Be strong. i.e. to carry out the teaching contained in the Book just completed.

The Massoretic Notes state the number of verses in the Book of Deuteronomy to be 955; its Sedrahs (parshiyoth) 11; its chapters 34; and the number of verses in the whole Torah to be 5,845.

Chapters xxxiii and xxxiv form the Reading for Rejoicing of the Law. When the last verses of xxxiv have been read, the Torah is immediately begun again by the reading of Gen. 1–11, 3.

JOSHUA I

CHAPTER I

1. Now it came to pass after the death of Moses the servant of the LORD, that the LORD spoke unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying: 2. 'Moses My servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. 3. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, to you have I given it, as I spoke unto Moses. 4. From the wilderness, and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the Great Sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your border. 5. There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life; as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. 6. Be strong and of good courage; for thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land which I swore unto their fathers to give them. 7. Only be strong and very courageous, to observe to do according to all the law, which Moses My servant commanded thee; turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest have good success whithersoever thou goest. 8. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy ways prosperous, and Israel's story did not close with the death of Moses. This is one of the lessons which the choice of this chapter as the Prophetic Reading for the last Sidrah of the Pentateuch is to teach. The reading of the first chapter of Joshua, which opens the section of Scripture known as 'The Prophets', is to remind us that though Moses is dead, his work and message are eternal, and remain the undying task of all future generations in Israel to fulfil.

The Book of Joshua records the conquest of the Promised Land (i-xii); the Division of the Land (xiii-xxi — Israel's 'Domesday Book') and Joshua's Farewell Addresses (xxii-xxiv).

MOSES' SUCCESSOR

1. the LORD spoke. This characteristic phrase of Scripture is one of the most obvious indications of what we call 'inspiration'. We are not in a position to define the exact mode in which the Divine message was communicated. Was it an inner conviction borne in upon the soul, voiceless but clear and definite? We cannot tell. 'How God reveals Himself to His chosen messengers will scarcely ever be understood. It is the greatest of mysteries; although that he reveals Himself is the greatest of certainties' (Marti).

Moses' minister. This designation, which is otherwise quite unnecessary, gives the reason why Joshua was worthy of such revelation: he had ministered unto Moses (Elijah Wilna).

2. Moses My servant. Not everyone who calls himself 'servant of the LORD' does God Himself so designate (Sifri).

then thou shalt have good success. 9. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed; for the LORD thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.¹ ¶ 10. Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, saying: 11. 'Pass through the midst of the camp, and command the people, saying: Prepare you victuals; for within three days ye are to pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land, which the LORD your God giveth you to possess it.' ¶ 12. And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh, spoke Joshua, saying: 13. 'Remember the word which Moses the servant of the LORD commanded you, saying: The LORD your God giveth you rest, and will give you this land. 14. Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, shall abide in the land which Moses gave you beyond the Jordan; but ye shall pass over before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valour, and shall help them; 15. until the LORD have given your brethren rest, as unto you, and they also have possessed the land which the LORD your God giveth them; then ye shall return unto the land of your possession, and possess it, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave you beyond the Jordan toward the sunrising.' ¶ 16. And they answered Joshua, saying: 'All that thou hast commanded us we will do, and whithersoever thou sendest us we will go. 17. According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee; only the LORD thy God be with thee, as He was with Moses. 18. Whosoever he be that shall rebel against thy commandment, and shall not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death; only be strong and of good courage.'

ADDITIONAL NOTES TO DEUTERONOMY

THE SHEMA

ITS MEANING AND HISTORY

THE MEANING OF THE SHEMA

'Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD is One.' These words enshrine Judaism's greatest contribution to the religious thought of mankind. They constitute the primal confession of Faith in the religion of the Synagogue, declaring that the Holy God worshipped and proclaimed by Israel is One; and that He alone is God, Who was, is, and ever will be. That opening sentence of the Shema rightly occupies the central place in Jewish religious thought; for every other Jewish belief turns upon it: all goes back to it; all flows from it. The following are some of its far-reaching implications, negative and positive, that have been of vital importance in the spiritual history of man.

ITS NEGATIONS

Polytheism. This sublime pronouncement of absolute monotheism was a declaration of war against all polytheism, the worship of many deities, and paganism, the deification of any finite thing or being or natural force. It scornfully rejected the star-cults and demon worship of Babylonia, the animal worship of Egypt, the nature worship of Greece, the Emperor worship of Rome, as well as the stone, tree, and serpent idolatries of other heathen religions with their human sacrifices, lustful rites, their barbarism and inhumanity. Polytheism breaks the moral unity of man, and involves a variety of moral standards; that is to say, no standard at all. The study of Comparative Religion clearly shows that, in polytheism, 'side by side with a High God of Justice and Truth, the cults of a goddess of sensual love, a god of intoxicating drink, or of thieves and liars, might be maintained' (Farnell). It certainly is not the soil on which a high and consistent ethical system grows. This is true of even its highest forms, such as the heathenism of the Greeks. 'The Olympian divinities merely copied and even exaggerated the pleasures and pains, the perfections and imperfections, the loftiness and baseness of life on earth. Man could not receive any moral guidance from them. The Greeks possessed nothing even remotely resembling a Decalogue to restrain and bind them' (Kastein). Despite the love of beauty that characterized the Greeks, and despite their iridescent minds, they remained barbarians religiously and morally; and their race was held up by their pupils, the Romans of Imperial days, as the prototype of everything that was mendacious, cruel, grasping and unjust. The fruit of Greek heathen teaching is, in fact, best seen in the horrors of the arena, the wholesale crucifixions, and the unspeakable bestialities of these same pupils, the Romans of Imperial days.

Quite other were the works of Hebrew Monotheism. Its preaching of the One, Omnipotent God liberated man from slavery to nature; from fear of demons and goblins and ghosts; from all creatures of man's infantile or diseased imagination. And that One God is One who 'is sanctified by righteousness', who is of purer eyes than to endure the sight of evil, or to tolerate wrong. This has been named ethical monotheism. There may have been independent recognition of the unity of the Divine nature among some peoples; e.g. the unitary sun-cult of Ikhnaton in Egypt, or some faint glimpses of it in ancient Babylon. But in neither of these systems of worship was it essentially ethical, completely transfused with the Moral Law, and holding moral conduct to be the beginning and end of the religious life. Likewise, moral thinking and moral practices had indeed existed from immemorial times everywhere; but the sublime idea that morality is something Divine, spiritual in its inmost essence—this is the distinctive teaching of the Hebrew Scriptures. In Hebrew monotheism, ethical values are not only the highest of human values, but exclusively the only values of eternal worth. 'There is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee,' exclaims the Hebrew Psalmist. These words are but a poetic translation of the Shema in terms of religious experience.

Dualism. The Shema excludes dualism, any assumption of two rival powers of Light and Darkness, of the universe being regarded as the arena of a perpetual conflict between the principles of Good and Evil. This was the religion of Zoroaster, the seer of ancient Persia. His teaching was far in advance of all other heathen religions. Yet it was in utter contradiction to the belief in One, Supreme Ruler of the World, shaping the light, and at the same time controlling the darkness (Isa. XLV, 7). In the Jewish view, the universe, with all its conflicting forces, is marvellously harmonized in its totality; and, in the sum, evil is overruled and made a new source of strength for the victory of the good. 'He maketh peace in His high places.' Zoroastrianism is alleged by some to be responsible for many folklore elements in Jewish theology, especially for its angelology. But though later generations in Judaism did speak of Satan and a whole hierarchy of angels, these were invariably thought of as absolutely the creatures of God. To attribute Divine powers to any of these beings, and deem them independent of God, or in any way on a par with the Supreme Being, would at all times have been deemed in Jewry to be wild blasphemy. It is noteworthy that the Jewish Mystics placed man—because he is endowed with free will—higher in the scale of spiritual existence than any mere 'messenger', which is the literal translation of the word angel, as well as of its Hebrew original, מלאך.

Pantheism. And the Shema excludes pantheism, which considers the totality of things to be the Divine. The inevitable result of believing that all things are divine, and all equally divine, is that the distinction between right and wrong, between holy and unholy, loses its meaning. Pantheism, in addition, robs the Divine Being of conscious personality. In Judaism, on the contrary, though God pervades the universe, He transcends it. 'The heavens are the work of Thy hands. They shall perish, but Thou shalt endure; yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt Thou change them, and they shall pass away. But Thou art the selfsame, and Thy years shall have no end' (Psalm cii, 26-8). The Rabbis expressed the same thought when they said: 'The Holy One, blessed be He, encompasses the universe, but the universe does not encompass Him.' And so far from submerging the Creator in His created universe, they would have fully endorsed the lines,

Though earth and man were gone,
And suns and universes ceased to be,
And Thou wert left alone,
Every existence would exist in Thee' (Emily Brontë).

Belief in the Trinity. In the same way, the Shema excludes the trinity of the Christian creed as a violation of the Unity of God. Trinitarianism has at times been indistinguishable from tritheism; i.e. the belief in three separate gods. To this were added later cults of the Virgin and the saints, all of them quite incompatible with pure monotheism. Judaism recognizes no intermediary between God and man; and declares that prayer is to be directed to God alone, and to no other being in the heavens above or on earth beneath.

ITS POSITIVE IMPLICATIONS

Brotherhood of Man. The belief in the unity of the Human Race is the natural corollary of the Unity of God, since the One God must be the God of the whole of humanity. It was impossible for polytheism to reach the conception of One Humanity. It could no more have written the tenth chapter of Genesis, which traces the descent of all the races of man to a common ancestry, than it could have written the first chapter of Genesis, which proclaims the One God as the Creator of the universe and all that is therein. Through Hebrew monotheism alone was it possible to teach the Brotherhood of Man; and it was Hebrew monotheism which first declared, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself', and 'The stranger that sojourneth with you shall be unto you as the homeborn among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself' (Lev. xix, 18, 34).

Unity of the Universe. The conception of monotheism has been the basis of modern science, and of the modern world-view. Belief in the Unity of God opened the eyes of man to the unity of nature; 'that there is a unity and harmony in the structure of things, because of the unity of their Source' (L. Roth). A noted scientist wrote:—'The One, Sole God—conceived as the Supreme and Absolute Being who is the Source of all the moral aspirations of man—that conception of the Deity accustomed the human spirit to the idea of Reason underlying all things, and kindled in man the desire to learn that Reason' (Dubois-Reymond). Likewise, A. N. Whitehead declares that the conception of absolute cosmic regularity is monotheistic in origin. And 'every fresh discovery confirms the fact that in all Nature's infinite variety there is one single Principle at work; that there is one controlling Power which—in the words of our Adon Olam hymn—is of no beginning and no end, existing before all things were formed, and remaining when all are gone' (Haffkine).

Unity of History. And this One God—Judaism teaches—is the righteous and omnipotent Ruler of the universe. In polytheism, it was practically impossible to arrive at 'the conception of a single Providence ruling the world by fixed laws; the multitude of divinities suggests the possibility of discord in the divine cosmos; and instils a sense of the capricious and incalculable in the unseen world' (Farnell). Not so Judaism, with its passionate belief in a Judge of all the earth, who can and will do right. As early as the days of the Second Temple, the idea of the Sovereignty of God was linked with the Shema. The Rabbis ordained that the words, 'Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD is One,' should be immediately followed by ברוך שם כבוד מלכותו לעולם ועד, 'Blessed be His name, Whose glorious kingdom is for ever and ever'—the proclamation of the ultimate triumph of justice on earth. Jewish monotheism thus stresses the supremacy of the will of God for righteousness over the course of history: 'One will rules all to one end—the world as it ought to be' (Moore).

The Messianic Kingdom. The cardinal Jewish teaching of a living God who rules history has changed the heart and the whole outlook of humanity. Not only the hallowing of human life, but the hallowing of history flows from this doctrine of a Holy God, who is hallowed by righteousness. It is only the Jew, and those who have adopted Israel's Scriptures as their own, who see all events in nature and history as parts of one all-embracing plan; who behold God's world as a magnificent unity; and who look forward to that sure triumph of justice in humanity on earth which men call the Kingdom of God. And it is only the Jew, and those who have gone to school to the Jew, who can pray וימליך מלכותיה, 'May His kingdom come.'

Highest among the implications of the Shema is the passionate conviction of the Jew that the day must dawn when all mankind will call upon the One God, when all the peoples will recognize that they are the children of One Father. Nine hundred years ago, Rashi commented as follows on the six words of the Shema: 'He Who now is our God and is not yet recognized by the nations as their God, will yet be the one God of the whole world. As it is written in Zephaniah iii, 9, I will turn to the peoples a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve Him with one consent; and it is said in Zechariah xiv, 9, And the LORD shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall the LORD be One, and His Name One.'

A word must be added in regard to the two proof-texts cited by Rashi. The first, 'I will restore to the peoples a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the LORD,' must be reckoned among the most remarkable utterances of the Prophets. It foretells a wonderful transformation of spirit that will come over the peoples of the earth. They are now only groping dimly after the true God, and stammering His praise. But the time will come when they shall adore Him with a full knowledge of Him; and with one consent (lit. 'shoulder to shoulder', i.e. without any superiority of one over the other), they will form a universal chorus to chant His praise. 'The amazing thing about this prophecy is that it foresees the time when the curse of Babel will be removed from the children of men, and the confusion of tongues will end: one world-language, based on man's moral and religious needs, will be the speech in the Kingdom of the Spirit on earth' (Sellin).

As to the words, 'And the LORD shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall the LORD be One, and His Name One,' they are combined with the Shema Yisroel in the Musaph Prayer of the New Year—one of the most solemn portions of the Jewish Liturgy. They also form the last sentence of the Oleynoo prayer, and thus end every statutory Jewish service—morning, afternoon, and evening. There could be no more fitting conclusion for the Jew's daily devotions than this universalist hope of God's Kingdom.

THE HISTORY OF THE SHEMA

The work of the Rabbis. Who unveiled to the masses of the Jewish people the spiritual wonders enshrined in the Shema? It is the immortal merit of the Rabbis in the centuries immediately before and after the common era, that these religious treasures did not remain the possession of the few, but became the heritage of the whole House of Israel. Thanks to the Rabbis, the fulness of that sacred truth gradually saturated the souls of the lowliest, as of the highest, in Israel. The recitation of the Shema was part of the regular daily worship in the Temple. They took it over to the Synagogue, and gave it central place in the morning and evening prayers of every Jew. We may judge the important part it played in the rabbinic consciousness from the fact that the whole Mishnah opens with the question, 'From what hour is the evening Shema to be read?'

It is the Rabbis who raised the six words שמע ישראל to a confession of Faith; who ordained that they be repeated by the entire body of worshippers when the Torah is taken out on Sabbaths and Festivals; in the Sanctification (Kedusha) on these sacred occasions; after the Neilah service, as the culmination of the great Day of Atonement; and in man's last hour, when he is setting out to meet his Heavenly Father face to face. In this way, the Shema became the soul-stirring, collective self-expression of Israel's spiritual being. But even in the private prayer of the individual Jew, the Rabbis spared no effort to enhance the solemnity of its utterance. It is to be said audibly, they ordained, the ear hearing what the lips utter; and its last word echod ('One') was to be pronounced with special emphasis. All thoughts other than God's Unity must be shut out. It must be spoken with entire collection and concentration of heart and mind (כוונה); the reading of the Shema may not be interrupted even to respond to the salutation of a king. If the words of the Shema are uttered devoutly and reverently—the Rabbis taught—they thrill the very soul of the worshipper and bring him a realization of communion with the Most High. 'When men in prayer declare the Unity of the Holy Name in love and reverence, the walls of earth's darkness are cleft in twain, and the face of the Heavenly King is revealed, lighting up the universe' (Zohar).

The Shema and martyrdom. The unwearied national pedagogy of the Rabbis bore blessed fruit. The Shema became the first prayer of innocent childhood, and the last utterance of the dying. It was the rallying-cry by which a hundred generations in Israel were welded together into one Brotherhood to do the will of their Father in heaven; it was the watchword of the myriads of martyrs who agonized and died for the Unity 'as the ultima ratio of their religion' (Herford). During every persecution and massacre, from the time of the Crusades to the wholesale slaughter of the Jewish population in the Ukraine in the years 1919 to 1921, Shema Yisroel has been the last sound on the lips of the victims. All the Jewish martyrologies are written round the Shema. The Jewish Teachers in medieval Germany introduced a regular Benediction for the recital of the Shema at the hour of 'sanctification of the Name'; i.e. when a man is facing martyrdom. It is as follows: 'Blessed art Thou, O LORD our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by Thy commandments and bade us love Thee with all our heart and all our soul, and to sanctify Thy glorious and awful Name in public. Blessed art Thou, O LORD, Who sanctifiest Thy Name amongst the many.' Numberless were the dire occasions when this Benediction was spoken. One instance will suffice. When the hordes of the Crusaders reached Xanten, near the Rhine (June 27, 1096), the Jews of that place were partaking of their Sabbath-eve meal together. The arrival of the Crusaders meant, of course, certain death to them, and the meal was discontinued. But they did not leave the hall until the saintly R. Moses ha-Cohen first said Grace, enlarging the regular text with prayers appropriate to the awful moment. The Grace was concluded with the Shema. Thereupon they went to the synagogue, where they all met with martyrdom. It is such happenings, which decimated the Jewish communities in the Rhine region by massacre and self-immolation to escape baptism, that caused the contemporary Synagogue poet, Kalonymos ben Yehudah, to sing:

'Yea, they slay us and they smite,
Vex our souls with sore affright;
All the closer cleave we, LORD,
To thine everlasting word.
Not a line of all their Mass
Shall our lips in homage pass;
Though they curse, and bind, and kill,
The living God is with us still.
We still are Thine, though limbs are torn;
Better death than life forsworn.
From dying lips the accents swell,
"Thy God is One, O Israel";
And bridegroom answers unto bride,
"The LORD is God, and none beside,"
And, knit with bonds of holiest faith,
They pass to endless life through death.'

The reading of the Shema indeed fulfilled the promise of the Rabbis that it clothes man with invincible lion-strength. It endowed the Jew with the double-edged sword of the spirit against the unutterable terrors of his long night of suffering and exile.

Defence of the Unity. The Rabbis not only trained Israel to the understanding of the vital significance of the Divine Unity; they also defended the Jewish God-idea whenever its purity was threatened by enemies from without or within. They permitted no toying with polytheism, be its disguises ever so ethereal; they brooked no departure, even by a hair's breadth, from the most rigorous monotheism; and rejected absolutely everything that might weaken or obscure it. The fight against idolatry and paganism begun by the Prophets was continued by the Pharisees. Abraham, the father of the Hebrew people, they taught, started on his career as an idol-wrecker. In legends, parables, and discourses, they showed forth the folly and futility of idol-worship, and pointed to the infamy and moral degradation evidenced by the Roman deification of the reigning Emperor. Josephus records that, when Caligula ordered the symbols of his divinity to be erected in the Temple at Jerusalem, tens of thousands of Jews declared their readiness to be trampled to death under the heels of the Roman cavalry, rather than suffer the Jewish belief in the Unity of God to be outraged. 'In the world-wide Roman Empire, it was the Jews alone who refused the erection of statues and the paying of divine homage to Caligula. They thereby saved the honour of the human race, when all the other peoples slavishly obeyed the decree of the Imperial madman' (Fuerst). The Rabbis defended the Unity of God against the Jewish Gnostics, those ancient heretics who blasphemed the God of Israel, ridiculed the Scriptures, and asserted a duality of Divine Powers. And they defended it against the Jewish Christians, who darkened the sky of Israel's monotheism by teaching a novel doctrine of God's 'sonship'; by identifying a man, born of woman, with God; and by advocating the doctrine of a Trinity. Said a Palestinian Rabbi of the fourth century: 'Strange are those men who believe that God has a son and suffered him to die. The God who could not bear to see Abraham about to sacrifice his son, but exclaimed "Lay not thine hand upon the lad," would He have looked on calmly while His son was being slain, and not have reduced the whole world to chaos!'

In the Middle Ages. Throughout the Middle Ages, the Jewish Teachers continued the religious education of the people begun in earlier centuries. They upheld the cause of pure Monotheism at the Religious Disputations in which they were compelled to participate by the triumphant and all-powerful Church. That portion of their defence of Judaism which found expression in literary form, like the 'Book of Victory' (Sefer Nizzachon), is of lasting value. Such likewise is the book of Isaac Troki, a Polish Karaite of the sixteenth century, 'the Defence of the Faith,' which evoked the warm praise of Voltaire. Of especial importance is the work of the Jewish philosophers, whose effort represents a distinct enrichment of the world's religious thinking. Saadyah, Gabirol, Bachya, Hallevi, Maimonides purge the concept of God of all anthropomorphism, and vindicate the unity and uniqueness of Israel's God-conception. Solomon Ibn Gabirol, renowned alike as philosopher and Synagogue poet, begins his Royal Crown with the words: 'Thou art One, the first great Cause of all: Thou art One, and none can penetrate—not even the wisest in heart—the unfathomable mystery of Thy Unity. Thou art One; Thy Unity can neither be lessened nor increased, for neither plurality nor change nor any attribute can be applied to Thee. Thou art One, but the imagination fails in any attempt to define or limit Thee. Therefore I said, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue."'

In the present day. The long and arduous warfare begun by the Prophets and continued by the Rabbis is not yet ended. The Unity of God has its antagonists in the present day, as in former ages. Even advanced non-Jewish writers on religion are, as a rule, but hesitating witnesses to the Unity of God; and liberal Christian theologians wax quite eloquent in depicting the amenities of life under polytheism. They plead that it helped to interfuse the whole life with 'religion'; to intensify the 'joy of life' and delight in the world of nature; and that it made for religious tolerance.

On closer examination, these partisan claims collapse entirely. As for tolerance, even enlightened Greek polytheism permitted three of the greatest thinkers of the Periclean age—Socrates, Protagoras, and Anaxagoras—to be put to death on religious grounds. The Jews came into contact with Greek polytheism in its later stages. But neither Antiochus Epiphanes, who attempted to drown Judaism in the blood of its faithful children, nor Apion, the frenzied spokesman of the anti-Semites in Alexandria, displayed particular tolerance.

Again, the alleged interfusion of the whole of life with 'religion' under polytheism did not save the votaries of Greek polytheism from moral laxity, licentiousness and inhuman behaviour both in war and in peace. As to intensifying the 'joy of life'—that 'joy of life', even among the Greeks, seems to have been the prerogative of the few. Thus, Greek society was broad-based on unrighteousness, i.e. on human slavery; and in Greece 'the animated tool,' as Aristotle defined the slave, was denied all human rights. It is, furthermore, difficult to see wherein the 'joy of life' consisted for the human sacrifices regularly offered by the heathen Semites and Slavs, Germans and Greeks. In regard to the last-named, it is not generally remembered that we find traces of human sacrifice throughout the Hellenic world, in the cult of almost every god, and in all periods of the independent Greek states. In the Roman Empire, this hideous accompaniment of polytheism continued till the fourth century of our present era; while in India the burning of widows was abolished only in the year 1840!

The other claims on behalf of polytheism are seen to be equally untenable. Delight in the world of nature was not confined to the polytheists. It could not have been alien to the people that produced the Song of Songs, and is therefore not the possession of heathenism alone. No less a scientist and thinker than Alexander von Humboldt has shown that the æsthetic contemplation of nature only began when the landscape was freed from its gods, and men could rejoice in nature's own greatness and beauty.

Various secular writers on religion go far beyond modernist theologians in their depreciation of monotheism. Unlike those theologians, they do not halt between two opinions, and they know no hesitations. Ernest Renan ascribed the rise of belief in One God to the desert surroundings of the early Hebrews. 'The desert is monotheistic,' he announced. He omitted, however, to explain why, if so, the other Semitic desert-dwellers had remained polytheists; or why the primeval inhabitants of the Sahara, Gobi and Kalahari deserts were not monotheists. Anti-Semites go further still. In order to belittle Israel's infinite glory as the Prophet of Monotheism, they decry the Unity of God as 'a bare, barren, arithmetical idea'; as merely 'the minimum of religion'. (It is strange that the alleged 'minimum of religion' should have given the Decalogue to the world; should have produced the Psalms, the book of devotion of civilized humanity; should have succeeded in shattering all idols, turning the course of history, and freeing the children of men from the stone heart of heathen antiquity.) Some of these anti-Semites contrast the bountiful abundance displayed by Greece in its hundreds of gods and goddesses, by India in its thousands of fantastic deities, with the one God of Israel. 'Only one God—how mean, how meagre!'—they exclaim. It would serve no purpose to repeat further strictures on monotheism on the part of men who deem that, in attacking Jews, one need be neither logical nor fair; and that one may say anything of Jews and Judaism so long as it covers them with ridicule. But Truth is on the march; and the number of those thinkers is growing who recognize that 'the Shema is the basis of all higher, ethical, spiritual religion; an imperishable pronouncement, reverberating to this day in every idealistic conception of the universe' (Gunkel).

Conclusion. 'It was undeniably a stroke of true religious genius—a veritable prompting by the Holy Spirit, רוח הקודש,—to select, as Prof. Steinthal reminds us, out of the 5,845 verses of the Pentateuch this one verse (Deut. vi, 4) as the inscription for Israel's banner of victory. Throughout the entire realm of literature, secular or sacred, there is probably no utterance to be found that can be compared in its intrinsic intellectual and spiritual force, or in the influence it exerted upon the whole thinking and feeling of civilized mankind, with the six words which have become the battle-cry of the Jewish people for more than twenty-five centuries' (Kohler).

B

REWARD AND PUNISHMENT IN JUDAISM

Chapter xi, 13–21, which forms the middle portion of the Shema, proclaims the doctrine of the Retributive Righteousness of God. Both rewards and punishments are here agricultural, and in particular refer to the rainfall, which is a matter of life and death in a land like Palestine.

Judaism teaches that obedience to the will of God is rewarded, and disobedience punished. This doctrine is bound up with the fundamental belief of Judaism in a God of Justice. Because God is just, He will not treat the righteous and the wicked in the same manner. In some way, it must be better with the former than with the latter, through the justice of God. But such reward—whether conceived as material blessing or as in later ages, when it became more and more spiritualized—is not made the motive for virtue. That must be love of God and His commandments, a free enthusiasm for doing His will.

Throughout his Farewell Discourses, Moses demands obedience to the Divine will out of pure and disinterested love of God. His words in Deuteronomy breathe an ardent love and spiritual awe of the invisible God, a heart-religion such as we met in the greatest of the Psalms and the highest portions of Prophecy. Throughout these same Discourses, however, we find, as in no other Biblical book, the appeal to material reward for obedience, and material punishment for disobedience, repeatedly and urgently pressed. 'This is due,' it has been explained, 'to the personal position of Moses. In himself he is a lofty, spiritual nature, yearning with a parent's love to a people incapable of rising to his spiritual plane; a people yet in the childhood of what we call real life, to be enticed with promises and frightened with threats. And alternately he pours his spiritual fervour into their dull ears, and then falls back helplessly on to the material considerations which alone will move them' (Moulton). He boldly makes use of every motive that actually influences men—gratitude to God, feeling of dependence on Him, and fear of God—in order to win them to the higher life. 'He does not ask men to serve God because it will be profitable to them, but because they love God: and he endeavours to make them love God by reciting all His love and friendliness and patience to His people, and by pointing out the evil which His love is seeking to ward off. Having before his mind the results of evil conduct, he does urge men to escape from the wrath that may rest upon them. But the only means so to escape is to yield to the love of God' (Harper).

How far there is correspondence in actual life between righteousness and happiness, and between misery and sin, is a recurrent problem both in Biblical and post-Biblical Judaism. Deuteronomy and Ezekiel declare that men get in this world exactly what they deserve. Job, Jeremiah, Habakkuk, the Psalms, and Ecclesiastes courageously face the bitter facts of life, and point out how often it goes well with the wicked and ill with the righteous. This world-riddle becomes less distracting under the influence of the belief in the immortality of the soul.

Since the time of the Maccabees, the belief in immortality had become wellnigh universal among the masses of the Jewish people. R. Jannai could thus remain quite unperturbed by his recognition that 'it is not in our power to explain either the prosperity of the wicked, or the affliction of the righteous'. 'Faithful is thy Employer,' says R. Tarphon, 'to pay thee the reward of thy labour, and know that the grant of the reward of the righteous will be in the future life.' New spiritual conceptions became prominent; such as the great saying of the illustrious Babylonian teacher Rab, 'In the world to come there is neither eating nor drinking . . . but the righteous enjoy the radiance of the Shechinah.'

In connection with this world-riddle, the Rabbis never lost sight of two things. One, that suffering is not an absolute evil: it educates, it purifies, it can be an instrument of Divine love; see on VIII, 5. Through it, Israel came into possession of the best gifts—the Torah, the Holy Land, and Eternal Life. Rab declared, 'He who suffers no affliction and persecution does not belong to Israel'; i.e. has not known the highest spiritual experience of God's chosen ones. And the second thing is, that in the deepest sense, righteousness is its own reward. Ben Azzai taught that even as one sin begets another, so the reward of a good deed is that it leads to another good deed! שָׂרָר מִצְוָה מִצְוָה. The Rabbis would have rejected the thought that in this world righteousness should permanently produce misery, and wickedness invariably lead to happiness, as both irrational and blasphemous. Nevertheless, they taught men to disregard the thought of reward altogether; and to do their duty לְשֵׂמָה, lishmah, for its own sake. Rabbi Eleazer explained the opening verse of Psalm cxviii, 'Happy is the man that delighteth greatly in His commandments,' to mean, 'he delights greatly in His commandments, but not in the reward connected with them.' This is in line with the teaching of one of the earliest Sages, Antigonus of Socho, 'Bc not like servants that minister to their master for the sake of receiving a reward; but bc like servants who minister to their master without the condition of receiving a reward; and let the fear of Heaven be upon you' (Ethics of the Fathers).

'It is true that the ordinary man may be incapable of such pure devotion; and, in his case, promises of reward and punishment are necessary. But such promises are merely a means to an end, the end being the attainment of such spiritual exaltation in which the love of good will be the sole stimulus to good. Let men serve God at first for reward; they will end by serving Him without any such motive. He who desires to serve God from love must not serve to win the future world, but he does the right and eschews the wrong because he is a man, and owes it to his manhood to perfect himself' (Maimonides).

JEWISH EDUCATION

ITS SCOPE

Though it was never intended that women become learned in the Torah, a clear understanding of the fundamentals of Jewish faith and duty was required of the Jewish woman. In ancient times, the Mishnah (Ned. iv) speaks of the Scripture instruction of sons and daughters as the normal practice. In the Middle Ages, Judah the Pious writes: 'Girls too should receive instruction in the Holy Law. It is true that the Rabbis taught that girls need not be instructed in the Talmud. This only means that it is not necessary for them to pursue Talmudic learning, but girls must share in religious and moral instruction. Everyone should know the Divine laws and commandments; youths should learn them in the Hebrew language, women and girls may learn them in their mother tongue. The instruction of girls must be given in a gentle and pleasant manner.'

It is but too true that in past centuries the standard of education for Jewish girls was immeasurably lower than it was in the case of boys. This did not then much matter, as in the sheltered life of the olden ghetto the morale of Jewish women remained unharmed by this narrow educational ideal. 'The Jewish woman vied with her husband in an admiration for a religious culture which she was not permitted to share; her greatest pride was to have sons learned in the Torah. She was, above everything, modest and chaste, and she could immolate herself as a martyr when the need arose' (M. Joseph). Yet even in those ages, a whole devotional literature arose, e.g. the Techinnoth, in the Judeo-German vernacular, which was exclusively intended for the use of girls and women, to acquaint them with Scripture, and enable them to understand the teachings of Jewish ritual and ethics.

Earlier than among any other people, Jewish law and custom ordained the provision of elementary instruction to all the children of the community, rich and poor alike. 'Be ye heedful of the children of the poor, for from them does the Torah go forth,' was the warning of the Rabbis. And the Jewish knowledge which is to endow every Jewish boy or girl with the Jewish outlook and Jewish loyalty cannot be acquired in the few hundred hours of instruction they receive in the current Religion Classes. It must extend over years, and not end with adolescence. 'Nicht Religionsstunden, sondern Religionsjahre,' said the illustrious Leopold Zunz, the founder of the new Jewish learning. The continuation teaching of the Jewish youth and the Jewish adult need not necessarily be carried on in formal classes. But a deep yearning, and constant striving, for acquaintance with Jewish thought, and the classical sources of Jewish inspiration, are indispensable for real, conscious, and not merely accidental, membership in the House of Israel.

ITS CONTENT

As the aim of Jewish education is the consecration of the Jewish child to Judaism and his preparation for a life of beneficence for Israel and humanity, it must consist of the following four elements.

(1) Jewish Religion.—i.e. the Jewish beliefs concerning God, the Torah and Israel; the teachings and practices, the symbols and institutions which have come down to the House of Israel through the ages. Such knowledge does not come of itself, and cannot be satisfactorily picked up from other Jewish studies. The growing boy and girl will in the future be often called upon to state and defend their religious position. They should be helped to a formulation of Jewish belief by means of systematic instruction.

(2) The Hebrew Language. Hebrew is Israel's historic language, and the key to all Israel's treasures; and, being the key and receptacle of Israel's message to mankind, no other language, whether living or dead, has had such a vast and eternal span of influence. It is the most important of human tongues, the language of languages, the Sacred Tongue. Every Jewish child is entitled to the possession of an intimate, even if not extensive, knowledge of the Sacred Tongue, which shall give that child a lot and portion in the synagogue, the heart of Jewish communal life. A Hebrew-less Jewry has no future, because it cannot fairly be said to have a present.

(3) The Sacred Scriptures. The beginnings of Israel's history as related in the Pentateuch should early form part of the child's soul-life. But we must go beyond the Pentateuch, and teach the whole Bible story. The main stress must be laid on the living truths underlying the narration of the facts. It is these truths, enshrined not only in Bible history, but in prophecy, psalm, proverb and moral discourse, that are of transcendent worth to the spiritual development of the child. Through these truths, the Bible is a Tree of Life to them that grasp it.

(4) Jewish History. Jewish History is a continuous revelation, with a divine lesson for each generation. Nobody can understand the Jew—the Jew cannot understand himself—if he knows nothing of Jewish history beyond the Chumesh, or the Bible or even Josephus. Every Jew should know the outstanding events and personalities of every age in Jewish history, with appropriate selections from our imperishable literary monuments. Only he who has wept over the tragedy of Israel and has been inspired by the story of our martyrs, who knows something of the wealth of our literature and of our contributions to the humanization of man, can have the proud Jewish consciousness that he is a member of a holy and indomitable People, or understand the meaning of the Unity of Israel, with its great ethical corollaries, the warning against the profanation of the Jewish Name (Chillul Hashem) and the sublime duty of hallowing the Name of God (Kiddush Hashem).

MONARCHY AND FREEDOM IN ISRAEL

I

The Biblical theory of government is among the greatest contributions ever made to the political life of man. Such, however, is far from being the general opinion. This looks upon the two ancient Jewish kingdoms as petty Oriental despotisms, whose State life was never of any importance to the larger world.

Both Jewish and non-Jewish writers are responsible for this ignorance and radical misconception of Israel's remarkable achievements as a political entity.

On the one hand, many Jewish writers have been under the influence of the German-American Reform Movement in Judaism, which minimizes and attempts to eliminate the national element from the consciousness of the Jew of to-day. These writers, approaching the question with a theological bias, dismiss the political history of ancient Israel as, on the whole, 'a gloomy record of bad government, tyranny and oppression.' We shall see how recklessly this die-hard partisan view runs counter to the facts of history, as marshalled by a whole series of scholars, from John Michaelis and Joseph Salvador to Justice Sulzberger and Prof. T. H. Robinson.

On the other hand, non-Jewish writers often look upon Israel's national existence as a mere 'preparation' for Christianity; or, they share the late Sir Henry Maine's superstition that 'nothing, except the blind forces of Nature, moves in the world to-day, that is not Greek in origin'. They, therefore, bid us turn to Greece, if we would learn the origins of free government.

Now, as to Greece, the 158 petty, quarrelling, fratricidal States that are comprised under that geographical term have left behind little indeed that is worthy of emulation in political life. Thus, the Athenians chose their judges by lot, and their generals by mass meeting. 'The Greeks had no political unity. Every small city-state was an independent, sovereign community. This raised the hatred between city and city, still more the hatred between class and class in each city, to a dangerous pitch. At Athens, some of the men of the old ruling families formed an association, every member of which had to take an oath, "I will be an enemy to the popular party and will try to do it every harm that I can"' (Edwyn Bevan). The Greeks displayed to the full that fatal vice of factiousness which imbues politics with fanaticism, and proscribes opponents by massacre or exile. 'The various forms of government that the Greeks established were all experiments, which, owing to the fact that they were carried to their extreme logical conclusion, culminated in absurdity. Whether they tried an aristocracy, a tyranny, a democracy or a Spartan system of military communism, there was always some section of the people who were fettered and oppressed. Nietzsche rightly calls them "the political fools of ancient history"' (Kastein).

In absolute contrast to this, there existed in Israel one form of State, constructed on a definite principle, and a political constitution that was truly representative of the spirit and aspirations of the community. The normal form of government was the monarchy; and the conception of kingship it embodied was unique throughout antiquity. 'Down to modern times,' says T. H. Huxley, 'no State had a constitution in which the interests of the people are so largely taken into account, in which the duties so much more than the privileges of rulers are insisted upon, as that drawn up for Israel in Deuteronomy and Leviticus.'

II

THE KING

Among all other Oriental peoples, the word 'king' connotes an irresponsible despot, vested with unchallenged authority. All law is the expression of his will; and, while it binds every other member of the community, the monarch himself is free to disregard or to supersede it. He owes no formal duties to his subjects, and is answerable to none for his actions. To the Eastern mind, a 'limited monarchy' was a contradiction in terms.

It was otherwise in Israel. There it is God who is the real King and the sole supreme authority; and the monarch is but the agent of the Divine King, entrusted with an indicated commission for which he is responsible to God who chose him. No Jewish ruler would ever have dared to claim Divine honours, and, like the Egyptian and Roman emperors, order sacrifices to be offered to him. In Israel, the monarch is under the Law, and is bound to respect the life, honour, and possessions of his subjects. We must keep these things in mind if we are to realize Israel's unique and original attitude to the monarchy. And then let us turn to the twenty-first chapter of the First Book of Kings. Naboth's vineyard was hard by king Ahab's palace at Jezreel. Ahab was anxious either to buy it, or to give Naboth a better vineyard in exchange. However, as Jezreel was a walled city, the law of Jubilee did not apply to it, and the inheritance of his fathers, if sold by Naboth, would not eventually revert to the seller, but would be for ever lost to the family. He, therefore, received the king's proposal with horror, and refused. Ahab showed his annoyance. When Jezebel, his foreign queen, hears the story, she is quite unable to comprehend her husband's difficulties. A king is nothing, who is not prepared to take what he wants, is her view of the situation. 'I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite,' she says. The law which could not be changed by force she evades by fraud. With Ahab's acquiescence she assumes royal powers for the purpose. It may be that Naboth in his indignation at the king's proposal had uttered some hasty words, though quite insufficient to warrant the course adopted by Jezebel. She has Naboth accused of blasphemy and treason; he is duly tried in the local courts; and, having been found guilty on perjured testimony, is made to pay the supreme penalty for his alleged crimes. When Ahab is about to take possession of the vineyard, he is confronted by Elijah. The Prophet of Truth and Justice denounces him as a murderer and robber, and foretells the vengeance of Heaven that would descend upon his entire House. It is interesting to compare this incident in Scripture with the conduct of the later Roman Emperor Diocletian. It was his habit to charge with treason any of his subjects whose estates he desired; to have the owner executed; and then confiscate those estates. Of course, there was no Elijah to raise his voice against the Imperial procedure. The Diocletian incident is typical of Roman rule in the Provinces of the Empire. It was unbelievably merciless. The hideous misgovernment of Palestine by the Roman Procurators as recorded by Josephus is not exceptional. 'Roman administration sucked the life-blood out of its Eastern subjects, and diminished their will to live' (W. R. Inge). In the matter of humane government, Rome has as little to teach us as has Greece.

Normally—i.e. outside Israel—the subject's life, honour, and property were throughout antiquity at the absolute disposal of the sovereign. And this was so not only in regard to individuals. In Egypt, the lives of vast multitudes of men were sacrificed in connection with the frenzied building schemes of the Pharaohs. Herodotus tells us that in the time of Necho II (609–588 B.C.E.), no less than 120,000 labourers were worked to death in the construction of a canal connecting the Nile and the Red Sea. The contemporary Jewish ruler, king Jehoiakim, tried to emulate the example of Necho II, and he built himself palaces by means of forced labour. In other countries, such a thing was taken to be the unquestioned prerogative of the king. But absolute power in a ruler was incomprehensible to the Jewish mind; and that enterprise was deemed an outrage against law and reason, against immemorial custom and all human decency. Like Elijah before him, Jeremiah the Prophet arose, and came to the door of Jehoiakim's palace, crying: 'Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by injustice; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not his hire.... He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem' (Jer. xxii, 13, 19).

The king in Israel recognized his responsibility not only to God and the Divine Law, but to the human community that had enthroned him as its leader as well. It is not the king but the people who is in possession of sovereign rights, and the people was free to impose fresh conditions on each new monarch at his accession. A refusal to accept these new conditions cost Solomon's son, Rehoboam, the greater part of his kingdom (1 Kings xii, 16). And, as a rule, the kings did not dare to break the covenant entered into with their subjects at their accession. The exceptions to this rule are, Ahab, who was dominated by his Tyrian wife; and Jehoiakim, who was imposed on Judah by a foreign conqueror. Thus it comes that even the great Prophets, who certainly never shrank from denouncing social iniquity wherever it was found, say little of royal malpractices in either realm. And the Psalmists could bid their royal ruler 'ride on prosperously in behalf of truth, and meekness, and righteousness' (Ps. xlv, 5); and could pray, 'Give the king thy judgments, O God. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and the souls of the needy shall he save. He shall redeem their soul from oppression and violence, and precious shall their blood be in his sight' (Ps. lxxii, 1, 7, 13, 14). They all cherish the Messianic dream that days are coming when the king shall be shepherd to his people, when the king's sceptre shall be a sceptre of peace, and upon him shall rest the spirit of wisdom and counsel and the fear of the LORD (Isa. xi, 2).

This truly democratic relation between the governor and the governed in Israel is indicated in the Scriptural words, 'And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book . . . and he shall read therein all the days of his life . . . that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren.' On this a recent Schweich lecturer has the following admirable comment: 'In Israel, the king exists for the sake of his people. He has power and authority; but they are not given him for his own pleasure, but for the safety and well-being of the nation over whom he rules. He does not stand on a higher level than others, except in so far as his duties give him a loftier place. He is primus inter pares, and though he must of necessity have special authority, yet he belongs to the same order as his people: he is one of them. While to every other ancient monarch the subject was a slave, to the Israelite king he was a brother' (T. H. Robinson).

III

ETHICAL FOUNDATIONS

The conception of a constitutional and law-abiding king, to whom the meanest of his subjects was a 'brother', is not the only unique characteristic of the Mosaic Commonwealth. It is well to enumerate a few others of the ethical foundations of the Mosaic Polity.

(1) THE SUPREMACY OF JUSTICE IN THE STATE

It is noteworthy that the Biblical regulations concerning justice precede those of the appointment of the king (xvii, 14–20): justice is to be above the monarchy. This is certainly without a parallel in ancient times. Only in the modern world do we find similar instances of national reverence for justice. England's advance on the road of freedom is largely due to the fact that, at an early date in her history, the administration of justice became independent of the king. Even in our own day there have been and are great European states which openly and deliberately destroy the independence of their Courts of Law, and turn them into instruments of State policy.

'Justice must be guided solely by State interests.' said a Nazi ruler. 'Every judge must remember that his decisions are intended to promote nothing but the prevailing policy of the State,' is the pronouncement of a Soviet commissar for justice. As far as these two governments are concerned, the Divine demand of 'Justice, and only justice, shalt thou pursue', was made in vain. Civilization is once again witnessing travesties of, and outrages on, justice that recall the darkest days of the Middle Ages.

(2) DIGNITY OF LABOUR

The recognition of the dignity of labour could not be looked for in Athens and Rome. In these societies, labour was relegated to the slave, who was merely 'an animated tool' without any human claims or rights. In every such society, work itself—even that of a physician or schoolmaster—becomes dishonourable; and, as in Sparta, is forbidden to the free citizen.

In sharpest contrast to the above, the Jewish Sages are unanimous in their insistence that work ennobles and sanctifies, and that idleness is the door to temptation and sin. They were themselves toilers, earning their daily bread by following some handicraft as masons, tailors, sandal-makers, carpenters. The most renowned of all the Rabbis, Hillel the Elder, was a wood-cutter.

In Israel, man remained master of labour; labour did not mean the bondage of man. The Sabbath gave the labourer every week a day of freedom and leisure. This was quite incomprehensible to the Greeks and Romans. Their writers—Tacitus, Juvenal, Plutarch—make merry over the idea of presenting one day in every seven to the worker! The far-reaching humanitarian significance of the Sabbath was, of course, undreamt of by them; and even 'our modern spirit, with all its barren theories of civic and political rights and its strivings towards freedom and equality, has not thought out and called into existence a single institution that, in its beneficent effects upon the labouring classes, can in the slightest degree be compared to the Weekly Day of Rest promulgated in the Sinaitic wilderness' (Proudhon). It was many ages before its man-redeeming implications began to be seen. The Mosaic restrictions as to the days of weekly work that might be demanded of the labourer laid down a principle of immeasurable importance for the social legislation of the future. At long last, after three thousand years, humanity has taken the next step; viz. that of regulating the hours of daily labour. This slowness in recognizing the needs of labour is no doubt due to the fact that, till quite recent times, classical literature monopolized the education of the governing classes of the European peoples. As with the Greeks and Romans, idleness became the mark of nobility; and it was deemed to be beneath the man of gentle birth to worry over the condition of serfs or toilers (Bloch).

(3) PROPERTY AND POVERTY

Among the Romans, the idea of property took precedence over the idea of humanity. Thus, if the debtor was unable to repay the sum advanced to him, the Roman creditor could imprison him in a private dungeon, chain him to a block, sell him into slavery, or slay him. With such a deification of property, it is small wonder that poverty was in itself considered dishonouring; and that pity for the poor was looked upon as a sickly sentimentality, unworthy of the free man. Virgil praises one of his heroes because he never felt any sympathy with sufferers through want; Seneca thinks it natural to recoil in horror from a poor man; and Plautus declares feeding the hungry to be cruelty, because it merely prolongs a life of misery.

In Israel, property was never a noli me tangere; neither was the possession of the individual over it deemed to be absolute, as is shown by the Sabbatical and tithe laws. 'He who says, What is mine is mine and what is thine is thine, that man speaks like a citizen of Sodom' (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 13).

Such subordination of the rights of property to those of humanity explains the place and claims of the poor in the Jewish Commonwealth. It was a new conception in the history of the world—a conception that could as little have been derived from Egypt, as from Greece and Rome then unborn. 'The Hebrew commonwealth was a commonwealth whose ideal it was that every man should sit under his own vine and fig-tree, with none to vex him or make him afraid; in which for even the bond slave there should be hope; in which for even the beast of burden there should be rest. With the blast of the jubilee trumpets the slave goes free, and a re-division of the land secures again to the poorest his fair share in the bounty of the common Creator. The reaper must leave something for the gleaner; even the ox cannot be muzzled as he treadeth out the corn' (Henry George).

IV

DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS

Foremost among these are the Prophets. The vigilance of the Prophets, throughout Jewish history, against every abuse perpetrated by the brute force of the oppressor—whoever he be—was ceaseless. Samuel warns the tribes of Israel against the ways of the Eastern despot; and, long before Elijah, Nathan the Prophet hurls his 'Thou art the man!' at the royal sinner. In view of the unique role the Prophets played in the moral evolution of the Jewish people, even a secularist like John Stuart Mill perceived the overwhelming influence of the Prophets in upholding ideals of true democracy. He saw in them the living equivalent of the modern freedom of speech and liberty of the press. Such likewise is the verdict of all modern scholars:

'It was part of the spirit of Prophecy to be dumbfounded at human ferocity as at something against nature and reason. In the presence of the iniquities of the world, the heart of the Prophets bled as though from a wound of the Divine Spirit, and their cry of indignation re-echoed the wrath of the Deity. Greece and Rome had their rich and poor, just as Israel had in the days of Jeroboam II, and the various classes continued to slaughter one another for centuries; but no voice of justice and pity arose from the fierce tumult. Therefore the words of the Prophets have more vitality at the present time, and answer better to the needs of modern souls, than all the classic masterpieces of antiquity' (James Darmesteter).

Next in importance in the moulding and administration of the Jewish state was the National Council. The researches of the late Justice Mayer Sulzberger in the domain of Israelite politics have thrown much light on the nature of the legislative body in ancient Israel. The general impression, he says, left on the mind by reading the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua is that Israel was governed by a Chief (Prince, Judge, King) who was at the head of the military and civil authorities; and that, alongside of him, was a High Priest who controlled the ecclesiastical establishment; that the Chief had a Council, probably bi-cameral, to determine national policies; that the smaller chamber was composed of twelve princes (Nesiim), and the larger of seventy elders (Zekenim), and that the two constituted the Edah (Congregation or Parliament) of the nation. The Edah did not disappear with the Mosiac age. Throughout the succeeding centuries, we find the same democratic institution in the state, exercising executive, political, and high judicial powers. This National Council became fully developed in the early days of the kingdom, under the name of Am ha-aretz (see pages 80-81 and 955). It made and unmade kings (e.g. II Kings xxi, 24, xxiii, 30); and, as the trial of Jeremiah for 'blasphemy' amply proves (Jer. xxvi), it exercised the highest judicial powers in the State. Eventually it re-emerged after the Exile as the Gerusia, the Great Synagogue, and the Sanhedrin.

The above is witness to a wonderful capacity for self-government on the part of our ancestors. We may disregard the kingdom of the Ten Tribes, who had lapsed into idolatry, and confine our attention to the kingdom of Judah. That kingdom existed as an independent state from 933 to 586 B.C.E.; and during the entire period of these 347 years, we do not detect the faintest trace of a single civil war, nor of an attempt at a change of dynasty (I. Friedlander). The only exception, that of Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, confirms the rule. For she was not a Judean, but a princess of the Northern Kingdom, a daughter of Jezebel. She had usurped the throne of Judah, and was overthrown by the faithful Judeans after an illegitimate reign of six years. Of how many other peoples, ancient or modern, can this be said, that they persisted for a period of 347 years without a change of dynasty or civil war? And it was not a vegetative existence which that little kingdom led during that long period. The greater portion of the Prophetic literature was produced within that time; social justice and freedom of speech were maintained; and national independence was preserved, in spite of Judah's position as the little buffer-state between the Great Powers of that age, as the small bit of iron between the hammer of Assyria and the anvil of Egypt.

In view of all this, more and more students of the political facts of Bible history will endorse the following judgment:

'There is no historical record of any other nation which, as early as a millennium before the present era, had overcome the forces both of despotism and of unbridled democracy. The Jewish people at large had as keen an outlook and as wide a vision in political as in religious affairs; and while the modern montheistic conception of the universe is largely the product of their genius, so the modern conception of a rational, democratic, representative government owes its origin to the same ancestry. The remarkable phenomenon that the English people and their American descendants, the only nations that have really comprehended and utilized the principles of parliamentary government, took the Jewish Bible as their text-book in times of stress and storm, will thus be explained' (Sulzberger).

To conclude with the weighty words of a Master of Balliol: 'it is not without significance that the great struggle for political freedom in this country was led by men who drew much of their inspiration from the Old Testament, the sacred fountain of the spirit of nationality and national religion. This free religious spirit is one of the main causes why England outstripped all other European countries in its political development, and becomes their teacher in the methods of free government' (Edward Caird).

ON MARRIAGE, DIVORCE, AND THE POSITION OF WOMAN, IN JUDAISM

MARRIAGE

Its Meaning. Marriage is that relationship between man and woman under whose shadow alone there can be true reverence for the mystery, dignity and sacredness of life. Scripture represents marriage not merely as a Mosiac ordinance, but as part of the scheme of Creation, intended for all humanity. Its sacredness thus goes back to the very birth of man.

They do less than justice to this Divine institution who view it in no other light than a civil contract. There is a vital difference between a marriage and a contract. In a contract the mutual rights and obligations are the result of an agreement, and their selection and formulation may flow from the momentary whim of the parties. In the marriage relation, however, such rights and obligations are high above the arbitrary will of both husband and wife: they are determined and imposed by Religion as well as the Civil Law. The failure of the contract view to bring out this higher sphere of duty and conscience, which is of the very essence of marriage, led a philosopher like Hegel to denounce that view as a 'Schändlichkeit'.

Its purpose. The purpose of marriage is twofold—(a) posterity, and (b) companionship.

(a) The duty of building a home and of rearing a family (Gen. i, 28, 'Be fruitful and multiply') figures in the Rabbinic codes as the first of the 613 Mitzvot of the Torah. To this commandment is due the sacredness and centrality of the child in Judaism—something which even the enlightened nations of antiquity could not understand. Tacitus deemed it a contemptible prejudice of the Jews that 'it is a crime among them to kill any child'. What a lurid flashlight these words throw on Graceo-Roman society! It is in such a society that Judaism proclaimed the Biblical view that the child was the highest of human treasures. 'O Lord God, what wilt Thou give me, seeing that I go childless?' was Abraham's agonizing cry. Of what value were earthly possessions to him, if he was denied a child who would continue his work after him? This attitude of the Father of the Hebrew people has remained that of his descendants throughout the ages. A childless marriage was deemed to have failed of its main purpose; and, in ancient times, was admitted as ground for divorce after ten years. In little children—it was taught—God gives humanity a chance to make good its mistakes. They are 'the Messiahs of mankind'—the perennial regenerative force in humanity. No wonder that Jewish infant mortality is everywhere lower than the non-Jewish—often only one-half of that among the general population.

(b) Companionship is the other primary end of the marriage institution. Woman is to be the helpmate of man, עזר כנגדו. A wife is a man's other self, all that man's nature demands for its completion physically, socially, and spiritually. In marriage alone can man's need for physical and social companionship be directed to holy ends. It is this idea which is expressed by the term kiddushin ('hallowing') applied to Jewish marriage—the hallowing of two human beings to life's holiest purposes. In married life man finds his truest and most lasting happiness; and only through married life does human personality reach its highest fulfilment. 'A man shall leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife,' says Scripture. Note that it is man who is to cleave to his wife, and not the woman, physically the weaker, who is to cleave to her husband;

because in the higher sphere of the soul's life, woman is the ethical and spiritual superior of man. 'Even as the wife is'—say the Rabbis, 'so the husband is.' The celibate life is the unblessed life: Judaism requires its saints to show their sanctity in the world, and amid the ties and obligations of family life. 'He who has no wife abides without good, help, joy, blessing or atonement. He who has no wife cannot be considered a whole man' (Talmud). The satisfaction of the needs of physical and social companionship outside the sacred estate of matrimony, unhallowed by religion and unrestrained by its commandments, Judaism considers an abomination. End such extra-marital relations are prohibited just as sternly with non-Jewish women as with Jewish. Thus, Joseph resists the advances of the heathen temptress with the words: 'How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?' (Gen. xxxix, 9); and the Book of Proverbs is clear on the attitude of Judaism to the 'strange woman'—married or unmarried (see Chapters ii, v–vii). No less emphatically than in Scripture is purity demanded by the Rabbis. The New Testament accepted the Jewish view on the subject in its entirety. The whole of Gospel teaching on this subject, even Matthew v. 28, is to be found in the Talmud.

The Marriage Ceremony. The Marriage Service consists of the blessings of Betrothal, the formula of Marriage, the reading of the Kethubah, and the seven blessings of Sanctification. In later times was added the breaking of the glass. Originally a considerable time intervened between the Betrothal (אירוסין), by which the bridal couple became bound for all purposes save living together, and the Nuptials proper (נישואין). Since the sixteenth century, however, Betrothal is always combined with the Nuptials. The solemnization of both the Betrothal and Nuptials opens with the benediction over a cup of wine. Wine is a symbol of joy, joyousness at a wedding being a religious duty; and in the Wedding Grace, 'we bless our God in Whose abode is joy.' The couple drink from both cups of wine—an indication of their resolve henceforth to share whatever destiny Providence may allot to them. The Betrothal blessing reads:—

'Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by thy commandments, and hast given us command concerning forbidden marriages; who hast disallowed unto us those that are betrothed, but hast sanctioned unto us such as are wedded to us by the rite of the canopy and the sacred covenant of wedlock. Blessed are thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest thy people Israel by the rite of the canopy and the sacred covenant of wedlock.'

The commands concerning forbidden marriages are given in Leviticus xviii and xx; see the Table of Prohibited Marriages in force among Jews to-day, p. 559. The 'rite of the canopy' is the chuppah, under which the bride and bridegroom stand during the Service, and is a symbol of the hometaking of the bride by the bridegroom. After this benediction there follows the bridegroom's Declaration, which constitutes the essence of the ceremony. He places a ring upon the forefinger of the right hand of the bride, and says: 'Behold, thou art consecrated unto me by this ring according to the Law of Moses and of Israel.' The general use of the ring is post-Talmudic; its place was formerly taken by any object of value. The formula is at least 2,000 years old, and expresses the resolve to lead their common life according to the rule and manner of Judaism. After this, the Kethubah is read. The Kethubah was introduced by Simeon ben Shetach in the first pre-Christian century as a protection to the wife in the event of her becoming widowed or divorced. This document testifies that on such and such a date, the bridegroom said to his bride: 'Be thou my wife according to the Law of Moses and of Israel. I will work for thee; I will honour thee; I will support and maintain thee in accordance with the custom of Jewish husbands who work for their wives, and honour, support, and maintain them in truth.' The husband further undertakes the obligation of a certain fixed sum for her prior claim on his estate. 'All my property, even the mantle on my shoulders, shall be mortgaged for the security of this contract and that sum.' Then begins the solemnization of the Nuptials proper in seven Blessings. The fourth and seventh of these read:

'Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast made man in thine image, after thy likeness, and hast prepared unto him, out of his very self, a perpetual fabric. Blessed are thou, O Lord, Creator of man.

'Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast created joy and gladness, bridegroom and bride, mirth and exultation, pleasure and delight, love, brotherhood, peace and fellowship. Soon may there be heard in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem the voice of joy and gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the jubilant voice of bridegrooms from their canopies, and of youths from their feasts of song. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who makest the bridegroom to rejoice with the bride.'

It is seen that the Blessings 'cover the whole of Israel's history. Each new home is thus brought into relation with the story of Creation and with Israel's Messianic Hope' (Abrahams). At the conclusion of the Blessings, a glass is broken by the bridegroom—a reminder of the Destruction of Jerusalem (זכר לחורבן). Another symbolization may also be mentioned: just as one step shatters the glass, so can one act of unfaithfulness for ever destroy the holiness and happiness of the Home. The Service concludes nowadays with the pronouncement of the priestly benediction.

Monogamy. The Biblical ideal of human marriage is the monogamous one. The Creation story and all the ethical portions of Scripture speak of the union of a man with one wife. Whenever a Prophet alludes to marriage, he is thinking of such a union—lifelong, faithful, holy. Polygamy seems to have wellnigh disappeared in Israel after the Babylonian Exile. Early Rabbinic literature presupposes a practically monogamic society; and out of 2,800 Teachers mentioned in the Talmudim, one only is stated to have had two wives. In the fourth century Aramaic paraphrase (Targum) of the Book of Ruth, the kinsman (iv, 6) refuses to 'redeem' Ruth, saying, 'I cannot marry her, because I am already married; I have no right to take an additional wife, lest it lead to strife in my home.' Such paraphrase would be meaningless if it did not reflect the general feeling of the people on this question.

Monogamy in Israel was thus not the result of European contact. As a matter of fact, monogamy was firmly established in Jewish life long before the rise of Christianity. The New Testament does not prohibit polygamy, but only demands that a bishop or presbyter shall have but one wife (1 Tim. iii, 2). As late as Luther's day, bigamy was not unknown in Western Europe; and in the thirteenth century, for example, monogamy was but a name, at any rate in the upper classes of society. The Church, too, found it difficult to enforce strict monogamy among Eastern Christians.

DIVORCE

In the first pre-Christian century, there was a fundamental cleavage in the religious schools of Palestine in regard to Divorce. The dispute turned over the interpretation of Deut. xxiv, 1; but, as so often in theological controversy, the words of the Sacred Text were merely the pegs upon which to hang conflicting theories of life on the part of the disputants. The School of Shammai maintained that a marriage could be dissolved only by unchastity on the part of the wife, because adultery alone sapped the foundation of marriage and made its continuance impossible. The School of Hillel argued that divorce should be permitted for any reason which entailed a rupture of domestic harmony resulting in a daily violation of one of the main purposes of marriage—companionship. The Jewish sectaries (the Essenes, the 'Zadokites' of Damascus, the Samaritans and Jewish Christians) opposed, in addition, the marrying a second wife as long as the divorced wife was alive. Official Judaism, throughout the ages, followed the principle of the School of Hillel; and, of course, the unnatural prohibition for the parties to marry again is quite unknown to it. We shall see that in recent generations the civilized nations are more and more coming to adopt the Jewish attitude on this basic and vital question.

Not that Judaism ever lost sight of the fact that divorce was a calamitous necessity. 'I hate divorce,' is the Divine message by the Prophet Malachi (ii, 16). 'The very altar weeps for one who divorces the wife of his youth,' says the Talmud. Later legislation made the writing and the delivery of the Get difficult and protracted, in order to facilitate attempts at reconciliation. The rabbi was bidden to exhaust every possible expedient to dissuade husband and wife from proceeding to divorce. 'If there is a doubt as to the originator of the quarrel, the husband is not believed when he asserts that the wife has commenced the dispute, as all women are presumed to be lovers of domestic peace' (Shulchan Aruch).

Characteristics of Jewish Divorce. (a) In theory, the power of divorce is in the hands of the husband. However, in the case of the wife's adultery, he is compelled to divorce her; connivance and condonation are not tolerated in Jewish Law. 'Adultery is not merely infidelity towards the conjugal partner, but a violation of a Divine order, a crime which cannot be condoned by the offended party' (Z. Frankel, L. Löw). Divorce is also compulsory where a man has married within one of the prohibited degrees. (Incestuous 'marriages' require no divorce, as these are null and void ab initio. On the distinction between incestuous marriages and those within the prohibited degrees, see p. 489.) There are also a few cases in which the Torah deprives the husband of the right to divorce his wife (Deut. xxii, 19 and 29). Furthermore, the wife might sue for a divorce in the Jewish Courts, which could for certain causes—e.g., loathsome occupation or disease—compel him to free her. The uniform aim of the Rabbis throughout the succeeding centuries was to develop the law in the direction of greater equality between the man and the woman. At last, in the year 1000, Rabbenu Gershom decreed that the wife, unless she was unfaithful, could not be divorced except of her free will. Maimonides went even further: 'If a woman says, "My husband is repulsive to me, and I cannot live with him," the husband is compelled to divorce her, because she is not like a captive woman, that she should be forced to consort with a man whom she hates.'

Such restriction of the husband's power to divorce was practicable only as long as the Jewish Rabbinic Courts had legal power to enforce their decisions. With the disappearance of that power, hardships have arisen in connection with divorce and chalitzah, difficulties which perhaps only a Central Sanhedrin in Jerusalem will in time be able to remove. The most serious of these is that of the Agunah, the woman whose husband has merely vanished. In favour of such a deserted wife, the laws of evidence as to the reported death of her husband have from the first been relaxed, and no effort is spared to free her from her uncertain state. While learned rabbis are to-day seeking a radical solution of this urgent question, it is a pity that the Agunah problem has become a tool in the hands of men whose purpose is the overthrow of Traditional Judaism, and some of whom recoil from no exaggeration in pursuit of that purpose. Jewish forsaken wives are relatively a very small minority when compared with the vast number of those in other faiths and legal systems who are deserted, are denied divorce or are granted it only on condition that they commit adultery, and those who are divorced without right to remarry.

(b) Jewish divorce can take place by mutual consent, even as marriage is itself a matter of mutual consent. In English Law, it is difficult to obtain divorce where both parties want it. If both desire to be free, it savours of 'collusion', and may involve the intervention of the King's Proctor and the denial or revocation of divorce, even though one spouse is innocent of matrimonial offence and the other guilty. Divorce as a result of mutual consent continued to be in force in Europe, including Saxon England, till the eighth century. It is to-day granted in various countries—e.g., Belgium, Switzerland and some of the United States of America.

It must be added that despite the ease with which, in theory, the marriage-tie may be dissolved in Jewish Law, divorce is less frequent among Jews than among the other populations of the various countries; see Jewish Encyclopedia, viii, 340. Thus in the year 1933, there were in England 2,549 marriages according to Jewish Law, but only 40 decrees nisi. In 1934, there were 2,600 marriages, and 46 such decrees. The strikingly small number of Jewish divorces is largely due to the fact that 'among Jews, there is an absence of drunkenness, always a fruitful source of domestic strife and misconduct' (H. Adler).

(c) Perhaps the most characteristic feature of the Jewish Law of Divorce is its absolute prohibition of the adulterer to marry the adulteress. Even in cases where such a marriage had, through suppression of the true facts, been entered into, it must be dissolved. A leader of the Anglican Church regrets that the sacred institution of marriage is so often used to whitewash an adulterous pair. 'I should be glad to see the marriage of an adulterer with his or her paramour absolutely forbidden' (W. R. Inge).

New Testament Divorce. It is impossible to evade reference to the New Testament position on the question of divorce. According to Matt. xix, 3, divorce was to be permitted, albeit for the one and sole reason of adultery. But it is now generally recognized that the Founder of Christianity desired the prohibition of divorce to be absolute, and taught that a divorced man or woman who married again was guilty of adultery (Mark x, 2-12). The Roman Catholic Church accordingly refuses in any way to recognize divorce, though in very rare cases it grants decrees of nullity. Outside that Church, however, the conscience of mankind has long been struggling with the problem of divorce as inherited from the Gospels. Nearly all Protestant States, and some Catholic ones, legislate to-day with due regard to the imperfections of human nature. They not only recognize adultery as a ground for divorce, but realize that there are other causes as well (e.g., drunkenness, disease, felony) that destroy the moral foundations of the family, interfere with the upbringing of the children, embitter the lives of two human beings, and often lead them to degradation and crime.

Divorce in England. English law until the other day demanded, in the case of the wife's petition, the committing of adultery, in addition to desertion, cruelty or some other enormity, as the indispensable condition for divorce. It was a definite incentive to perjury and immorality, and gave rise to an infamous class of professional helpers to procure a divorce. The evidence given before the Royal Commission of 1909 confirmed the fact that the Jewish outlook, which recognizes the dissolution of a marriage when the happiness of the home is impossible, was in general harmony with progressive thought, while the Christian outlook was in direct conflict with it. In regard to the Jewish population, prior to the passing of the Divorce Act of 1857, the Jewish Ecclesiastical Authorities granted divorces on grounds established by Jewish Law, and continued to do so till 1866. Since that date, no Jewish divorce as between parties domiciled in England is given by the London Beth Din, or any responsible Rabbi, unless a divorce previously decreed by a Court had been made absolute.

It is well known that not all Jews to-day follow Rabbinical law in the matter of marriage and divorce. Thus, in 1909, C. G. Montefiore proclaimed that the extreme New Testament utterances on divorce showed 'unerring ethical instinct', whereas it was 'to the eternal dishonour' of Hillel that he favoured divorce on other grounds besides adultery. This impelled Achad Ha-am to produce one of his most brilliant essays (על שתי הסעפים, 'Judaism and the Gospels'), and subject Mr. Montefiore's views to an annihilating criticism. Neither the moderate nor the radical wing of Reform Judaism endorses Mr. Montefiore's position in this matter. Moderate reformers respect, in regard to marriage, the laws of the prohibited degrees, retain the essentials of the Traditional marriage service, and hold that 'it is logical that the Synagogue, which insists upon marriage between Jews being performed in accordance with Jewish rites, should also insist upon the divorce being performed in accordance with the same rites' (L. M. Simmons). Radical Reformers in Europe and America have ever looked upon both marriage and divorce as purely civil acts, and hold that the civil law alone in regard to these matters possesses for Jews absolute validity. And as each one of the American States has its own divorce law, there are thus forty-eight different laws of marriage and divorce for the Liberal Jews in America! Some of these State laws are notoriously and even ludicrously lax; but no serious objection has been voiced against them by Liberal rabbis, except against the law of the State of Rhode Island. And this for a curious reason. That State—founded by the apostle of religious freedom, Roger Williams, the friend of Milton and Cromwell—rules that Jews, like all other religious bodies, be governed by their own regulations as to marriage and divorce.

Over against the secularist view in some sections of contemporary Jewry, the following words of the late Dr. Friedländer clearly define the attitude of Traditional Jews to the modern State on this vital question: 'We acknowledge the principle laid down in the Talmud, "The law of the Country is binding upon us" (דינא דמלכותא דינא), but only in so far as our civil relations are concerned. With regard to religious questions, our own religious Code must be obeyed. Marriage laws include two elements—civil relations and religious duties. As regards the former, we abide by the decisions of the civil Courts of the country. We must, therefore, not solemnize a marriage which the law of the Country would not recognize; we must not religiously dissolve a marriage by בטל, unless the civil Courts of law have already decreed the divorce. On the other hand, we must not content ourselves with civil marriage or civil divorce; religiously, neither civil marriage nor civil divorce can be recognized, unless supplemented by marriage or divorce according to religious forms. Furthermore, marriages allowed by the civil law, but prohibited by our religious law, cannot be recognized before the tribunal of our Religion.'

THE POSITION OF WOMAN IN JUDAISM

It is astonishing to note the amount of hostile misrepresentation that exists in regard to woman's position in Bible times. 'The relation of the wife to the husband was, to all intents and purposes, that of a slave to her master,' are the words of a writer in the Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics. That this judgment is radically false may be proved from hundreds of instances throughout Scripture. God created man and woman in His image (Gen. i, 27)—both man and woman are in their spiritual nature akin to God; and both are invested with the same authority to subdue the earth and have dominion over it. The wives of the Patriarchs are almost the equals of their husbands; later generations regard them as quite alike. Miriam, alongside her brothers, is reckoned as one of the three emancipators from Egypt (Micah vi, 4); Deborah is 'Judge' in Israel, and leader in the war of independence; and to Hannah her husband speaks: 'Why weepest thou? Am not I better to thee than ten sons?' In later centuries, we find woman among the Prophets (Huldah); and in the days of the Second Temple, on the throne (Queen Salome Alexandra). Nothing can well be nobler praise of woman than Prov. xxxi; and as regards the reverence due to her from her children, the mother was always placed on a par with the father (Exod. xx, 12; Lev. xix, 3). A Jewish child would not have spoken to his grief-stricken mother as did Telemachus, the hero's son in the Odyssey: 'Go to the chamber, and mind thine own house-wiferies. Speech shall be for man, for all, but for me in chief; for mine is the lordship in the house.'

The property rights of woman became clearly defined in the Talmudic period. Her legal status under Jewish law 'compares to its advantage with that of contemporary civilizations' (G. F. Moore). 'In respect to possessing independent estate, the Jewish wife was in a position far superior to that of English wives before the enactment of recent legislation' (Abrahams). An infinitely more important proof of her dominating place in Jewish life is the undeniable fact that the hallowing of the Jewish home was her work; and that the laws of chastity were observed in that home, both by men and women, with a scrupulousness that has hardly ever been equalled. The Jewish Sages duly recognized her wonderful spiritual influence, and nothing could surpass the delicacy with which respect for her is inculcated: 'Love your wife as yourself, and honour her more than yourself. Be careful not to cause a woman to weep, for God counts her tears. Israel was redeemed from Egypt on account of the virtue of its women. He who weds a good woman, it is as if he had fulfilled all the precepts of the Torah' (Talmud).

The respect and reverence which womanhood enjoyed in Judaism are not limited to noble and beautiful sayings. That respect and reverence were translated into life. True, neither minnesingers nor troubadours sang for Jewish women; and the immemorial chastity of the Jewess could not well go with courts of love and chivalric tournaments. And yet, one test alone is sufficient to show the abyss, in actual life, between Jewish and non-Jewish chivalry down to modern times. That test is wife-beating. On the one hand, both Rabbenu Tam, the renowned grandson of Rashi, and Rabbi Meir of Rothenburg, the illustrious jurist, poet, martyr and leader of thirteenth-century Judaism, could declare: 'This is a thing not done in Israel'; and the Shulchan Aruch prescribe it as the Beth Din's duty to punish a wife-beater, to excommunicate him, and—if this be of no avail—to compel him to divorce his wife with full Kethubah (Eben Ha-ezer, CLIV, 3). Among non-Jews, on the other hand, no less an authority on the Middle Ages than G. C. Coulton writes: 'To chastise one's wife was not only customary, not only expressly permitted by the statutes of some towns, but even formally granted by the Canon Law.' Even in our own country, as late as the fifteenth century, 'wife-beating was a recognized right of man, and was practised without shame by high as well as low' (G. M. Trevelyan). In the reign of Charles II, this recognized right of man began to be doubted; 'yet the lower ranks of the people, who were always fond of the Common Law, still claim and exert their ancient privilege' (Blackstone). Even more strange was the public sale of wives that was not unknown among the very poor. Thomas Hardy wrote his powerful novel, The Mayor of Casterbridge, on such a sale. Some years ago, The Times (January 4, 8, 11, 17, 1924) traced a number of these sales throughout the nineteenth century; and Prof. A. R. Wright has shown that folk-custom to have survived in various parts of England into the twentieth century.

In modern times, friend and foe of the Jew alike speak with admiration of his home, and echo the praise of the heathen seer: 'How beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob, thy dwelling-places, O Israel.' The following description may well be quoted here of the Sabbath eve of a humble toiler in the London Ghetto a half-century ago:—

'The roaring Sambatyon of life was at rest in the Ghetto; on thousands of squalid homes the light of Sinai shone.

'The Ghetto welcomed the Sabbath Bride with proud song and humble feast, and sped her parting with optimistic symbolisms of fire and wine, of spice and light and shadow. All around, their neighbours sought distraction in the blazing public-houses, and their tipsy bellowings resounded through the streets and mingled with the Hebrew hymns. Here and there the voice of a beaten woman rose on the air. But no Son of the Covenant was among the revellers or the wife-beaters; the Jews remained a chosen race, a peculiar people, faulty enough, but redeemed at least from the grosser vices—a little human islet won from the waters of animalism by the genius of ancient engineers' (I. Zangwill).

THE HALLOWING OF HISTORY

I

Israel is the author of the idea of History. The Egyptians and Babylonians left behind them annals of events, chronicles of dynasties, and boastful inscriptions of victories; but nothing that can be dignified by the name of historical writing. It is only in Israel that the whole human scene on earth was conceived as a unity, from its very beginning to the end of time. Thus Scripture does not begin with the Exodus, or even with the Call of Abraham, but with the Creation of the world and the birth of man. We are, of course, dogmatically told that 'the writing of history begins, like so many other things, with the Greeks'. But this is part of the Hellenic myth dominant in academic quarters. The Greeks could not rise to the concept of universal History without the belief in the unity of mankind; a conception they only learned centuries later through the Septuagint Version of the Hebrew Scriptures. Furthermore, the universe to the Greeks was not the creation of one supreme Mind, but the confused inter-play of blind natural forces going on forever in a vain, endless recurrence, leading nowhither. Hence, they could not see any higher meaning in the story of man. Such also has ever been the opinion of those who share the Greek view of God and the universe, as did the free-thinkers of the eighteenth century. To them, 'history is little more than a register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind' (Gibbon). Not so the Teachers in Israel. They conceived of God as a Moral Power, and saw Him at work in the world. They traced the line of Divine action in the lives of men and nations. They saw in history a continuous revelation of Divine thought and purpose across the abyss of time. In clarion tones they proclaimed that Right was irresistible; and that what ought to be must be, and will be. They taught men to see the vision of 'the kingdom of God'—human society based on righteousness—as the Messianic goal of history. Schiller's profound utterance, Die Weltgeschichte ist das Weltgericht ('History is one long Day of Judgment'), which would have been unintelligible to a Greek or Roman, is but a striking epitome of Hebrew thought. And no view of the course of history is worth anything that is not essentially one with the Biblical position. Froude has eloquently restated it in the noble words: 'History is a voice for ever sounding across the centuries the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. For every false word or unrighteous deed, for cruelty and oppression, for lust or vanity, the price has to be paid at last; not always by the chief offenders, but paid by someone. Justice and truth alone endure and live.'

II

Israel, moreover, was the first to conceive of history as a guide to the generations of men, as is done throughout Deuteronomy, and to grasp its vital importance in the education of the individual as of the human group. A recent historian of British civilization has well put it: 'The past does not die; so long as spiritual continuity is maintained, the present life of a community is its whole accumulated past; and only by understanding that past can it understand itself or determine its future. A people unconscious of its history is like a man smitten with loss of memory, who wanders aimlessly, till he comes to grief' (Wingfield-Stratford). It is history that preserves men and nations from loss of memory, from loss of spiritual identity. 'Man is made man by history. The Jew is what he is by the history of his fathers, and he would be losing his better self were he to lose hold of his past history' (J. Jacobs).

The field of Jewish history is immeasurably vast; the Jew is met with everywhere, and his story opens very near the beginning of human civilization. And that story has, as no other, left its mark on the souls of men. 'The first part of Jewish history, the Biblical part, is a source from which, for many centuries, millions of human beings have derived instruction, solace, and inspiration. Its heroes have long ago become types, incarnations, of great ideals. The events it relates serve as living ethical formulæ. But a time will come—perhaps it is not very far off—when the second half of Jewish history, that people's life after the Biblical period, will be accorded the same treatment. The thousand years' martyrdom of the Jewish People, its unbroken pilgrimage, its tragic fate, its teachers of religion, its martyrs, philosophers, champions—this whole epic will, in days to come, sink deep into the memory of men. It will speak to the heart and conscience of men, and secure respect for the silvery hair of the Jewish People' (Dubnow).

III

Even a brief history of Jewish history, i.e. a critical estimate of Jewish historians, ancient, medieval and modern—cannot here be attempted. A few words might, however, be added on the task of the Jewish historian at the present day.

His primary aim should be neither to lament the past, nor to denounce, nor to idealize it; but to understand it. He is, therefore, no longer to confine himself to the martyrdoms of the Jewish People, as the medieval chroniclers did; or even exclusively to the strivings of the Jewish spirit in the world of thought—which so largely claimed the attention of Graetz. Both the story of the martyrdoms and the spiritual strivings are, of course, basic. But, in addition, the historian to-day must seek to explain the position of the Jews in the national history of the countries where they dwelt. This calls, on the one hand, for a detailed study of Jewish communities—their institutions, cultural values, and religious endeavour; and, on the other hand, for a knowledge of the Jew's social, economic, and political relations to the general population. In this way alone can we in time hope to understand the 'cross-fertilization' of Jewish and non-Jewish ideas and influences in literature, folklore and life. The truth will then dawn upon the student that Judaism, in addition to being a body of doctrine and faith, a way of life and salvation, is also a civilization, a civilization that has made distinct contributions in every sphere of human life, human thought, and human achievement.

IV

'The history of Israel is the great living proof of the working of Divine Providence in the affairs of the world. Alone among the nations, Israel has shared in all great movements since mankind became conscious of their destinies. If there is no Divine purpose in the long travail of Israel, it is vain to seek for any such purpose in man's life. In the reflected light of that purpose, each Jew should lead his life with an added dignity' (J. Jacobs).

G

DEUTERONOMY: ITS ANTIQUITY AND MOSAIC AUTHORSHIP

1. DEUTERONOMY AND THE RELIGIOUS REVIVAL UNDER KING JOSIAH (621 B.C.E.)

King Josiah was the grandson of idolatrous King Manasseh, whose reign of fifty-five years was the longest in the annals of the Jewish People, and the darkest. Manasseh was swayed by a fanatical hatred for the Faith of his fathers. He nearly succeeded in uprooting True Religion in Israel, and flooded the land with obscene and gruesome idolatries. The Temple itself did not escape profanation: the sacred Altar was desecrated; the Ark itself was removed from out of the Holy of Holies; and new altars were erected for various weird cults. His years were one long Reign of Terror to the loyal minority who attempted to withstand the tide of religious barbarism. 'Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another,' says the author of the Book of Kings; and, according to a tradition preserved by Josephus, day by day a fresh batch of the Prophetic Order was led to execution. The aged Isaiah, it is said, met a martyr's death by being sawn asunder in a forest-tree in which he hid himself when attempting to escape from the fury of the tyrant.

No wonder that when, two years after the death of Manasseh, Josiah, a child of eight, came to the throne, the sacred books and teachings of Israel's Faith had been all but forgotten. However, in the group of influential persons responsible for the education and policy of the young King, there was a strong revulsion of feeling from the apostasy of the previous two generations, and a sincere yearning for a return to the historical Jewish national worship. It was, no doubt, due to the fact of having grown to manhood under such influences, that Josiah decided in the eighteenth year of his reign to repair the Temple, which had been permitted under his predecessors to fall into a shameful state of neglect. In the course of this restoration of the Temple, a discovery was made that was to prove of far-reaching importance for the spiritual revival of Israel. Under the accumulated rubbish and ruins of the decayed Temple-walls, Hilkiah the High Priest came upon a scroll, which he handed to the King's scribe with the words, 'I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD.'

Shaphan the scribe brought the scroll to King Josiah, saying:

'Hilkiah, the priest, hath delivered me a book'. And Shaphan read it before the king. And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the Law, that he rent his clothes. And the king commanded Hilkiah the priest . . . and Shaphan the scribe, . . . saying: Go ye, inquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found; for great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us' (II Kings xxii, 10-13).

The following questions arise in connection with this narrative:

(a) What is here meant by 'the book of the law?'

Jewish and non-Jewish tradition and opinion hold that the scroll brought to the King was the Book of Deuteronomy. Some interpret Hilkiah's words ('I have found the book of the law!') to mean that he had found the autograph copy of Deuteronomy (בִּיד מֹשֶׁה in the account given in II Chron. xxxiv, 14 being taken to mean 'written by the hand of Moses himself'). Hence the extraordinary interest of all concerned in the discovery of this Book of the Law, and the effect of such discovery on the conscience of the King.

Neither is it accidental that the rediscovery of Deuteronomy in Josiah's day coincided with the rebuilding of the Jerusalem Sanctuary. Throughout the Ancient East, books of religious law and sacred documents were deposited in Temples at their erection, and were often found when the buildings were repaired. Naville, the renowned Egyptologist, instances from the Egyptian 'Book of the Dead' an exact parallel to the Hilkiah incident. He further adduces evidence that this custom was known and observed in Palestine at the time of Solomon. In that case, the copy of the Book of Deuteronomy in question would at least date from that reign. It has been immured in a foundation wall when the Temple was first built. In the time of Josiah, the breaches in the Temple-walls had become so considerable that great sums were required for 'the carpenters, the builders and the masons; and for buying timber and hewn stone to repair the House' (II Kings xxii, 6). In the process of demolition, either the workmen must have come upon a foundation deposit, or the Book must have fallen out from a crevice; and the High Priest picked it up among the rubbish. In view of this general Eastern custom, and especially of the Egyptian parallel, 'there is no longer any justification for seeing any mystery or mystification in the incident of the finding of the Book of the Law by Hilkiah, the High Priest' (Jirku).

(b) How are we to explain the behaviour of the King?

The behaviour of the King—he is stirred to the depths of his being by the message of the Book, and yet that message is new to him—is easy of explanation. Though during the half-century and longer of the royal apostasy the public reading of the Torah had been interrupted, and though the Book itself had disappeared or had been destroyed by idolatrous priests, men still knew of the existence of such a Book, and had sufficient idea of its contents to be able to recognize it when the old Temple copy was suddenly brought to light. But so little were its contents common knowledge that, on its first reading, the King was struck with terror at its solemn prediction of the evils which would overtake a sinful Israel. 'The ignorance of the King, brought up by the priesthood, may well be accounted for by supposing him to have been vaguely taught the general precepts of the Law, but to have seen or heard for the first time this special Book' (Milman).

Ancient and medieval history records several instances of codes of law or sacred documents disappearing, and of their rediscovery generations, and even centuries, later. Such, for example, was the fate that overtook the code of Charlemagne in the ninth century. 'Before the close of the century in which he died, the whole body of his laws had fallen into utter disuse throughout the whole extent of his dominions. The charters, laws and chronicles of the later Carolingian princes indicate either an absolute ignorance or an entire forgetfulness of the legislation of Charlemagne' (Sir James Stephen). The general neglect of the Scriptures in the age before the Reformation furnishes a partial illustration of the disappearance of Deuteronomy; even as the recovery, at the time of the Renaissance, of the original Hebrew Text of the Bible for the Western peoples is a parallel to its re-emergence under Josiah. In our own day, wherever the extirpation of religion is part of the State policy, as in Soviet Russia, we can quite imagine men and women who may have superficial knowledge of the observances and beliefs of Judaism, but who had never read, or heard of, Deuteronomy, or any other Scripture.

2. DOUBTS IN REGARD TO THE DISCOVERY OF DEUTERONOMY

Nothing could be simpler than the above explanation of the finding of the scroll of Deuteronomy during the repair of the Temple. Bible Critics think otherwise. For over 150 years, they have declared that Deuteronomy, the Book of the Farewell Orations of Moses, was not the work of the Lawgiver, but was a spurious production written during the generation of Josiah. Some of them maintain further that this spurious work was hidden in the Temple with the intention that it should be brought to light, reach the King, and influence him in a definite way.

Not a word of all this appears in II Kings xxii, which describes the finding of the Book of the Law in the Temple; and there is nothing in that account that can justifiably serve as a basis for so strange a hypothesis. Hilkiyah speaks of 'the book of the law', ספר התורה, i.e. the well-known Torah. He could not have used such a phrase—it would not have been understood—if it were not known that such a book had been in existence before. It is clear that the finding of the book was regarded as the discovery of an old lost Scripture, a book of the Law of Moses. It was this fact alone which gave it authority. The King, when the book had been read to him, rent his garments, and sent to inquire of the LORD what it portended for him and his people; for 'great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book'. The King was thus convinced of the Divine character of the Book, and also of its existence in the time of his forefathers. And it was this conviction alone that led to the religious revolution associated with his name—a revolution which succeeded despite all the machinery of heathenism that would recoil from nothing to thwart it. Not a whisper of doubt as to the Mosaic origin of the book is heard on any side, not from priests, whose revenues it seriously interfered with, nor from prophets, on many of whom it bore hardly less severely. 'It is plainly inconceivable that the whole nation should have at once adopted, without objection or criticism, a book of the existence of which no one knew anything before that time, a book which demanded radical modification of worship as well as of the whole religious life' (B. Jacob).

Though many of the Critics do not hesitate to bring the grave moral charge of forgery in connection with the Book, they are themselves not at all agreed on the question whether the author belonged to the prophetic circle or to the priestly class; whether the Book was the work of one man, or of a 'school'; whether it was produced in the time of Josiah, Manasseh, Hezekiah or even earlier; whether it originally was the same as we now have it, or it consisted of merely the code of laws—the historical orations having been added later; whether that code of laws came from one hand, or represented the gradual growth of centuries; whether some portion of the Book was Mosaic, or none of it; and whether it even claimed to be a work of Moses, or it made no such claim.

It was the English deists of the sixteenth century who first set afloat the theory that Deuteronomy was an essential forgery of the subtle priest, Hilkiyah. That theory will not bear serious examination. This priest, whose ministrations in the Zion Sanctuary are not marked by any particular devotion or zeal, would not be the man to undertake to make it the one and only Place of Worship in Israel; neither was he the man to write those exhortations to godliness and humanity that have made Deuteronomy a pure stream of righteousness to the children of men. And surely this crafty ecclesiastic would not have invented laws (Deuteronomy xviii, 6) which seriously infringed the vested privileges of the Jerusalem priesthood—unless we are to attribute to him a height of folly that would be psychologically inexplicable. In our generation, W. R. Smith, Dillmann, Kittel, Driver and many others have repudiated this absurd theory.

Even less convincing, but far more shocking to the moral sense, is the attempt to find the forger among the prophets. A pioneer of nineteenth century Bible criticism in England, Bishop Colenso, thinks it likely that Jeremiah was the falsifier. 'What the inner voice ordered him to do,' Colenso has the shamelessness to write, 'he would do without hesitation, as by direct command of God, and all considerations of morality or immorality would not be entertained.' Verily, there are some things that do not deserve to be refuted: they should be exorcized.

It is refreshing to turn to the words of Rudolf Kittel, written in 1925: 'There is no real evidence to prove that a pious or impious deceit was practised on Josiah. The assumption of forgery may be one of those hypotheses which, once set up, is so often repeated that finally every one believes it has been proven. Then one seems ultra-conservative and unscientific not to believe it. Who, nowadays, would take upon himself the odium of being behind the times?'

3. INTERNAL EVIDENCE AS TO THE ANTIQUITY OF DEUTERONOMY

The internal evidence against the late composition of Deuteronomy, and for its Mosaic authorship, is overwhelming. From whatever side the question is examined, we find that the Book and the history of Josiah's times do not fit each other. To take a few examples. In the reign of Josiah, or in that of his immediate predecessors, the injunction to exterminate the Canaanites (xx, 16-18) and the Amalekites (xxv, 17-19), who had long since disappeared, would have been as utterly out of date as a royal proclamation in Great Britain at the present day ordering the expulsion of the Danes (W. H. Green). And how can a Code belong to the time of Josiah which, while it provides for the possible selection of a king in the future, nowhere implies an actual monarchical government? It finds it necessary to ordain that the king must be a native and not a foreigner (xvii, 15), when the undisputed line of succession had for ages been fixed in the family of David. It furthermore prescribes that the king must not 'cause the people to return to Egypt', as they seemed ready to do on every grievance in the days of Moses (Num. xiv, 4), but which no one ever dreamed of doing after they were fairly established in Canaan. In brief, regarding this whole law of monarchy, H. M. Wiener rightly says, 'As part of the work of Moses, all is clear; place it in a later age, all is confusion.'

This same judgment must be pronounced in regard to dozens of other matters in Deuteronomy. Thus, Israel is treated in its unbroken unity as a nation: one Israel is spoken of. There is not the slightest hint of the great secession of the Ten Tribes, which had rent Israel in twain. Furthermore, in Deuteronomy the hope and the promise is that Israel is to be 'high above all nations'; and the Law actually contemplates foreign wars (xx, 10-15). This is quite understandable of the Mosaic generation, just about to embark on the conquest of Canaan. In the days of Josiah, however, it was a question whether Judah could even maintain its own existence. It had been brought to the edge of ruin by the Assyrian world-power, and within two decades of Josiah's day, its inhabitants were to be exiled to the banks of the Euphrates. Again, Edom is mentioned as the people to be most favoured by Israel; whereas from the time of David onwards, Edom was Judah's bitterest enemy, and is unsparingly denounced by Jeremiah, as by Isaiah before him. Lastly, in a book assumed to be specially produced to effect reformation in worship, how are we to explain the presence of such laws as regulate birds' nests or parapets upon a roof? Or, for that matter, what relevancy is there, for such a purpose, in Moses' historical retrospect? 'As part of the work of Moses, all is clear; place it in a later age, all is confusion.'

4. CENTRALIZATION OF WORSHIP

The above considerations, and scores more of the same force and moment, have long been urged against the hypothesis of the late production of Deuteronomy. How is it that they have made so little impression upon the mass of the Critics?

The reason is as follows: the assumption that Deuteronomy is a product of Josiah's age is the basis of the theory on which the Critics have built their whole reconstruction of Bible history and religion. That theory—viz., the Centralization of Worship in ancient Israel—they have raised to a dogma, which it is in their opinion sheer heresy to question. Till the time of Josiah, they tell us, the ancient Israelite could sacrifice at any place he desired; numberless local shrines, 'high places,' dotted the land; and, though there was a good deal of pagan revelry, natural piety was a living thing among the people. But with the appearance of Deuteronomy the local cults were uprooted, religion was separated from 'life', and worship was centred in Jerusalem. There arose the idea of a Church; religion was now contained in a book; and it became an object of study, a theology. All these things, we are told, flowed from the centralization of worship; and such centralization was the result exclusively of the finding of Deuteronomy in the days of Josiah.

What is the truth in regard to centralization of worship, and these claims of the Wellhausen school of Bible Critics?

Briefly, not a single one of the Critical claims in connection with their dogma of centralization is in agreement with the historical facts. Centralization of worship did not originate in the age of Josiah; it was not the dominant motive of his reformation; neither was there any freedom of indiscriminate sacrifice before his day.

(a) Centralization of worship did not originate in the age of Josiah. It was present from the beginnings of Israel as a nation (Baxter). One need not be a great Bible scholar to know that, four hundred years before Josiah, the splendid Temple of Solomon was built on Mount Zion. That Temple was built by 'a levy out of all Israel' (1 Kings v, 27); and for its dedication, Solomon assembles 'the elders of Israel and all the heads of the tribes' (viii, 1). It is the central shrine of the whole House of Israel. (Wellhausen says, 'this view of Solomon's Temple is unhistorical,' because no king after Solomon is left uncensured for having tolerated the continuance of 'the high places'. It is the old familiar argument—see page 556—that the Law could not have existed because it can be shown that it was broken! According to such logic, there could never have been any Prohibition law in America.)

And for centuries before Solomon, there was the Central Sanctuary at Shiloh. Elkanah, the father of Samuel, 'went up out of his city from year to year to worship and to sacrifice unto the LORD of hosts in Shiloh' (1 Samuel i, 3). We are told of 'all the Israelites' coming thither (ii, 14); and that the presiding priest represented 'all the tribes of Israel'.

But even centuries before Shiloh, we have the Sanctuary at Sinai. Nothing in Scripture is more minutely or more solemnly described than the building of the Mosaic tabernacle. Hyper-critics have, in obedience to their programme, denied its existence. However, the study of comparative religions and their sacred structures has rendered their position absurd. Kittel's considered opinion is: 'It is part of the knowledge which has been confirmed in recent times, that in Moses' day and during the Desert wanderings there was a sacred tent (Tent of Meeting), which was the religious centre of the congregation in the Desert.'

(b) Centralization of worship was not the dominant motive in Josiah's reformation. Josiah's reformation from beginning to end was a crusade against the idolatry which had flooded the land, the Jerusalem sanctuary included; and the 'high places' were put down as part of this stern suppression of all idolatrous practices. Of a movement for centralization of worship as such, the narrative gives not a single hint. The whole condition of Jerusalem and Judah, as described in 2 Kings xxiii, was in flagrant violation of far more fundamental statutes than that of the central Sanctuary in Deuteronomy. And it cannot be repeated with sufficient emphasis that there are far more fundamental laws in Deuteronomy than this law concerning the Sanctuary. It has its place in chap xii, and recurs in the regulations for feasts, tithing, and priestly duty; but it is quite incorrect to say that this is the one grand idea which inspires the Book.

(c) There was no freedom of indiscriminate altar-building in early Israel. The alleged legitimacy, before the reformation of Josiah, of sacrificing wherever one desired is based upon a wrong interpretation of Exodus xx, 21 (in English Bibles, xx, 24). 'An altar of earth thou shalt make unto Me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings and thy peace-offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen; in every place where I cause My name to be mentioned I will come unto thee and bless thee' (the last clause should be translated, 'in whatever place I record My name, I will come unto thee, and will bless thee'). This law does not authorize worship 'at the altars of earth and unhewn stones in all corners of the land', as claimed by W. Robertson Smith and those of his school. The law does not speak of 'altars', but only of 'an altar'; and that altar was to be erected 'in whatever place I record My name': i.e., in any place sanctified by a special revelation of God. There is here nothing that conflicts with the command concerning centralization of worship in Deut. xii. There we have the general rule of worship at the Central Sanctuary; but that general rule does not forbid that, under proper Divine authority, exceptional sacrifices might be offered elsewhere. The clearest proof of this is that Deuteronomy itself orders the building of an Altar on Mount Ebal, precisely in the manner of Exodus xx, 21. Critics unanimously assign Exod. xx, 21 to what they call 'the Book of the Covenant', which they deem to be many centuries older than Josiah. But the 'Book of the Covenant' has the same ideal of centralization as Deuteronomy! It takes for granted a Central Shrine, and prescribes that three times in the year all males shall present themselves there before the Lord (Exod. xxiii, 17).

In view of all the above, one need not be surprised to learn that the alleged evil effects which followed the eventual enforcement of this ancient law of centralization of worship are purely imaginary. 'Centralization is the necessary consequence of monotheism and of the actual or ideal unity of Israel. The regulation of life according to Divine Law, the rise of a canon and a theology, are incidental to the development of every religion that has ever controlled and modified the life of a people' (B. Jacob).

Not all Scholars have remained blind to the true facts regarding the alleged lateness of the law of Centralization summarized above. From the very first, the hollowness of the Critical hypothesis was recognized by Sayce (Oxford), Hoffmann (Berlin), Naville (Geneva), Robertson (Glasgow), and W. H. Green (Princeton). Their protests were disregarded, but new recruits were found in Hommel, Dahse, Wiener, Moeller, Orr, Jacob and many others. In recent years, several outstanding Critics—Max Löhr, Th. Oesterreicher, W. Staerk—have come to realize that especially this fundamental pillar of the Bible Critical view has proved a delusion and a snare. In 1924, W. Staerk wrote:—'For over 100 years Old Testament studies have been under the spell of this hypothesis (i.e., centralization of worship), which in its results has been fatal to the proper understanding of Israel's religion.'

5. THE UNITY AND MOSAICITY OF DEUTERONOMY

No Book of the Bible bears on its face a stronger impress of unity—unity of thought, language, style and spirit—than Deuteronomy. And there is no reason to doubt that the various Discourses proceed from one hand, and that the same hand was responsible for the Code of laws. The alleged discrepancies between some of its statements and those in other books of the Pentateuch are largely the result of what Delitzsch called 'hunting for contradictions'. These alleged differences between the historical accounts in the earlier books and the rhetorical presentation of the same matter in the Farewell Addresses of the dying Lawgiver are all of them capable of a natural explanation.

In recent decades, attention has been called to the fact that in some portions of Deuteronomy Israel is addressed in the singular (collectively), and in other portions in the plural; and it is urged that this is evidence of dual authorship. Anyone who is familiar with the Prophetic writings knows that the singular and the plural constantly interchange. This feature is found likewise in other literatures, English included. H. M. Wiener adduces the following from Sir Walter Scott's 'St. Ronan's Well' (the italics are Wiener's):

'Why, thou suspicious monitor, have I not repeated a hundred times . . . And what need you come upon me, with your long lesson. Thou art, indeed, a curious animal. No man like you for stealing other men's inventions, and cooking them up in your own way. However, Harry, bating a little self-conceit and assumption, thou art as honest a fellow as ever man put faith in—clever, too, in your own style, though not quite the genius you would fain pass for. Come on thine own terms, and come as speedily as thou canst.'

As to the Mosaic authorship, the discoveries, since the beginning of this century, of the ancient Semitic codes confirm the antiquity of Deuteronomy. Thus, when King Amaziah punished his father's murderers, he refrained from having their families killed with them (II Kings xiv, 6), because the Law of Moses (Deut. xxiv, 16) forbade such procedure. To-day we know that the old Hittite law of the fifteenth pre-Christian century—contemporaneous with Moses—contains this same principle. Furthermore, the law concerning the rape of a betrothed or married woman in Deuteronomy has striking similarities to the law on the subject in the Hammurabi, the Hittite, and the Assyrian Codes. What reason, therefore, is there to assume that these laws of Deuteronomy are later than the Mosaic period?

Paul Volz, who—together with Benno Jacob and Umberto Cassuto—has recently dealt a staggering blow to the Documentary Theory by demolishing all proof for the so-called Elohist source, has once again recorded his conviction that, on the strictly scientific evidence now available, Moses must have been a genius of the first order, a supreme Lawgiver who shaped an inchoate human mass into a great spiritual nation. Can we deny such a genius the ability to deliver his Farewell Discourses? 'When we carefully examine the arguments that have been collected in the work of more than a century of criticism, we find that not a shadow of a case can be made against the authenticity of the Mosaic speeches' (Wiener). The same holds true in reference to the Code of Laws. Max Löhr and W. Staerk see no valid reason why the Deuteronomic legislation should not be Mosaic. And they are not the only scholars who have come to see the force of Dean Milman's words: 'If there are difficulties in connection with the Mosaic date of Deuteronomy, endeavour to assign Deuteronomy to any other period in the Jewish annals, and judge whether difficulties do not accumulate twenty-fold.'

Die-hard adherents of the Wellhausen school of Pentateuch criticism may derive what comfort they may from the following two concluding selections. The first is: 'Speaking for all branches of science, we may say that a hypothesis which has stood for half a century has done its duty. Measured by this standard, Wellhausen's theory is as good as the best. However, there is increasing evidence that it has had its day; and that those scholars who, from the first, expressed serious doubts of it are right' (Kittel).

The other selection cuts at the root of the whole method of deciding historical questions merely by so-called literary tests. It reads as follows: 'Must there not be something essentially illusory in a method which never gives or can give any independent proofs of its conclusions; and which too leads each new set of inquirers to reject what their next predecessors had been thought to have most clearly established?' (Speaker's Commentary).

H

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE SECOND PART OF ISAIAH

CHAPTERS XL-LXVI

These chapters differ considerably from those in the first half of Isaiah (chapters I-XXXIX). There the Prophet is speaking to the citizens of the independent state of Judah; here the Jewish exiles in Babylon are addressed—whose Temple has been destroyed, whose city Jerusalem is desolate and forsaken, and the people themselves suffering the physical and moral miseries of captivity. Thus there is a span of some 150 years between the political and social conditions reflected in the two parts of the Book. Furthermore, the predominant note in the prophecies of the first part of Isaiah is warning, lest Israel suffer destruction through rebellion against God; the note of the second part is comfort—Israel having suffered more than due for its sins.

Are both parts of the Book the work of one hand, Isaiah, the statesman-prophet of Jerusalem? Or, is the second part the work of an unknown prophet in Babylon, whose anonymous writings were later appended to the Prophecies of Isaiah?

This question can be considered dispassionately. It touches no dogma, or any religious principle in Judaism; and, moreover, does not materially affect the understanding of the prophecies, or of the human conditions of the Jewish people that they have in view.

Until the beginning of the nineteenth century, it was almost the universal belief that the whole Book of Isaiah is by one hand. As early as 200 B.C.E. (Ecclesiasticus XLVII, 23–25), chapters XL–LXVI were looked upon as the prediction of national disaster by Isaiah, and the consolation which the prophet bequeathed to his brethren who were doomed in later times to the fate of exile. In these chapters, it was held, the Prophet is by the Spirit carried forward out of his own age; so that, in spirit, he is living amidst the exiles one hundred and fifty years after his day. Prediction, though not by any means the whole of prophecy, is yet of its very essence. This is particularly true of the prophecies of Isaiah. Thus, he foretold the fall of the Northern Kingdom; and we read that he prepared a written record of his teaching in another connection and deposited it as a sealed document for future days. 'Bind up the testimony, seal the instruction among My disciples. And I will wait for the LORD, that hideth His face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for Him' (Isa. VIII, 16, 17). Why then could not his Prophetic gaze penetrate the future that awaited his people across the generations, and send his exiled brethren a message of comfort and hope? There is thus nothing inherently improbable in the traditional belief; and, though it finds few modern supporters, it has had able defenders among scholars, Jewish and non-Jewish; to name only Luzatto in the nineteenth century, and Kaminka in the twentieth.

However, nearly all scholars to-day assume that the author of the later chapters was not identical with the author of chapters I–XXXIX. Ibn Ezra was the first who maintained that they are the work of a contemporary of the events which they presuppose. And it has often been pointed out that neither the appearance of Cyrus nor the captivity of Israel is ever predicted in them; they are everywhere assumed as facts known to the readers. The name 'Isaiah', it is argued, does not occur in the second part, nor any personal reference that could connect the author with the older Prophet. It is also held to be significant that, in the Synagogue, the order in which the Great Prophets were originally arranged was Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Isaiah—suggesting that those responsible for this ancient arrangement were conscious that elements were contained in the Book of Isaiah which were of a later date than the Prophet Ezekiel. For these reasons, among others, modern scholars refer to the author of chapters XL–LXVI as the Second Isaiah, or some equivalent term like Deutero-Isaiah, or Isaiah of Babylon.

None of the arguments for the dual authorship of Isaiah explain how the name of that Prophet whose outpouring brought about a resurrection of Jewish life in the Holy Land should have been clean forgotten; and forgotten by the very people who cherished the name of the earlier seer for prophecies which were of no direct concern to them (Kaminka). Neither is the newer view strengthened by those who would restrict the work of the Second Isaiah to chapters XL–LV, and confer the authorship of the remaining eleven chapters on 'Trito-Isaiah', or divide them among a third and fourth Prophet of that later age. The arguments on which such further subdivision is based are extremely precarious. And even from the literary angle, that procedure disregards the 'Law of parsimony' in Nature. The prophecies in chapters XL–LV reveal one of the world's greatest masters of literature; and no less so do the portions assigned by the Critics to 'Trito-Isaiah'. In grandeur, spiritual insight, and religious power, these chapters reach a level that is not surpassed by Isaiah of Jerusalem. It is no small strain on credulity to believe in two or three contemporary literary and spiritual geniuses of the first order (Wiener).

It may be added that the Critics are hopelessly at variance as to the place where those prophecies were written. Some favour Babylon; others, Palestine, Egypt, or Phœnicia.

ISAIAH LXVI

CHAPTER LXVI

CAP. LXVI. ס

1. Thus saith the LORD:
The heaven is My throne,
And the earth is My footstool;
Where is the house that ye may build unto Me?
And where is the place that may be My resting-place?
2. For all these things hath My hand made,
And so all these things came to be,
Saith the LORD;
But on this man will I look,
Even on him that is poor and of a contrite spirit,
And trembleth at My word.
3. He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man;
He that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he broke a dog's neck;
He that offereth a meal-offering, as if he offered swine's blood;
He that maketh a memorial-offering of frankincense, as if he blessed an idol;

א כה אמר יהוה השמים כסאי והארץ רגלי איוה
2 בית אשר תבטל לי ואיוה מקום מנוחתי: ואת כל אלה
תי עשתה ויהיו כל אלה נאם יהוה ואליוה אביט אל-
3 עני וגבורות ותקד על דברי: שוחט השור מבהאיש
וובח השל עוקף כלב מעלה מנחה דם חור מנביר

According as they have chosen their own ways,
And their soul delighteth in their abominations;

v. 2 קמץ בז"ק. ibid. למדנחאי אל- v. 3. כצ"ל

The Second Temple is nearing completion, and the Prophet corrects false ideas concerning the Temple building and the worship therein. He contrasts the faithful Israelites with the apostates, given to idolatrous practices, and doomed to extinction. The chapter concludes with the renewed assurance of the triumph of the Faithful Remnant, and the universal worship of the one God. Verse 23, which enshrines this hope in the phrase 'From one New Moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another,' makes the section an appropriate Haftorah for this Sabbath.

1. Where is the House? God's presence cannot be limited to one spot. ('Behold, heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded!' 1 Kings viii, 27). The purpose of the Temple was to lead men to reverence and uprightness, and the sacrifices were to help the worshipper expel evil thoughts and desires from his heart, and burn them as burnt offerings on the altar (Kimchi). If these conditions did not exist, the Temple was not a house fit for God's glory.

2. all these things. i.e. heaven and earth came into existence at the word of God (Abarbanel). will I look. Not to external splendours of the building or to the elaborate ceremonial within does God look, but to the existence of a humble and sincere piety among the worshippers, who make their will subservient to God ('that . . . trembleth at My word').

3. The lit. translation of the first part of this verse is: 'The slaughterer of an ox, a slayer of a man, etc.' This is often explained to mean that he who offers the statutory sacrifices but is not animated by a sincere spirit is no better than he who takes a leading part in some horrible and unholy cult involving human sacrifices. No Prophet, however, would be guilty of such an exaggeration. More probably the Prophet has in mind those who combined outward observance of Jewish ceremonial with the detestable rites of some debased fetish-worship which existed among those left in Israel after the Assyrian conquest (II Kings xvii, 33 f.) There is no reason, however, to assume that these heathen worshippers indulged, or were permitted by the Persian authorities to indulge, in human sacrifices. The words מכה איש only mean 'strieth a man' (Ibn Ezra), and not 'slayeth a man'. The Heb. root of מכה is used for 'inflicting stripes', and may therefore here refer to sacred flagellations or scourgings, which, as is well known, formed part of many pagan secret cults. He that sacrificeth an ox at God's Temple, complains our Prophet, is at the same time acting as flagellator or sacred scourger at heathen mystery worship!

4. Even so I will choose their mockings,
And will bring their fears upon them;
Because when I called, none did answer;
When I spoke, they did not hear,
But they did that which was evil in Mine eyes,
And chose that in which I delighted not.

5. Hear the word of the LORD,
Ye that tremble at His word:
Your brethren that hate you, that cast you out for My name's sake, have said:
'Let the LORD be glorified,
That we may gaze upon your joy.'
But they shall be ashamed.

6. Hark! an uproar from the city,
Hark! it cometh from the temple,
Hark! the Lord rendereth recompense to
His enemies.

7. Before she travailed, she brought forth;
Before her pain came,
She was delivered of a man-child.

8. Who hath heard such a thing?
Who hath seen such things?
Is a land born in one day?

Is a nation brought forth at once?
For as soon as Zion travailed,
She brought forth her children.

9. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth?

Saith the LORD;

Shall I that cause to bring forth shut the womb?

Saith thy God.

10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem,
And be glad with her, all ye that love her;
Rejoice for joy with her,
All ye that mourn for her;

4. their mockings. Because they—the apostate and obstinate transgressors—have chosen to do that which mocks Me (v. 3), I will choose for them suffering that will mock their hopes.

their fears. i.e. the very things they fear, I will bring upon them.

5–6. Addressed to the faithful, whose hopes are ridiculed by their adversaries.

5. your brethren. i.e. the semi-idolatrous schismatics.

cast you out. That refuse to associate with you (Cheyne).

let the LORD be glorified . . . joy. These are the taunting words of the insolent opponents.

6. an uproar. The Prophet already seems to hear the sound of the coming judgment against the mockers.

7–14. The Prophet again breaks off with words of comfort to the faithful community. Though ridiculed by their adversaries, increase of population (v. 7), peace and prosperity (v. 12) shall be theirs.

7. Zion is the mother, and the verse describes the swift increase in her population through the reinforcement of faithful children from all parts.

8. is a land born in one day? Emphasizes the rapidity of this remarkable increase.

9. The work of restoration and salvation shall be complete. God will not leave it unfinished.

10. A call to the children restored, and those still in Exile, to rejoice with Jerusalem.

all ye that mourn for her. All those in Exile, and those who since the Return have been depressed at the slow realization of their hopes in Zion.

11. The figure of Zion as Mother is retained.

12. For thus saith the LORD:
Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river,
And the wealth of the nations like an overflowing stream,
And ye shall suck thereof;
Ye shall be borne upon the side,
And shall be dandled upon the knees.
13. As one whom his mother comforteth,
So will I comfort you;
And ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.
14. And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice,
And your bones shall flourish like young grass;
And the hand of the LORD shall be known toward His servants,
And He will have indignation against His enemies.

15. For, behold, the LORD will come in fire,
And his chariots shall be like the whirlwind;
To render His anger with fury,
And His rebuke with flames of fire.
16. For by fire will the LORD contend,
And by His sword with all flesh;
And the slain of the Lord shall be many.
17. They that sanctify themselves and purify themselves
To go unto the gardens,
Behind one in the midst,
Eating swine's flesh, and the detestable thing, and the mouse,
Shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

12. Peace and prosperity shall stream into Zion, like a river that overflows its banks. shall be borne upon the side. Continues the figure of the nursling in the preceding verse. The nations become their foster-mothers.

13. as one whom his mother comforteth. 'As the grown man, coming back with wounds and weariness upon him to be comforted of his mother' (G. A. Smith), finds there the comfort he seeks, so will God comfort the men of Zion. God is our Mother.

14. your bones shall flourish. Your bodily frames shall be filled with renewed vigour.

15.-16. The Prophet returns to the coming judgment of God against His enemies.

17. Once more a reference to the idolatries of the apostates.
they that sanctify themselves. Words used

18. For I [know] their works and their thoughts; [the time] cometh, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and shall see My glory. 19. And I will work a sign among them, and I will send such as escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard My fame, neither have seen My glory; and they shall declare My glory among the nations.

satirically of the preparation by these people for their heathenish rites (Kimchi).

unto the gardens. i.e. to join in the abominable cults often practised there (Isa. LXV, 3).

behind one in the midst. The Massoretes read the feminine form אחת for 'one'. The reference therefore is to an asherah, a grove of sacred trees or poles set up near an altar for idol-worship in the garden. If the word is read as written, אחד, the reference would be to a priest who led the company of worshippers.

the mouse. Its flesh was, with that of the other 'detestable things', eaten as part of the mystic rites of this heathen cult.

19. I will work a sign among them. i.e. the nations, by a mighty act of judgment and retribution. Those of the peoples that survive are represented as going to far-off lands to tell of God, His greatness and glory.

Tarshish. The town of Tartessus in Spain.
Pul and Lud. Probably districts in N. Africa.
Javan. Greece.

20. And they shall bring all your brethren out of all the nations for an offering unto the LORD, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to My holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring their offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD. 21. And of them also will I take for the priests and for the Levites, saith the LORD. 22. For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before Me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23. And it shall come to pass,
That from one new moon to another,
And from one sabbath to another,
Shall all flesh come to worship before Me,
Saith the LORD.

24. And they shall go forth, and look Upon the carcasses of the men that have rebelled against Me;
For their worm shall not die,
Neither shall their fire be quenched;
And they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

And it shall come to pass,
That from one new moon to another,
And from one sabbath to another,
Shall all flesh come to worship before Me,
Saith the LORD.

20. Impressed by what they thus hear, these far-off nations shall bring to Jerusalem all the Israelites dwelling among them, and in a manner appropriate to the greatness of the occasion.

21. and of them also will I take for priests and Levites. Of the converted Gentiles who bring, and from the Jews who are brought back, I will take to assist the priests and Levites in their service (Kimchi). This thought is quite in accordance with the universalist spirit in Isaiah.

22 and 23. In this new (and better) order of things, the race and influence of Israel will continue for ever, leading to the fulfilment of Israel's mission, i.e. the universal worship of the One God, with Jerusalem as the devotional capital of mankind.

23. from one new moon to another. lit. 'as often as there is a new moon on its new moon, etc.', i.e. on every New Moon and Sabbath; New Moon by New Moon and Sabbath by Sabbath.

24. A survey again of the conflict against evil, and its final defeat, through which the above great goal is reached. Delitzsch points out that, in effect, the thought is the same as in the concluding sentence of other sections of the second half of Isaiah—'there is no peace unto the wicked' (XLVIII, 22, and I.VII, 21). Under the figure of the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched, we have here a symbolical representation of the lasting remorse that, on the realization of their wickedness, troubles the souls of evil-doers. The knowledge of this, which will be clear to all ('and they shall go forth and look'), will become a restraining moral influence. It will be a factor in the attainment of the great consummation (the universal worship of the one true God) described in the previous verse.

they shall go forth. The worshippers.

According to ancient Jewish custom, v. 23 is read a second time after v. 24, so as to conclude the book (of which this is the last chapter) with words of comfort and encouragement. There is a similar direction in regard to concluding Malachi, Lamentations and Ecclesiastes. In each case, the last verse but one is reprinted in the Heb. text, and repeated during the reading in the Synagogue.

1 SAMUEL XX, 18-42

CHAPTER XX

CAP. XX. כ

18. And Jonathan said unto him: 'Tomorrow is the new moon; and thou wilt be missed, because thy seat will be empty. 19. And in the third day thou shalt hide thyself well, and come to the place where thou didst hide thyself in the day of work, and shalt remain by the stone Ezel. 20. And I will shoot three arrows to the side-ward, as though I shot at a mark. 21. And, behold, I will send the lad: Go, find the arrows. If I say unto the lad: Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee; take them, and come; for there is peace to thee and no hurt, as the LORD liveth. 22. But if I say thus unto the boy: Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way; for the LORD hath sent thee away. 23. And as touching the matter which I and thou have spoken of, behold, the LORD is between me and thee for ever.' ¶ 24. So David hid himself in the field; and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to the meal to eat. 25. And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon the seat by the wall; and Jonathan stood up, and Abner sat by Saul's side; but David's place was empty. 26. Nevertheless Saul spoke not any thing that day; for he thought: 'Something hath befallen him, he is unclean; surely he is not clean.' 27. And it came to pass on the morrow after the new moon, which was the

20. v. ח' רפה. 24. v. אל קרי

There is hardly a more beautiful figure in history than Jonathan. Truly he was 'a very perfect knight', the very essence of chivalry. To the Rabbis he stands for all time as the type of disinterested, self-denying friendship (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 17). His greatness was manifested in the very clash of duty between his loyalty to his father and his love of David. Jonathan's was a task of rare difficulty, to combine duty to his father with devotion to his friend. Yet he fails in neither. To Saul he was an affectionate son and faithful officer; and 'no cloud of envy intercepted his admiration of the great warrior, the sweet singer of Israel, who hereafter was to supersede him' (Jowett). It is fortunate that the opening incident of the chapter, occurring on a Machar Chodesh—the eve of the New Moon—enables the story of Jonathan's friendship and self-abnegation to be included among the Lessons from the Prophets.

Saul, half-crazed by jealousy of David's popularity and growing hold on the people, seeks to destroy him. David places himself in the power of Jonathan, who at first is quite unwilling to believe evil of his father. He decides to sound his father and warn David.

second day, that David's place was empty; and Saul said unto Jonathan his son: 'Wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse to the meal, neither yesterday, nor to-day?' 28. And Jonathan answered Saul: 'David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Beth-lehem; 29. and he said: Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and my brother, he hath commanded me; and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren. Therefore he is not come unto the king's table.' 30. Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him: 'Thou son of perverse rebellion, do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own shame, and unto the shame of thy mother's nakedness? 31. For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the earth, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom. Wherefore now send and fetch him unto me, for he deserveth to die.' 32. And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him: 'Wherefore should he be put to death? what hath he done?' 33. And Saul cast his spear at him to smite him; whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to put David to death. 34. So Jonathan arose from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no food the second day of the month; for he was grieved for David, and because his father had put him to shame. 35. And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him. 36. And he said unto his lad: 'Run, find now the arrows which I shoot.' And as the lad ran he shot an arrow beyond him. 37. And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said: 'Is not the arrow beyond thee?' 38. And Jonathan cried after the lad: 'Make speed, hasten, stay not.' And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master. 39. But the lad knew not any thing; only Jonathan and David knew the matter. 40. And Jonathan gave his weapons unto his lad, and said unto him: 'Go, carry them to the city.' 41. And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the South, and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed down three times; and they kissed one another, and wept one with murderous fury—85 priests are slain for having given bread to the hungry fugitive David. If Jonathan had, at the moment of farewell, only thought of providing his friend with a few loaves of bread, that massacre might have been averted (Talmud). When the tragic end came, and both Saul and Jonathan died for their people, David lamented them in the most beautiful elegy in literature:

Thy glory, O Israel, is slain upon thy high places!

How are the mighty fallen! . . .

Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives,

And in their death they were not divided;

They were swifter than eagles,

They were stronger than lions.

Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul,

Who clothed you in scarlet delicately,

Who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle!

O, Jonathan, slain upon thy high places,
I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan;
Very pleasant hast thou been unto me:

Thy love to me was wonderful,

Passing the love of women.

How are the mighty fallen,

And the weapons of war perished!

When, to the example of David and Jonathan, we add the deep friendship of two women, Ruth and Naomi: ('Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried; the LORD do so to me and more also, if aught but death part thee and me,') we realize that the Bible is also the supreme Book of Friendship.

CAP. I. א

א

1. Now there was a certain man of Ramathaim-zophim, of the hill-country of Ephraim, and his name was Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Elihu, the son of Tohu, the son of Zuph, an Ephraimite. 2. And he had two wives: the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah; and Peninnah had children, but Hannah had no children. 3. And this

The appeal to the Merit of the Patriarchs (זכות אבות) is the most persistent motif of the liturgy of the Yamim Nora'im, and above all appeal is made to the Akedah as the supreme expression of obedience and surrender to the Divine Will. O remember the binding of Isaac this day in mercy unto his seed. Therefore it is that the two chapters of Genesis, 21 and 22, are chosen as the readings from the Torah for the First and Second days of Rosh Hashanah respectively. The first of these, telling of the birth of Isaac to Abraham and Sarah after a lifetime of childlessness, leads up to the Akedah chapter.

The Haftorah likewise tells of the birth of a son to Hannah after long childlessness and of Hannah's self-sacrifice in devoting her son to the service of God. But there are as well, in Hannah's psalm of praise and thanksgiving, themes which are of themselves apposite for the Day: The LORD is a God of knowledge and by him actions are weighed; The LORD will judge the ends of the earth; and the whole song is a lofty expression of faith in God's rule and in His providence.

CHAPTER I, 1-2. SAMUEL'S PARENTAGE

1. now. The Hebrew is literally 'and'. It has been suggested that the purpose of the conjunction is to connect the history contained in this Book with that of the Book of Judges. But independent histories in the Bible begin with the same conjunction, e.g. Ruth, Jonah, Esther, and it is more likely that the particle of conjunction is a formal opening to a historical narrative, without any connecting force.

Ramathaim-zophim. It is clear from v. 19 that Ramah is meant. Ramah (height) is a common Biblical place-name, and the site of Samuel's Ramah is not definitely known. Suggested identifications are: (a) Er-Ram, five miles due north of Jerusalem, (b) Ram Allah, on the western slopes of Mount Ephraim, nine miles north of Jerusalem, (c) Beit-Rima, a village on a hill twelve miles north-west of Bethel, and (d) Rentis, a small village five miles west of Beit-Rima.

hill-country of Ephraim. The central mountainous district of the Holy Land in which the tribe of Ephraim settled (Josh. xvii, 15). The name may have extended southwards to the territory of Benjamin, if Ramah lay there.

son of Jeroham. Elkanah's genealogy is given, with slight variations, twice in 1 Chron. vi, 11 f and 19 f, where his ancestry is traced back to Kohath, the son of Levi.

an Ephraimite. Since Elkanah was a Levite, the description Ephraimite can only mean that his family originally belonged to the Kohathite settlements in the territory of Ephraim (Josh. xxi, 20). If Ramah lay within the borders of Benjamin, it would have to be supposed that Zuph, Elkanah's ancestor, moved from the territory assigned to his family in Ephraim.

2. two wives. Polygamy was permitted in ancient Israelite law, but there is no evidence that it was extensively practised. In later Biblical times its practice became more and more infrequent. The Midrash suggests that he had married a second wife because Hannah was barren.

3-8. ELKANAH'S ANNUAL PILGRIMAGE

3. from year to year. Hebrew miyyamim yamimah. It would appear that Elkanah did not observe fully the injunction to appear before the Lord on each of the three pilgrim festivals (Exod. xxxiv, 23).

to worship and to sacrifice. A Rabbinical comment reads: 'Prayer is greater than sacrifice, for it states first to worship and then to sacrifice' (Yalkut).

LORD of hosts. This is the first use in the Bible of a title which became current in Israel. Its precise meaning has been the subject of much disputation, some favouring 'God of the armies of Israel' (cf. xvii, 45: I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel), others 'God of the hosts of heaven,' i.e. the stars and angels. Perhaps both senses are contained in the title.

Shiloh. Where Joshua set up the Tabernacle (Josh. xviii, 1) and where it remained (with temporary exceptions) until the ark was captured by the Philistines (iv, 11). From that time Shiloh ceased to be the national Sanctuary, and it is probable that it was occupied or destroyed by the Philistines; so that, when the ark was returned, it was allowed to remain in Kiriath-jearim (vii, 1 f), and the next reference to the Sanctuary places it in Nob (xxi, 2). But the unrecorded fate of Shiloh became a by-word in Israel (cf. Jer. vii, 12; Ps. lxxviii, 60). The site of Shiloh is accurately defined in Judg. xxi, 19, and is generally identified with the modern Seilun, about ten miles north of Bethel.

the two sons. Because Eli was very old and probably no longer active in the service of the Sanctuary, and because of the vital part which his sons' misdeeds played in the development of the narrative, Hophni and Phinehas are mentioned as the active priests (Ehrlich).

4. that he gave. Better, 'he used to give.' The whole passage, from these words to so she vexed her in v. 7, is to be considered as if in parenthesis. The tenses express repeated action, and the passage describes Peninnah's habitual scornful treatment of Hannah. The narrative of this particular occasion, which begins in 4a, is resumed in 7b: therefore she wept and would not eat.

5. a double portion. The Hebrew phrase is difficult and obscure, and no completely satisfactory rendering has been suggested. The Rabbinical comments have this in common, that the portion given to Hannah was such as to compensate her for her lack of children and to mark Elkanah's affection for her.

her womb. 6. And her rival vexed her sore, to make her fret, because the LORD had shut up her womb. 7. And as he did so year by year, when she went up to the house of the LORD, so she vexed her; therefore she wept, and would not eat. 8. And Elkanah her husband said unto her: 'Hannah, why weepest thou? and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? am not I better to thee than ten sons?' 9. So Hannah rose up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk—now Eli the priest sat upon his seat by the door-post of the temple of the LORD; 10. and she was in bitterness of soul—and prayed unto the LORD, and wept sore. 11. And she vowed a vow, and said: 'O LORD of hosts, if Thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of Thy handmaid, and remember me, and not forget Thy handmaid, but wilt give unto Thy handmaid a man-child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, and there shall no razor come upon his head,' 12. And it came to pass, as she prayed long before the LORD, that Eli watched her mouth. 13. Now Hannah, she spoke in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice could not be heard; therefore Eli thought she had been drunken. 14. And Eli said unto her: 'How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee.' 15. And Hannah answered and said: 'No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit; I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but I poured out my fret. An alternative rendering, based on the Aramaic usage, is 'to make her complain.'

7. therefore she wept. Better, 'that she wept,' continuing 4a: and it came to pass upon a day, when Elkanah sacrificed.

8. am not I better to thee, etc. Elkanah did not mean that, in his love of Hannah, he compensated for the lack of sons. Ehrlich gives as the sense: Am not I more devoted to thee than if thou hadst ten (i.e. many) sons?

9-18. HANNAH AND ELI

9. Eli the priest. Eli belonged to the house of Ithamar, Aaron's fourth son (1 Chron. xxiv, 1, 3; 1 Kings ii, 27). The last High Priest mentioned before him was Phinehas, the son of Eleazar (Judg. xx, 28), but we are not told why or how the succession passed from the house of Eleazar to that of Ithamar. Eli acted as judge as well as priest (iv, 18).

is described as a temple, in v. 4 and as a tabernacle in v. 6.

11. LORD of hosts. The Talmud (Ber. 31b) points out that this is the first use of the title in prayer, and remarks that Hannah wished to suggest: 'Lord of the universe, of all these hosts that Thou hast created in Thy world; is it hard for Thee to grant me one son?'

I will give him. As a Levite, Samuel would in any event have been consecrated to the service of the Sanctuary; but Hannah's vow makes Samuel's consecration both life-long and continuous, whereas the other Levites served only from the age of 25 to 50 (Num. viii, 24 f), and in turns of duty.

no razor. The Nazirite vow (cf. Num. vi, 5).

13. A Rabbi remarked: 'How many important rules can be deduced from Hannah's prayer! That she spoke from her heart teaches that prayer requires devotion; that her lips moved tells us that it is necessary to articulate the words of prayer with one's lips; that her voice could not be heard gives the rule that it is forbidden to raise one's voice loudly in prayer' (Ber. 31a).

soul before the LORD. 16. Count not thy handmaid for a wicked woman: for out of the abundance of my complaint and my vexation have I spoken hitherto.' 17. Then Eli answered and said: 'Go in peace, and the God of Israel grant thy petition that thou hast asked of Him.' 18. And she said: 'Let thy servant find favour in thy sight.' So the woman went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad. 19. And they rose up in the morning early, and worshipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their house to Ramah; and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; and the LORD remembered her. 20. And it came to pass, when the time was come about, that Hannah conceived, and bore a son; and she called his name Samuel: 'because I have asked him of the LORD.' ¶ 21. And the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly sacrifice, and his vow. 22. But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband: 'Until the child be weaned, when I will bring him, that he may appear before the LORD, and there abide for ever.' 23. And Elkanah her husband said unto her: 'Do what seemeth thee good; tarry until thou have weaned him; only the LORD establish His word.' So the woman tarried and gave her

18. let thy servant, etc. An expression of thanks.

19–28. BIRTH AND DEDICATION OF SAMUEL

19. remembered her. See on v. 11 and cf. Gen. xxx, 22 f.

20. when the time was come about. Explained by Kimchi and others as 'at the end of the period of gestation'; but then the following phrase that Hannah conceived would be out of place. The phrase is better understood as 'at the coming round of the new year,' i.e. at the next season for Elkanah's annual pilgrimage. The verse would then be a parenthetical passage: ('now Hannah had conceived and had borne a son and had called his name Samuel').

I have asked him. The derivation of the name is by way of assonance rather than of etymology, as if Shemuel were a contraction of sha'ul me'el (asked of God).

21. the yearly sacrifice. See on v. 3.

his vow. Either the vows (the singular being used in a collective sense) which he had made in the course of the year (Rashi), or a vow made at the birth of his son (Kimchi).

22. weaned. At the age of two or three years. It is still the common practice in the East to suckle a child for two years; and there is evidence that in ancient times some children were not weaned until the age of three (cf. 2 Macc. vii, 27: 'O my son, have pity upon me that gave thee suck three years and nourished thee'). Some commentators have found it difficult to suppose that the child would have been committed to Eli's care at so early an age, and have interpreted the phrase figuratively, as 'at the age when he was independent of his mother.'

for ever. i.e. as long as he lives (cf. v. 28).

23. His word. 'Samuel's birth implied that Hannah's prayer was heard, and Elkanah prays that it may receive a complete fulfilment' (Kirkpatrick).

son suck, until she weaned him. 24. And when she had weaned him, she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of meal, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the house of the LORD in Shiloh; and the child was young. 25. And when the bullock was slain, the child was brought to Eli. 26. And she said: 'Oh, my lord, as thy soul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the LORD. 27. For this child I prayed; and the LORD hath granted me my petition which I asked of Him; 28. therefore I also have lent him to the LORD; as long as he liveth he is lent to the LORD.' And he worshipped the LORD there.

CHAPTER II

1. And Hannah prayed, and said:
My heart exulteth in the LORD,
My horn is exalted in the LORD;
My mouth is enlarged over mine enemies;
Because I rejoice in Thy salvation.
2. There is none holy as the LORD;
For there is none beside Thee;
Neither is there any rock like our God.
3. Multiply not exceeding proud talk;
Let not arrogance come out of your mouth;
For the LORD is a God of knowledge,
And by Him actions are weighed.

24. she took him. Elkanah is not mentioned as accompanying her, but it is clear from II, 11, that he did so.

with three bullocks . . . wine. Ehrlich suggests that these were not for an offering, but a gift to Eli. Perhaps two bullocks were part of the present and the third was sacrificed.

the child was young. lit. 'the child was a child': a vague term giving no clue to Samuel's age.

25. the bullock. One of the three which had been brought specifically as an offering in connection with Samuel's dedication, either as a thank-offering or as an offering at the fulfilment of a vow.

28. I also. i.e. I on my part.

he worshipped. If the pronoun refers to Elkanah, we are to assume that, as the head of the household, he worshipped while Hannah poured forth her heart in the hymn of praise which follows. If, on the other hand, it refers to Samuel, it would be better to render 'he bowed down to the Lord'; he would be too young to worship.

CHAPTER II, 1-10. HANNAH'S SONG OF PRAISE

Hannah's song is a lofty expression of religious faith in God's rule and providence. Although immediately occasioned by her own happy change of fortune, she rises beyond the personal experience to a sense of God's universal and moral government of the world.

1. prayed. Cf. Jonah II, 2, for the use of the word prayed in connection with a psalm of praise and thanksgiving.

horn is exalted. 'The figure is that of an animal carrying its head high and proudly conscious of its strength' (Driver).

mouth is enlarged. A gesture of exultation and triumph.

mine enemies. According to Rashi and Kimchi, Peninnah is meant.

2. rock. A frequent figure applied to God, expressive of His eternity and reliability (cf. Deut. xxxii, 4, etc.; II Sam. xxii, 3).

3. The argument is: Do not speak arrogantly, for God has full knowledge of what you do, and your actions are thus appraised by Him (Driver).

4. The bows of the mighty men are broken,
And they that stumbled are girded with strength.

5. They that were full have hired out themselves for bread;

And they that were hungry have ceased;
While the barren hath borne seven,
She that had many children hath languished.

6. The LORD killeth, and maketh alive;
He bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up.

7. The LORD maketh poor, and maketh rich;
He bringeth low, He also lifteth up.

8. He raiseth up the poor out of the dust,
He lifteth up the needy from the dung-hill,
To make them sit with princes,

And inherit the throne of glory;
For the pillars of the earth are the LORD's,
And He hath set the world upon them.

9. He will keep the feet of His holy ones,
But the wicked shall be put to silence in darkness;

For not by strength shall man prevail.

10. They that strive with the LORD shall be broken to pieces;

Against them will He thunder in heaven;
The LORD will judge the ends of the earth;

4. For the human being life is full of uncertainty. The strong are rendered powerless, while the weak often triumph in the end.

5. they that were full, etc. The wealthy are reduced to such poverty that they have to sell their labour in order to exist.

ceased. i.e. to toil, or to be hungry.

seven. A round number, equals 'several.'

hath languished. By the loss of her children (cf. Jer. xv, 9).

6. It is probable that neither half of this verse refers to actual resurrection from death. Death and the grave are used figuratively for the depths of misfortune and peril; and life and revival for deliverance and prosperity. Cf. For great is Thy mercy toward me; and Thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest nether-world (Ps. LXXXVI, 13).

8. The first half of the verse is to be compared with Ps. cxii, 7 f.

for the pillars, etc. Since God created the world and maintains it, He has power to arrange the fortunes of men in accordance with His Will.

9. holy ones. Or, 'pious, godly ones.'

not by strength. But by the Divine Will.

10. king . . . anointed. These are parallel and, in this context, synonymous terms. 'It has been alleged that the mention of the king stamps this song as of later date, posterior to the establishment of the monarchy. This is by no means the case. The idea of a king was not altogether novel to the Israelite mind. The promise to Abraham spoke of kings among his posterity (Gen. xvii, 6); the Mosaic legislation prescribes the method of election and duty of the king (Deut. xvii, 14 ff); Gideon had been invited to establish a hereditary monarchy (Judg. viii, 22). . . . Amid the prevalent anarchy and growing disintegration of the nation . . . the desire for a king was probably taking definite shape in the popular mind' (Kirkpatrick).

GENESIS XXII

JEREMIAH XXXI, 2-20

CHAPTER XXXI

2. Thus saith the LORD:
The people that were left of the sword
Have found grace in the wilderness,
Even Israel, when I go to cause him to rest.
3. 'From afar the LORD appeared unto me.'
'Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love;
Therefore with affection have I drawn thee.
4. Again will I build thee, and thou shalt be built,
O virgin of Israel;
Again shalt thou be adorned with thy tabrets,
And shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

It was the last three verses which determined the choice of this passage. They speak of the efficacy of repentance; they support the Rabbinic dictum that Heaven helps him who tries to purify himself from sin; they teach that God Himself longs for man's reconciliation with Him; and they conclude with that loveliest of sentences, from the Musaph Amidah, commencing Is Ephraim a darling son unto me?

But for many other reasons as well one can be thankful that this chapter from Jeremiah has found its way into the service of the Synagogue. It is a prophecy of national restoration; it brought every New Year a heartening message of hope to encourage our people in its darkest ages; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears . . . there is hope for thy future, saith the LORD; it paints a delightful and idyllic picture of the happiness of Israel redeemed; and it breathes a tenderness and sweetness which have not been surpassed in the whole prophetic literature.

2-20. PROMISED RESTORATION OF THE NORTHERN KINGDOM

2. that were left of the sword. The survivors of the carnage which accompanied the overthrow of the Northern Kingdom. The use of this phrase discounts the interpretation that the prophet is alluding to the exodus from Egypt.

the wilderness. The land of their exile. They will find favour in God's eyes. The verbs are in the prophetic past, although applying to the future.

cause him to rest. When God restores him to his land. An alternative rendering, given in R.V. margin, is: 'When he (Israel) went to find him rest.'

3. 'from afar . . . me.' 'Yea,' etc. The two clauses are put into separate inverted commas, thus dividing the verse into two distinct utterances: the people in distant exile proclaim that God appeared to them from afar, from the land of Israel, and God replies that this is so, because I have loved thee with an everlasting love. Another possibility is to understand the word 'saying' before Yea, I have loved thee, which makes Israel quote the Divine declaration of love.

have I drawn thee. Towards Me in the former relationship which was interrupted by the captivity. Cf. for the use of the verb in this sense, Hos. xi, 4.

O virgin of Israel. Although others have had dominion over thee, yet thou art as beloved to Me as an unsullied virgin.

tabrets. Cf. Exod. xv, 20. Peake well observes, 'This idyllic picture deserves to be made prominent in any estimate of Jeremiah; it is one of many indications that he was no sour and morose enemy of recreation and merriment.'

5. shall have the use thereof (chillelu). For the first three years the fruit borne by a tree was termed orlah, lit 'uncircumcised,' i.e. forbidden.

6. For there shall be a day,
That the watchmen shall call upon the mount Ephraim:

Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion,
Unto the LORD our God.'

7. For thus saith the LORD:

Sing with gladness for Jacob,
And shout at the head of the nations;
Announce ye, praise ye, and say:
'O LORD, save Thy people,
The remnant of Israel.'

8. Behold, I will bring them from the north country,

And gather them from the uttermost parts
of the earth,

And with them the blind and the lame,
The woman with child and her that travaileth with child together;

A great company shall they return hither.

9. They shall come with weeping,
And with supplications will I lead them;
I will cause them to walk by rivers of waters,
In a straight way wherein they shall not stumble;

For I am become a father to Israel,
And Ephraim is My first-born.

10. Hear the word of the LORD, O ye nations,

And declare it in the isles afar off, and say:

In the fourth year it might be eaten, but only as 'holy' food in Jerusalem. But if it was too burdensome to carry, it was redeemed and its value spent there. The verb chillel is the technical term for such redemption (cf. Lev. XIX, 23-25; Deut. XX, 6; in the last-mentioned verse the verb chillel occurs).

6. the watchmen. Who give the signal for the pilgrimage. Probably there were watch-towers by the cities on the route from Samaria to Jerusalem. As the watchmen saw the procession of pilgrims from the more distant cities approaching, they gave the signal to their own pilgrims to make ready to join the band.

to Zion. An indication that the breach between Samaria and Judea will have been healed, and Jerusalem resume its rightful place as the religious centre of a reunited Israelite nation.

7. praise ye, and say: 'O LORD, save Thy people.' Praise ye (Hebrew hallelu) probably refers to the liturgical recitation of God's praises in religious worship.

8. the north country. i.e. Assyria.

the uttermost parts of the earth. All places where the Ten Tribes had been dispersed.

12. And they shall come and sing in the height of Zion,
And shall flow unto the goodness of the LORD,

To the corn, and to the wine, and to the oil,
And to the young of the flock and of the herd;

And they shall not pine any more at all.

13. Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance,

And the young men and the old together;
For I will turn their mourning into joy,

And will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

14. And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness,

And My people shall be satisfied with My goodness,

Rachel weeping for her children;

She refuseth to be comforted for her children,

Because they are not.

16. Thus saith the LORD:

Refrain thy voice from weeping,

And thine eyes from tears;

12. shall flow unto. The verb has been explained as denoting either that the population will stream into Jerusalem to celebrate a feast in gratitude for their prosperity; or that they will return home from Zion to enjoy their abundance. Ehrlich suggests that the verb means here 'they will beam (with joy) at.'

15. Ramah. Between Gibeon and Beeroth (Josh. XVIII, 25), five miles north of Jerusalem.

Rachel weeping for her children. Rachel, an ancestress of a section of the Israelite people, who had so longed for children as to regard herself as dead without them (Gen. xxx, 1), now weeps that they are no more, slain or driven into exile. Ramah is mentioned because her tomb was in its vicinity. According to an ancient Jewish legend, Jacob intentionally buried her there by the roadside, because he foresaw that his descendants would pass by on the way to exile and she would weep and intercede for them. Rashi and Metzudath David interpret: 'A voice is heard on high': Rachel's lamentation has ascended to the heights of heaven.

16. thy work. i.e. the toil and care spent in bearing and rearing her children. Their exile seemed to make all this work futile; but let her take comfort because they will come back and revive their national life.

17. there is hope for thy future. That has been the sustaining thought in the long night of the Jewish dispersion: hope, amounting to conviction, of a restoration to Zion.

18. I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself:

'Thou has chastised me, and I was chastised,
As a calf untrained;

Turn thou me, and I shall be turned,

For Thou are the LORD my God.

19. Surely after that I was turned, I repented,

And after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh;

I was ashamed, yea, even confounded,

Because I did bear the reproach of my youth.'

20. Is Ephraim a darling son unto Me?

Is he a child that is dandled?

For as often as I speak of him,

I do earnestly remember him still;

ISAIAH LVII, 14-LVIII, 14

CHAPTER LVII

CAP. LVII. נז

נז

14. And He will say:

Cast ye up, cast ye up, clear the way,
Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of My people.

15. For thus saith the High and Lofty One That inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy:

I dwell in the high and holy place,
With him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit,

To revive the spirit of the humble,
And to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

16. For I will not contend for ever,
Neither will I be always wroth;
For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me,

And the souls which I have made.

17. For the iniquity of his covetousness was
I wroth and smote him,

14 ואמר סלדסלו פנדרך הרימו מכשול מדרך עמי :

15 כי כה אמר רם ונשא שכן עד וקדוש שמו מרום וקדוש

אשכון ואתדבא ושפל רוח להחיות רוח שפלים

16 ולהחיות לב נדבאים: כי לא לעולם אריב ולא לנצח

אקצוף בירוח מלפני יצוא ונשמות אני עשיתי :

17 בעון בצעו קצפתי ואכרו הסתר ואקצוף בלך

I hid Me and was wroth;

And he went on frowardly in the way of his heart.

The fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah is a telling indictment of the hypocrisy and worthlessness of ritual without righteousness. The people complain that they had sought God daily, they had worshipped Him regularly, they had fasted: yet all had been of no avail; God had not answered. And the prophet in his reply tells them both what was wrong in their approach to God and the kind of conduct which must underlie prayer and fasting if they are to be acceptable to God. Thus on the most solemn Fast Day in the year the Jew is reminded that fasting alone is not enough; doing justice and loving mercy must go hand in hand with walking humbly with thy God.

The concluding verses of Chapter LVII are used as a preface, both because they likewise teach the message that true repentance is acceptable to God, and also because it was felt that the first verse of Chapter LVIII would be too abrupt and condemnatory an opening.

14-21. The theme of Chapter LVII has till now been a scathing denunciation of the idolatrous rites and pagan and immoral practices of the people. Now the penitent sufferers returning to God are promised relief from their oppressors and Divine comfort and peace.

14. The way in the verse is to be understood as the spiritual approach to God by the people who had hitherto strayed from Him.

clear the way. Remove from your hearts the evil inclination which blocks the path to redemption.

the stumbling-block. i.e. sinful thoughts, which bar the way to justice and righteousness.

15. God is high and lofty, far above all human eminence, and at the same time He is near to the contrite and humble. His exaltation and condescension are neither identical nor mutually exclusive, but two different manifestations of His inscrutable nature.

the high and holy place. i.e. heaven.

16. The verse explains why God is near to the contrite in spirit. Divine anger lasts only for a time, until chastisement had produced the desired purification and humility of spirit. Long continuance of His wrath and judgment would have utterly destroyed the souls He had created.

that enwrappeth itself is from Me. Better, 'would faint before Me.'

17-19. God's estrangement, anger and punishment are the fruits of the people's iniquity; but after the discipline comes healing and comfort.

17. covetousness. Which led to the exploitation of the poor and weak.

I hid Me and was wroth. lit. 'hiding and being wroth,' i.e. repeatedly. As often as the people were guilty of covetousness, God hid Himself and was wroth.

18. I have seen his ways, and will heal him;
I will lead him also, and requite with comforts him and his mourners.

19. Peace, peace, to him that is far off and to him that is near,

Saith the LORD that createth the fruit of the lips;

And I will heal him.

20. But the wicked are like the troubled sea;
For it cannot rest,

And its waters cast up mire and dirt.

21. There is no peace,

Saith my God concerning the wicked.

CHAPTER LVIII

1. Cry aloud, spare not,
Lift up thy voice like a horn,
And declare unto My people their transgression,

And to the house of Jacob their sins.

2. Yet they seek Me daily,
And delight to know My ways;
As a nation that did righteousness,
And forsook not the ordinance of their God,
They ask of Me righteous ordinances,
They delight to draw near unto God.

possibly denotes the expression of gratitude for God's favours.

impenitent wicked.

BOOK OF JONAH AND BOOK OF MICAH VII, 18-20

CHAPTER I

1. Now the word of the LORD came unto Jonah the son of Amittai, saying: 2. 'Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and proclaim against it; for their wickedness is come up before Me.' 3. But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD; and he went down to Joppa, and

וַיְהִי דְבַר-יְהוָה אֶל-יוֹנָה בֶּן-אֲמִתַּי לֵאמֹר: 2 א

לִפְנֵי: 3 וַיָּקָם יוֹנָה לִבְרֹחַ תַּרְשִׁישָׁה מִלִּפְנֵי יְהוָה וַיֵּרֶד

The Book of Jonah is the most ill-used and least understood of all the Books of the Bible. The story of the great fish, the prominence given to it both by those who defend the historicity of the narrative and by those who deny its possibility, and the impression which it very naturally makes on the mind of the general reader, have obscured the great spiritual truths which the Book has to teach. 'This is the tragedy of the Book of Jonah, that a Book which is made the means of one of the most sublime revelations of truth in the Old Testament should be known to most only for its connection with a whale' (quoted by G. A. Smith).

The purpose of Jonah's adventures is to teach him by experience, and through him Israel and mankind, a lesson which had to be learned. The lesson cannot be only, as some have maintained, that God accepts repentance; if that were all, chapter iv would be irrelevant and unnecessary. Nor can it be only the lesson that the Gentiles too are God's creatures, and worthy of pardon if sincerely repentant. Jonah knew and understood that lesson; his very reluctance to deliver his message was based on the fear that the Ninevites might repent, if warned, and be forgiven, and that he would therefore be the agent of their salvation. The essential teaching is that the Gentiles should not be grudged God's love, care and forgiveness. It is this grudging which is so superbly rebuked throughout the Book, and most of all in the final chapter, which must rightly be considered the climax of the story.

Jonah the son of Amittai is mentioned in II Kings xiv, 25, as a prophet who lived in the reign of Jeroboam II, i.e. the first half of the eighth century, and it is generally held that he is to be identified with the Jonah of this Book. If, then, the book is history, and not, as many scholars suggest, a parable or allegory, the events recorded therein took place early in the eighth century. But there is no reason to assume that Jonah himself was the author of the Book which bears his name; and internal evidence, especially of language, favours a post-exilic date of composition, probably in the fifth century.

CAP. I. א

א

The choice of this Book as one of the scriptural readings for Yom Kippur was natural. It underlies so many lessons of the Day—that it is impossible to run away from God's presence, that God takes pity on all His creatures, that He is ever willing to accept true repentance. The verses from Micah have been added to emphasize these teachings with more specific application to the Hebrew people.

CHAPTER I

Jonah, sent by God to proclaim imminent punishment to the Ninevites, seeks to evade his duty by taking ship to Tarshish. A terrible storm overtakes the ship. The sailors learn that Jonah is the cause of the storm and, on his advice, reluctantly cast him into the sea.

1-3. THE SUMMONS AND FLIGHT

1. now. lit. 'and.' Biblical Books often begin with this conjunction without the idea of sequence.

2. Nineveh. The capital of Assyria, on the eastern bank of the Tigris, opposite the modern Mosul. It was destroyed by the Medes in 612 (or 606) B.C.E. and never rebuilt.

that great city. The phrase is used here in anticipation of its use in iv, 11.

proclaim against it. The terms of the proclamation are not given here, but were probably identical with the message which Jonah in the end delivered, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown (iii, 4).

wickedness. Moral and social sins, rather than idolatry. In iii, 8, violence is specified. Their evil acts are said to come up, i.e. arise to God.

3. rose up to flee. The reason for the flight is given in iv, 2. Jonah recognized that his mission had a redemptive purpose. If the proclamation were merely a prediction, it could have been made equally well in the Land of Israel. The fact that he had to go to Nineveh and announce its overthrow to the inhabitants could only mean that found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish, from the presence of the LORD. ¶4. But the LORD hurled a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken. 5. And the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god; and they cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it unto them. But Jonah was gone down into the innermost parts of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep. 6. So the ship-master came to him, and said unto him: 'What meanest thou that thou sleepest? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.' ¶7. And they said every one to his fellow: 'Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us.'

God wished to give them the opportunity of repentance and redemption. Jonah did not wish that they should be saved. Rabbinic explanations include that he foresaw that Assyria would be the destroyer of Israel; that the repentance of the people of Nineveh would reflect adversely on the Israelites, who, in spite of repeated prophetic warnings, had not repented; and that if the Assyrians repented and his prediction were not fulfilled, he might be considered a false prophet, or God's word might appear falsified.

Tarshish. Probably Tartessus in the S.W. of Spain. This town, which maintained a mineral trade with Tyre, was most likely an ancient Semitic colony (cf. Isa. xxiii).

from the presence of the LORD. Not that Jonah believed that God's Presence was confined to the Land of Israel; but, since the Holy Land was the special abode of God's Presence, he hoped that by flight he might evade a second command to deliver his message. The Hebrew phrase may mean 'from standing before the LORD or being in His Presence, as His servant or minister' (Perowne). It is so interpreted by Ibn Ezra.

Joppa. The modern Jaffa.

he paid the fare thereof. Since this was an obvious thing to do, its mention indicates that the sailors knew of his eagerness to get away (cf. v. 10) and so made him pay an increased fare (Ehrlich).

went down into it. The Hebrew idiom for embarking on a ship.

with them. i.e. the sailors and other passengers.

4. was like to be broken. lit. 'it thought it would be broken in pieces.' 'It is a vivid phrase he uses, for it represents the ship as an animate being, agitated, full of fear' (Bewer).

5. every man unto his god. Probably the crew was a mixed one, drawn from many peoples, each with its own national deity. Horton remarks,

'The sailors were, like sailors now, superstitious, if not religious.'

wares. The Hebrew word is indefinite (lit. 'utensils') and may refer either to the cargo or to the furniture and tackle.

lighten it unto them. Better, 'make matters easier for them.' The Hebrew phrase is found also in Exod. xviii, 22.

was gone down. The Hebrew verb expresses a pluperfect, 'Jonah had gone down', i.e. before the storm arose. It is unlikely that he could have fallen asleep during so violent a storm.

the ship. Sephinah, not the same word as in v. 3, means 'covered' and refers to the lower deck or hold.

6. Note the ironic contrast in this verse: a heathen calls upon the Hebrew prophet to pray! The writer does not say whether Jonah did pray.

God will think upon us. The use of God as a generic term is remarkable in the mouth of a heathen, who had just prayed to his own national deity. It suggests that, with their worship of idols, some at least of the heathens had a vague apprehension of one supreme God; and in a moment of great danger, such apprehension would come to the forefront of their consciousness.

7-10. THE SAILORS LEARN THE CAUSE OF THE STORM

7. for whose cause. For some reason unexplained, the sailors concluded that the storm was of unusual character and had a retributive purpose. In the Pirke de R. Eliezer (a Midrashic work of the ninth century), it is suggested that this ship alone was affected; other ships could be seen sailing normally.

evil. i.e. calamity.

So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah. 8. Then said they unto him: 'Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us: what is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?' 9. And he said unto them: 'I am a Hebrew; and I fear the LORD, the God of heaven, who hath made the sea and the dry land.' 10. Then were the men exceedingly afraid, and said unto him: 'What is this that thou hast done?' For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the LORD, because he had told them. ¶ 11. Then said they unto him: 'What shall we do unto thee, that the sea may be calm unto us?' for the sea grew more and more tempestuous. 12. And he said unto them: 'Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you; for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you.' 13. Nevertheless the men rowed hard to bring it to the land; but they could not; for the sea grew more and more tempestuous against them. 14. Wherefore they cried unto the LORD, and said: 'We beseech Thee, O LORD, we beseech Thee, let us not perish for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent

א' v. 14. כצ"ל

8. tell us. Either the sailors were not prepared to condemn Jonah on the evidence of the lot alone, and sought a confession from him (cf. Josh. vii, 19); or, believing him guilty, they asked of what he was guilty.

occupation. What is the business that brings you on this ship? Note the excited crowding together of questions.

9. In the text, Jonah answers only the last question, and adds a statement of his religious faith. But, as is clear from the end of v. 10, he must have told them more than what is here reported.

Hebrew. The name by which the Israelites were known to foreigners (cf. Gen. xl. 15; Exod. ii, 7, iii, 18).

I fear the LORD. The English equivalent is, 'I worship the Lord.'

who hath made the sea. And therefore has sent this storm on my account.

10. exceedingly afraid. This fear was aroused by Jonah's description of God's might, which made them believe that He had sent the storm.

what is this that thou hast done? This is not a request for further information, but an exclamation of horror at his bold attempt to flee from the Presence of God (cf. Gen. iii, 8).

because he had told them. See on v. 3.

11-16. JONAH IS CAST INTO THE SEA

11. what shall we do? Either out of reverence for a man of God, or because Jonah, as the cause of the storm, was the one most likely to know the remedy, the sailors appealed to him for guidance. Throughout the incident the conduct of the heathen sailors is presented in a favourable light.

13. rowed hard. They were reluctant to sacrifice Jonah.

to bring it to the land. Ships in those days normally sailed close to the coast, and were therefore at most times within sight of land. Wade suggests that the sailors, having inferred that Jonah had sinned by fleeing from the Land of Israel, exerted themselves to take him back there and put him ashore, in the hope that this would meet God's demand.

14. unto the LORD. They prayed to the God of Israel, not because He was their God, but because He had sent the storm.

perish for this man's life. Do not condemn us if we are the cause of his death.

innocent blood. Not that they regarded Jonah as innocent, but they prayed that their action should not be accounted as wilful murder.

blood; for Thou, O LORD, hast done as it pleased Thee.' 15. So they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea; and the sea ceased from its raging. 16. Then the men feared the LORD exceedingly; and they offered a sacrifice unto the LORD, and made vows.

CHAPTER II

1. And the LORD prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah; and Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights. 2. Then Jonah prayed unto the LORD his God out of the fish's belly. 3. And he said: I called out of mine affliction Unto the LORD, and He answered me; Out of the belly of the nether-world cried I, And Thou heardest my voice. 4. For thou didst cast me into the depth, In the heart of the seas, And the flood was round about me; All Thy waves and Thy billows Passed over me.

Thou, O LORD, hast done. As evidenced by the lots which were cast.

16. feared the LORD. At this evidence of His power over Nature. The verb feared has the same meaning as in v. 9, 'worshipped.'

sacrifice . . . vows. They offered a sacrifice immediately, and made vows of further sacrifices when they returned to land. Rashi suggests that they vowed to become converted to the worship of Israel's God.

CHAPTER II

Jonah is swallowed up by a great fish and saved from drowning. He offers thanksgiving to God and is ejected on to dry land.

1-2. THE GREAT FISH

1. prepared. In the sense of 'had ready.' Jewish tradition relates that this fish was created in the six days of Creation and held in readiness for Jonah.

great fish. The author does not name the fish, and 'Jonah's whale' is a later gloss on the story. Both the sperm-whale and certain larger species of sharks would be capable of swallowing a man whole.

2. prayed. Already in the days of Ibn Ezra the view was held that the 'prayer' which follows is rather a psalm of thanksgiving for deliverance than an appeal for help; the past tenses in such phrases as He answered me, Thou heardest my voice, yet hast Thou brought up my life from the pit, were adduced in evidence for this view; and the suggestion was made that the 'prayer' was recited after Jonah had reached land. Ibn Ezra himself disputes this interpretation, and maintains that the verbs are to be understood as prophetic perfects, i.e. vivid anticipations of a future deliverance. Other Jewish commentators hold that Jonah already had sufficient cause for gratitude, in that he had escaped drowning and had survived for three days in the belly of the fish, and it is for this double deliverance that he gives thanks. The use of the verb prayed in connection with a hymn of thanksgiving is paralleled in Hannah's 'prayer' (1 Sam. ii, 1).

3-10. THE PSALM OF THANKSGIVING

There are many resemblances in thought and expression between Jonah's psalm and the Psalter; but it should not therefore be assumed that the Book of Psalms is being consciously quoted. 'The words of the Psalter are not exactly and literally quoted, but its idioms and phrases are freely wrought into the prayer, as if drawn from the well-stored memory of a pious Israelite, familiar with its contents and naturally giving vent to his feelings in the cherished forms' (Perowne).

3. For the first half of the verse, cf. Ps. cxx, 1. out of mine affliction. While in the midst of it, i.e. when in the sea.

nether-world. Hebrew Sheol, which is depicted as a devouring monster in Isa. v, 14. Ibn Ezra suggests that the word is used loosely for 'the depths of the sea.' Alternatively, the meaning might be that Jonah already considered himself numbered among the dead.

4. flood. lit. 'river,' but used to express the current or flowing of the sea (cf. Ps. xxiv, 2).

5. And I said: 'I am cast out
From before Thine eyes';

Yet I will look again
Toward Thy holy temple.

6. The waters compassed me about, even to the soul;

The deep was round about me;

The weeds were wrapped about my head.

7. I went down to the bottoms of the mountains;

The earth with her bars closed upon me for ever;

Yet hast Thou brought up my life from the pit,

O LORD my God.

8. When my soul fainted within me,

I remembered the LORD;

And my prayer came in unto Thee,

Into Thy holy temple.

9. They that regard lying vanities

Forsake their own mercy.

10. But I will sacrifice unto Thee

With the voice of thanksgiving;

That which I have vowed I will pay.

Salvation is of the LORD.

11. And the LORD spoke unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

1. And the word of the LORD came unto Jonah the second time, saying: 2. 'Arise, my prayer, etc. Cf. Ps. xviii, 7. The holy temple is probably heaven, as in Ps. xi, 4.

9. regard lying vanities. Cf. I hate them that regard lying vanities; but I trust in the LORD (Ps. xxxi, 7). They who trust in idols forsake and lose the one true source of help. Calvin, however, defined lying vanities as 'all inventions with which men deceive themselves.'

their own mercy. Or, 'lovingkindness,' i.e. God the Source of mercy and lovingkindness (cf. Ps. cxliv, 2), which speaks of God as my loving-kindness).

10. vowed. As thanksgiving for deliverance. salvation is of the LORD. Cf. Ps. iii, 9.

11. JONAH IS SAVED

The spirit of absolute submission to God's will which marks Jonah's psalm is in complete contrast with his earlier wilfulness. Now that he has learned his lesson, God's purpose is accomplished, and Jonah is restored to dry land, probably the coast of the Holy Land.

CHAPTER III

Jonah receives a second bidding from God and this time obeys it unquestioningly. The people of Nineveh accept the warning, repent sincerely and are forgiven.

1-4. JONAH PROCEEDS ON HIS MISSION

1. the second time. 'There is no reproach of the prophet's former disobedience, but simply the quiet reiteration of the command' (Bewer).

5. I said. viz. in my heart; I thought.

I will look again. His confidence sprang from his miraculous escape from drowning.

Thy holy temple. In Jerusalem, which was acknowledged as the true Sanctuary by the pious Israelites of the Northern Kingdom.

6. even to the soul. To the point of death (cf. Ps. lxix, 2).

the weeds. Being entangled in the weeds, he was in greater danger of drowning.

7. bottoms of the mountains. To the very foundations of the earth. It was believed that the earth rested on a subterranean ocean (cf. Ps. xxiv, 2) and the roots of the mountains went deep down to its foundations.

the earth with her bars. The gates of the earth (i.e. the land of the living) were barred against him, shutting him out into the unseen world. An alternative rendering is: 'into a land whose bars were closed about me for ever,' i.e. into the land of the dead. For the gates of the nether-world, cf. Isa. xxxviii, 10; Job xxxviii, 17.

the pit. Equals 'the grave' (cf. Ps. xxx, 10).

8. when my soul fainted. When in danger of drowning (cf. Ps. cxlii, 4, cxliii, 4).

I remembered. I prayed to God. This prayer of Jonah, when he was committed to the sea, is not recorded in the narrative. He had no doubt that his survival was in answer to his prayer.

go unto Nineveh, that great city, and make unto it the proclamation that I bid thee.' 3. So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the world of the LORD. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city, of three days' journey. 4. And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he proclaimed, and said: 'Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.' ¶ 5. And the people of Nineveh believed God; and they proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them. 6. And the tidings reached the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes. 7. And he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his nobles, saying: 'Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing; let them not feed, nor drink water; 8. but let them be covered with sackcloth, both man and beast, and let them cry mightily unto God; yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the three days' journey. The following verse shows that the phrase is a measure of diameter, not of circumference. Remains show that the historical Nineveh was much smaller; in fact, less than eight miles in circumference. It is suggested by those who defend the historicity of the narrative that the satellite towns of Nineveh, Rehoboth-ir, Calah and Resen (Gen. x, 11 f), are included in the measurement; and support for this view may be found in the circumstance that in Genesis the four towns together are called the great city. In the opinion of Ehrlich, the phrase signifies that it would take three days to traverse all its streets if they were connected in one line.

4. a day's journey. Bringing him to the inner and most densely populated quarter of the city. The promptitude of Jonah's action in entering without delay or enquiry or hesitation upon his difficult and dangerous task, and his boldness in standing in the heart of the city and denouncing it, should be noted.

yet forty days . . . overthrown. This one sentence may have been the whole of Jonah's preaching. 'To an oriental mind, the simple, oft-repeated announcement might be more startling than a laboured address' (Perowne). Overthrown is the same Hebrew verb, expressing complete destruction, used of the overthrow of Sodom (Gen. xix, 25).

5-9. THE GREAT REPENTANCE

5. people of Nineveh. Jonah himself would be heard by only a portion of the population, but his message was taken up and repeated rapidly until the whole people knew of it.

believed God. Believed the truth of the prophecy, and in so doing acknowledged their own sinfulness. The sudden and complete repentance of the Ninevites is in marked contrast with the unbelief and indifference with which the Israelites received the prophetic announcements, and is therefore elaborated at length.

fast . . . sackcloth . . . sat in ashes (v. 6). The forms of humiliation and grief common in the East.

7. proclaimed. The king's decree follows the spontaneous expression of remorse on the part of the people, and gives it royal authority.

beast. Probably beasts of burden (cf. 1 Kings xviii, 5). The practice of making animals join in mourning is not unusual. A parallel is found in the Apocryphal Book of Judith, iv, 10, and Herodotus reports it of the Persians. The reason is not that the animals, too, are in need of forgiveness, but that the withholding of food from beasts is an added grief and penance for their owners (Metzudath David).

taste. Referring to the men, while feed refers to the beasts.

8. cry mightily. This third injunction in the royal decree, summoning the people to prayer, obviously affected only human beings.

violence that is in their hands. 9. Who knoweth whether God will not turn and repent, and turn away from His fierce anger, that we perish not? ¶ 10. And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil, which He said He would do unto them; and He did it not.

CHAPTER IV

1. But it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was angry. 2. And he prayed unto the LORD, and said: 'I pray Thee, O LORD, was not this my saying, when I was yet in mine own country? Therefore I fled beforehand unto Tarshish; for I knew that Thou art a gracious God, and compassionate, long-suffering, and abundant in mercy, and repentest Thee of the evil. 3. Therefore now, O LORD, take, I beseech Thee, my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live.' 4. And the LORD said: 'Art thou greatly angry?' ¶ 5. Then Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see violence that is in their hands. The wrongful gains of violence, from which they must turn by making reparation (cf. Who store up violence and robbery in their palaces, Amos III, 10).

10. GOD FORGIVES

saw their works. 'It does not say, "God saw their sackcloth and fasting," but God saw their works' (Mishnah Taanith II, 1). Their repentance was sincere and inward, and is to be contrasted with the outward repentance of the Israelites which Isaiah condemned (LVIII, 3ff.).

God repented. 'God is not a man that He should repent; He cannot turn or be converted like a man. And yet He has His own Divine ways of both repenting and turning' (Horton).

CHAPTER IV

Jonah is vexed with the outcome of his mission and complains to God. He takes up abode on the east side of the city and is sheltered by a fast-growing plant, which is suddenly destroyed. Jonah grieves for it; and God convinces him, by analogy with his grief for the plant, that his vexation over the Ninevites having been saved is unjustified.

1-4. JONAH'S DISPLEASURE

1. displeased. Because the Ninevites had been saved. For other reasons which have been suggested, see on I, 3. Horton thinks that it was 'a patriotic indignation that Israel's foes should be spared.'

2. my saying. Not necessarily spoken; he may only have thought it. Jonah had understood from the first that his errand was a mission of mercy.

fled beforehand. Attempted to evade a second summons by flight.

a gracious God. The attributes enumerated in this verse are a selection from the 'thirteen attributes' in Exod. xxxiv, 6 f. The selection is identical with that in Joel II, 13.

3. better for me to die. His vexation was such that life was no longer desirable (cf. Moses' request in Num. XI, 15, and Elijah's in I Kings XIX, 4).

4. art thou greatly angry? Or, 'doest thou well to be angry?' (A.V., R.V.). It is 'the gentle question of suggested reproof' (Perowne). Jonah, not quite certain that he has good reason to be angry, does not answer.

5-11. THE OBJECT LESSON

5. went out. Ibn Ezra suggests that this verse describes what Jonah had done before the reversal of the decree and, according to this view, the translation should read, 'Now Jonah had gone out.' But there is no need to treat the verb as a pluperfect. While his reason told Jonah that the sincerity of the repentance of the Ninevites was such that the city would be spared, he was nevertheless reluctant to accept this conclusion, and waited in the vicinity of the city with the illogical hope that the blow might fall.

east side. Having traversed the city from west to east.

booth. A temporary shelter of branches and foliage.

what would become of the city. 6. And the LORD God prepared a gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his evil. So Jonah was exceeding glad because of the gourd. 7. But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd, that it withered. 8. And it came to pass, when the sun arose, that God prepared a vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and requested for himself that he might die, and said: 'It is better for me to die than to live.' 9. And God said to Jonah: 'Art thou greatly angry for the gourd?' And he said: 'I am greatly angry, even unto death.' 10. And the LORD said: 'Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for which thou has not laboured, neither madest it grow, which came up in a night, and perished in a night; 11. and should not I have pity on Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand, and also much cattle?'

MICAH VII, 18-20

18. Who is a God like unto Thee, that pardoneth the iniquity, And passeth by the transgression of the remnant of His heritage?

6. gourd. Many scholars have preferred the rendering 'castor-oil tree.' It has large leaves, supplying welcome shade, and it grows and withers rapidly. But, as Ibn Ezra remarked, one need not know of what species the plant was to understand the lesson.

a shadow over his head. The booth, being made of branches the leaves of which would soon wither, gave insufficient protection.

his evil. The discomfort of the sun's rays.

exceeding glad. Jonah's gladness over a matter of personal comfort is emphasized in contrast with his previous displeasure.

8. vehement. The exact meaning of the Hebrew adjective is doubtful. It is derived from a verb which means 'to be silent,' and Ibn Ezra suggests 'deafening,' while others have proposed 'still, sultry.'

east wind. The sirocco, a wind of oppressive heat and dust, aggravating the discomfort of a hot summer's day.

9. greatly angry. See on v. 4. Jonah was angry there because the city was not destroyed, and here because the plant was destroyed. This time, when he feels his anger to be justified, he answers God's question.

10. thou. The pronoun in the Hebrew is emphatic. So also I in v. 11.

A tender appeal to the God of mercy and forgiveness. The verses are also part of the prophetic reading on Sabbath Shubah.

CHAPTER XIV

1. Behold, a day of the LORD cometh, When thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle;
And the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled,

And the women ravished;
And half of the city shall go forth into captivity,

But the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3. Then shall the LORD go forth,
And fight against those nations,

CHAPTER XIV

For a brief description of the times and teachings of Zechariah, see the Introduction to the Haftarah for Sabbath Chanukah, p. 987. Chapter xiv, the last in the book of Zechariah, is an apocalyptic vision of the salvation of Jerusalem and judgment upon the heathen nations which had attacked her, a judgment effected by earthquake and plague, the manifestations of God's personal intervention. It will be a final judgment; the nations will be converted to the worship of the God of Israel, so that 'in that day shall the Lord be One, and His name One'; and Jerusalem, elevated into the religious centre of the world, will be a place of pilgrimage for all nations, who will assemble there each year to observe the Feast of Tabernacles.

* Additional Haftarah as referred to on title page.

As when He fighteth in the day of battle.

4. And His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives,
Which is before Jerusalem on the east,
And the mount of Olives shall be cleft in the midst thereof
Toward the east and toward the west;
So that there shall be a very great valley;
And half of the mountain shall remove toward the north,
And half of it toward the south.

5. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains;
For the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azel;
Yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake
In the days of Uzziah king of Judah;
And the LORD my God shall come,
And all the holy ones with Thee.

1-5. THE DELIVERANCE OF JERUSALEM

1. a day of the LORD cometh. When God will manifest Himself in judgment.

thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. The feminine pronouns clearly refer to Jerusalem. The spoil taken from the city by the enemy will be divided in the very heart of it, so secure will the enemy feel.

2. The capture of the city. The sufferings described were the usual fate of a conquered city in ancient times (cf. Isa. xiii, 15 f).

the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. The grim tale of woe is suddenly checked, for God is about to appear and turn defeat into victory.

3. as when He fighteth in the day of battle. In the view of the Targum and Rashi, an allusion to God's intervention on behalf of Israel at the Red Sea (cf. Exod. xiv, 25 ff, xv, 3 f).

4. The intervention of God is accompanied by a severe earthquake, which will change the contour of the land; the mountains will be split, and through the chasm thus formed the survivors will escape.

the mount of Olives. Which rises before Jerusalem on the east. It received its name from the numerous olive trees that once grew on its slopes.

shall be cleft. The mountains would be split across the middle into two sections, a northern and southern, to form a deep valley running east and west between the two sections as a passage of safety.

5. the valley of the mountains. That providentially opened up by God, thus explaining the literal sense of the text: the valley of My

the earthquake in the days of Uzziah. The only direct reference to this earthquake is found in Amos i, 1 (c. 750 B.C.E.), though Isa. vi, 4, is taken by some to be an allusion to it. Josephus gives a detailed account of the occasion. It occurred at the time when Uzziah went into the Temple to offer incense (II Chron. xxvi, 16 ff) in opposition to the priests. 'In the meantime,' writes Josephus, 'a great earthquake shook the land, and a rent was made in the Temple. . . . And before the city at a place called Eroge, half of the mountain broke off from the rest on the west, rolled itself four furlongs, and stood still at the east mountain' (Antiquities, IX, x, 4).

The LORD my God shall come, and all the holy ones with Thee. God, attended by His angels, will now enter Jerusalem and complete the defeat of His foes. The Jewish interpreters take with thee as referring to Jerusalem, to whom this prophecy is addressed (cf. v. 1), and give it the meaning 'for thy sake.'

6. there shall not be light, but heavy clouds and thick. The translation of the verse is uncertain. A. J. substantially follows Rashi, and seems to suggest that when God comes to execute judgment, the entire universe will be clothed in darkness; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine (Isa. xiii, 10). The imagery is common to other prophets. The context, however, rather suggests a promise of brightness and bliss (cf. next verse). The following rendering (of Heidenheim and Malbim, since followed by many) has much to commend it: 'There shall not be light, either the bright (light of the sun) or the

7. And there shall be one day
Which shall be known as the LORD'S,
Not day, and not night;
But it shall come to pass, that at evening time there shall be light.

8. And it shall come to pass in that day,
That living waters shall go out from Jerusalem:
Half of them toward the eastern sea,
And half of them toward the western sea;
In summer and in winter shall it be.

9. And the LORD shall be King over all the earth;
In that day shall the LORD be One, and His name one.

10. All the land shall be turned as the Arabah, from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem; and she shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's the corner gate, and from the tower of cold (light of the moon)'; for God's glory will illumine the world (cf. Isa. LX, 19). The Hebrew yekaroḥ, 'brightness,' denotes the light of the sun

(cf. Job xxxi, 26), and kippaon, 'frost,' the cold light of the moon.

7. there shall be one day. i.e. one continuous day. Ehrlich translates: 'it shall be a unique day.'

which shall be known as the LORD'S. Or, 'it is known to the Lord.' He alone knows when that day will dawn.

not day, and not night. That day will not be an ordinary day when light and darkness alternate, but wholly light, for at evening time there shall be light.

8. living waters shall go out from Jerusalem.
Jerusalem will be the source of perennial streams which will irrigate and fertilize the whole land.
Similarly, a fountain is spoken of in Joel iv, 18, as coming forth out of the house of God, and Ezekiel (XLVII, 12) pictures waters issuing from the Sanctuary which will transform the face of the land. The waters are described as living, i.e. flowing, as distinct from stagnant (cf. Gen. XXVI, 19; Lev. xiv, 5).

the eastern sea . . . the western sea. The Dead Sea and the Mediterranean respectively.

in summer and in winter shall it be. The living waters will be an unfailing source; they will not dry up in summer, as do most of the brooks in Palestine, or be frozen in winter.

9. in that day shall the LORD be One. Mono-theism will be universal. The Eternal God alone will be everywhere acknowledged and worshipped.

and His name one. His name, and His only, will be in the mouth of all (Rashi). The Talmud states: 'Not like this world is the world to come:
in this world the most holy name is written in one way (the Tetragrammaton) but is read in another (Adonay); but in the world to come, it is altogether one: as it is written, so will it be pronounced' (Pes. 50a).

10. all the land shall be turned as the Arabah.
'The whole earth will be changed to become like the Arabah. The mountains will be brought low and all the world become flat; Jerusalem will be a mountain, so that it can be seen high above everything' (Rashi). (cf. Isa. ii, 2; Mic. iv, 1). The Arabah is the flat Jordan valley, the deepest depression on the face of the earth.

miles north-east of Jerusalem, which marked the northernmost limit of the Kingdom of Judah;

Rimmon, no doubt the En-rimmon of Neh. xi, 29, was a town in the extreme south of the country, not far from Beer-sheba.

sunken plain.

presses.* A description of the limits of the city (cf. Jer. xxxi, 38). Unfortunately not one of the places mentioned can be identified with certainty.

11. no more extermination. The Hebrew word cherem is usually translated 'a curse' or 'ban.'
There shall be no more curse bringing destruction and exile. The Targum translates the word
'slaughter.'

12. And this shall be the plague wherewith the LORD will smite
All the peoples that have warred against Jerusalem:
Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet,
And their eyes shall consume away in their sockets,
And their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.
13. And it shall come to pass in that day,
That a great tumult from the LORD shall be among them;
And they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour,
And his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.
14. And Judah also shall fight against Jerusalem;
And the wealth of all the nations round about shall be gathered together,
Gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.
15. And so shall be the plague of the horse,
Of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass,
And of all the beasts that shall be in those camps, as this plague.
16. And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations that came against Jerusalem shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.
17. And it shall be, that whoso of the families of the earth goeth not up unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, upon them there shall be no rain.
18. And if the family of Egypt go not up,

13. a great tumult. In the panic and confusion, they will fall upon each other with the weapons intended for the Jews.

14. Judah also shall fight against Jerusalem. Judah, who was forcibly brought into the siege against Jerusalem, will now turn against the discomfited enemy. Against Jerusalem means against that half of the city in the hands of the enemy (cf. v. 2). But perhaps it is preferable to translate 'at Jerusalem'; so A.V. and R.V. margin. Better still, 'in the matter of,' i.e. for the sake of Jerusalem.

the wealth of all the nations. Abandoned in the confusion, it will be collected as spoil by Judah; thus, according to Rashi, fulfilling the promise made in v. 1.

15. The devastating plague, mentioned in v. 12, will fall also upon the beasts.

16. Those who survive of the nations will acknowledge God as the absolute Sovereign of the world, and will make annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem to worship Him.

the most important, was pre-eminently an occasion for thanksgiving for harvest and vintage; it was universal in character. The Jewish commentators consider that the victory spoken of in this chapter will be won on the Festival of Tabernacles, and consequently it will be celebrated by all the nations in commemoration of the glorious triumph.

17. 'A refusal to celebrate this festival would argue an ingratitude which could not be more appropriately punished than by withholding rain' (Mitchell).

there shall be no rain. The punishment would be felt almost at once, for the season of rain normally begins soon after the Festival of Tabernacles.

18. the family of Egypt. The threatened punishment would not affect Egypt, because its rainfall is negligible and the fertility of the land depends upon the annual inundation of the Nile.

they shall have no overflow. There will be no flooding of the Nile; hence Egypt, too, will be hit by drought like the other nations. It must be observed, however, that the word overflow is not in the Hebrew, and therefore some prefer the

In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses: HOLY UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the LORD's house shall be like the basins before the altar. 21. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holy unto the LORD of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and scethe therein; and in that day there shall be no more a trafficker in the house of the LORD of hosts.

rendering of R.V. margin: 'shall there not be upon them the plague?' etc. V. 19 must then be regarded as giving an emphatic answer to this question, and affirming that the plague would assuredly fall upon all transgressors without exception.

19. the punishment. lit. 'sin'; but the word often bears the meaning of the consequence or effect of sin, hence punishment (cf. Gen. iv, 13; Num. xxxii, 23).

20. upon the bells of the horses: HOLY UNTO THE LORD. Even the horses, hitherto looked upon with disfavour by the prophets, will be holy to God, and the bells, or tinkling ornaments, which adorn the horses will be inscribed with the same inscription as was on the High Priest's head-plate (cf. Exod. xxviii, 36). The horse is described as 'holy' because it brings a pilgrim to worship in the Temple.

the pots . . . like the basins before the altar. The pots, which were used for mean purposes, such as removing the ashes from the altar, and were of brass (Exod. xxvii, 3), will also be of gold, like the basins used for the reception of the sacrificial blood. The meaning might also be that the pots, normally used for cooking the consecrated flesh, will perforce be used as sprinkling bowls, so numerous will the sacrifices be. The consequent deficiency of cooking pots would be made up from the household pots of the city (cf. the next verse).

21. every pot . . . shall be holy. Every pot in Jerusalem will be 'holy', and so available for cooking the holy meat, since the pots belonging to the Temple will be inadequate on account of the multitudes bringing sacrifices.

there shall be no more a trafficker. The money-making merchant, who exploited the pilgrims to the Sanctuary with the sale of animals and vessels, will disappear from the Temple precincts. The Hebrew word for trafficker is 'Canaanite' (cf. Prov. xxxi, 24; Job xl, 30). The Canaanites, i.e. the people living along the coast of Palestine from Zidon in the north to Gaza in the south, were distinguished as traders, and as such showed no respect for the religious principles of the Jews (cf. Neh. xiii, 16 ff). Traffic in objects connected with the worship of God was considered unworthy of the golden age predicted by Zechariah.

2. And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon at the feast, in the month Ethanim, which is the seventh month. 3. And all the elders of Israel came, and the priests took up the ark. 4. And they brought up the ark of the LORD, and the tent of meeting, and all the holy vessels that were in the Tent; even these did the priests and the Levites bring up. 5. And king Solomon and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude. 6. And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto its place, into the Sanctuary of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubim. 7. For the cherubim spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubim covered the ark and the staves thereof above. 8. And the staves were so long that the ends of the staves were seen from the holy place, even before the Sanctuary; but they could not be seen without; and there they are unto this day. 9. There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone which Moses put there at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel when they came out of

THE DEDICATION OF THE TEMPLE

The consecration of Solomon's Temple was celebrated by festivities extending over fourteen days, of which the last seven were the days of Tabernacles; hence the choice of this passage.

2-11. THE TRANSPORTATION TO JERUSALEM OF THE ARK AND HOLY VESSELS

2. the feast. The feast of dedication began on the eighth day of the seventh month (see on v. 65 in the Haftorah for the Eighth Day). If, then, the feast refers to Tabernacles, as chag without further definition usually does, the phrase at the feast should be understood to mean 'at the approach of the feast.' But v. 65 suggests that in this case chag refers to the whole fourteen days of the feast of dedication.

Ethanim. The old Hebrew name of the seventh month, for which after the Exile the Babylonian name Tishri was substituted.

priests and the Levites. The former carried the Ark; the latter, the tent and holy vessels.

5. sacrificing. This was done during halts along the route of the procession, or at the last stage before the Ark was carried into the Temple. The former is more probable by reason of the vast number of animals sacrificed, and because it followed the precedent of David (cf. II Sam. vi, 13).

8. ends of the staves. They pressed against the veil which hung between the holy (hechal) and the most holy (debir) sections of the Temple.

the land of Egypt. 10. And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the LORD, 11. so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud; for the glory of the LORD filled the house of the LORD.

¶ 12. Then spoke Solomon:

The LORD hath said that He would dwell in the thick darkness.

13. I have surely built Thee a house of habitation,

A place for Thee to dwell in for ever.

14. And the king turned his face about, and blessed all the congregation of Israel; and all the congregation of Israel stood. 15. And he said: 'Blessed be the LORD, the God of Israel, who spoke with His mouth unto David my father, and hath with His hand fulfilled it, saying: 16. Since the day that I brought forth My people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build a house, that My name might be there; but I chose David to be over My people Israel. 17. Now it was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the LORD, the God of Israel. 18. But the LORD said unto David my father: Whereas it was in thy heart to build a house for My name, thou didst well that it was in thy heart; 19. nevertheless thou shalt not build the house; but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for My name. 20. And the LORD hath established His word that He spoke; for I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD, the God of Israel. 21. And there have I set a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, which He made with our fathers, when He brought them out of the land of Egypt.'

10. the cloud. Symbolizing the Divine glory (cf. v. 11), the Presence of God.

11. to minister. To offer sacrifices.

12–13. A short introductory poem to Solomon's prayer and thanksgiving.

12. then. When the cloud filled the holy place. said that He would dwell in the thick darkness. The reference is to Lev. xvi, 2, for I appear in the cloud upon the ark-cover.

13. a house of habitation. Modern commentators translate 'a house of elevation, exalted house,' zebul being connected with an Assyrian root.

14–21. Solomon blesses the people and gratefully reviews the origin of the Temple building.

14. turned his face about. Towards the people. The introductory poem in vs. 12 f was spoken while his face was turned towards the Temple.

CAP. XXXVIII. לח

18. And it shall come to pass in that day, when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that My fury shall arise up in My nostrils. 19. For in My jealousy and in the fire of My wrath have I spoken: Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel; 20. so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the ground, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at My presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground. 21. And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother. 22. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will cause to rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many peoples that are with him, an overflowing shower, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. 23. Thus will I magnify Myself, and sanctify Myself, and I will make Myself known in the eyes of many nations; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

'THE WAR OF GOG AND MAGOG'

This is a prophecy of Messianic days. Ezekiel foretells that the restoration of Israel to the land of his fathers will not pass unchallenged; formidable armies from the extreme north, under the leadership of Gog, will invade Israel, but the invasion will end in the utter destruction of Gog and his confederate forces. The identity of Gog is obscure, and he is probably to be understood as an apocalyptic figure, personifying the forces hostile to Israel, rather than as a particular person. Magog in Ezekiel is the country of Gog. But in Rabbinic literature, Magog becomes his inseparable partner, and the 'war of Gog and Magog' is the great Armageddon which will immediately precede the Messianic age. An old tradition to the effect that this war would be waged during Tabernacles determined the choice of this passage as the Haftorah for the Intermediate Sabbath.

CAP. XXXIX. למ

1. And thou, son of man, prophesy against Gog, and say: Thus saith the Lord GOD: Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, chief prince of Meshech and Tubal; 2. and I will turn thee about and lead thee on, and will cause thee to come up from the uttermost parts of the north; and I will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel; 3. and I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand. 4. Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the peoples that are with thee; I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort and to the beasts of the field, to be devoured. 5. Thou shalt fall upon the open field; for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD. 6. And I will send a fire on Magog, and on them that dwell safely in the isles; and they shall know that I am the LORD. 7. And My holy name will I make known in the midst of My people Israel; neither will I suffer My holy name to be profaned any more; and the nations shall know that I am the LORD, the Holy One in Israel. 8. Behold, it cometh, and it shall be done, saith the Lord GOD; this is the day whereof I have spoken. 9. And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall make fires of the weapons and use them as fuel, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the handstaves, and the spears, and they shall make fires of them seven years; 10. so that they shall take no wood

CHAPTER XXXIX

1-10. THE ANNIHILATION OF GOG

The prophet proceeds to give a more detailed and vivid account of the disaster which is to befall Gog's armies. So vast will be the multitudes of the enemy that the wood from his weapons will serve the Israelites as fuel for seven years, and it will take them seven months to bury his dead.

2. I will turn thee about. i.e. God will cause him to be diverted from the goal at which he is aiming.

lead thee on. The Hebrew verb is otherwise unknown.

I will bring thee. 'How can it be just that God should himself lead the barbarians to a crime for which He destroys them? To the Hebrews, God is the ultimate cause of all things; if the savage comes, God must have brought him; if he is destroyed, God must have planned to destroy him' (Lofthouse). Though the purpose of Gog's campaign is said to be lust for destruction and spoil, it is an act designed in God's wisdom to bring mankind to the realization that He is King of the universe.

upon the mountains of Israel. Cf. xxxviii, 21.

'Most invaders would be content with ravaging the plains; this horde leaves no hilly spot untouched' (Lofthouse).

3. I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand. The skill in archery which distinguished the foe would be of no avail with God as Israel's ally.

6. on Magog, etc. Not only will the invaders be slain in the Land of Israel, but the countries from which they came will also suffer at God's hand.

7. neither will I suffer My holy name to be profaned any more. The dispersion of Israel and his subsequent sufferings led to the profanation of God's holy name, because they were interpreted by heathen nations as due to His inability to protect His people.

the Holy One in Israel. That the Divine Presence abides in the midst of Israel will then become evident to those nations who had placed so false a construction upon His people's exile.

8. it cometh, and it shall be done. i.e. the catastrophe upon Gog is so certain that it is as good as accomplished.

9. shall go forth. The inhabitants of the Land of Israel, who hitherto had not left their homes to meet Gog in battle, will now come out to gather out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests, for they shall make fires of the weapons; and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God. 11. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place fit for burial in Israel, the valley of them that pass through on the east of the sea; and it shall stop them that pass through; and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude; and they shall call it The Valley of ¹ Hamon-gog. 12. And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying them, that they may cleanse the land. 13. Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them, and it shall be to them a renown; in the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God. 14. And they shall set apart men of continual employment, that shall pass through the land to bury with them that pass through those that remain upon the face of the land, to cleanse it; after the end of seven months shall they search. 15. And when they that pass through shall pass through the land, and any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the wooden parts of the weapons for fuel. It is to be noted that in the state of security assured by God, the weapons themselves serve no useful purpose, and are not gathered and stored for a future war.

seven years. So great will the quantity be, that it will suffice for seven years.

10. they shall take no wood out of the field. They will have no need to fetch wood from the field or forest during the seven years.

11-16. BURIAL OF THE SLAIN AND CLEANSING OF THE LAND

the valley of them that pass through. i.e. the valley through which one passes to (there is nothing corresponding to on in the text) the east of the sea, viz. the Dead Sea. An alternative explanation given by Davidson is: 'The expression is probably a proper name; the "valley of the passers through" may have been so named as the usual route of communication between the east and west of the sea.'

it shall stop them that pass through. The valley where the slain are to be buried is the thoroughfare for traffic between east and west, but it will be blocked by the multitude of dead bodies

12. shall the house of Israel be burying them. An unburied corpse is a reproach to God and causes defilement of the land (cf. Deut. xxi, 23). Therefore Israel will have to bury the slain to cleanse the land. There will be so many that the task will last seven months.

13. and it shall be to them a renown. The renown will be due to the vast number of slain, as proved by the time the burial took (Metzudath David).

14. they shall set apart men of continual employment. After seven months, during which the corpses found will have been buried, men are to be appointed to do nothing else but search throughout the land for any body or bones which were not detected.

to bury with them that pass through. The appointed men will bury the remains they find with the assistance of passers-by. What is meant by this phrase is explained in the next verse.

shall they search. i.e. begin the task of searching.

15. when they that pass through shall pass through the land. This refers to wayfarers, who, if they saw a human bone, would mark the spot by a sign, so that the employed men might notice it and remove it for burial in the valley of Hamon-gog.

the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog. 16. And Hamonah shall also be the name of a city. Thus shall they cleanse the land.

עצם אדם ובנה אצלו ציון עד קברי אתו המקברים

16 אל-גיא המון גוג: וגם שם-עיר המונה וטהרו הארץ:

16. Hamonah shall also be the name of a city. 'A city shall also be built in commemoration of Gog's overthrow; naturally the city must be supposed situated near the valley of Hamon-gog, because its name Hamonah (multitude), if the city were situated elsewhere, would not of itself suggest any connection with Gog' (Davidson).

thus shall they cleanse the land. This concluding clause provides the reason for the great care taken to remove the corpses and name the city after the vast burial-place. The city would help to cleanse the land, because it would serve as a reminder to keep away from the defiled area.

On the second day of Tabernacles, the first section of the chapter describing the dedication of the Temple was chosen as the Haftorah; this day the last section of the same chapter is the prophetic reading. There is, moreover, a specific reference to the 'eighth day' in v. 66. Solomon's blessing makes an appropriate prayer with which to take leave of the holy days of this season.

the LORD, He is God; there is none else. 61. Let your heart therefore be whole with the LORD our God, to walk in His statutes, and to keep His commandments, as at this day.' 62. And the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the LORD. 63. And Solomon offered for the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which He offered unto the LORD, two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the LORD. 64. The same day did the king hallow the middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD; for there he offered the burnt-offering, and the meal-offering, and the fat of the peace-offerings; because the brazen altar that was before the LORD was too little to receive the burnt-offering, and the meal-offering, and the fat of the peace-offerings. ¶ 65. So Solomon held the feast at that time, and all Israel with him, a great congregation, from the entrance of Hamath unto the Brook of Egypt, before the LORD our God, seven days and seven days, even fourteen days. 66. On the eighth day he sent the people away, and they blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the LORD had shown unto David His servant, and to Israel His people.

CHAPTER I

CAP. I. א

1. Now it came to pass after the death of Moses the servant of the LORD, that the LORD spoke unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying: 2. 'Moses My servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. 3. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, to you have I given it, as I spoke unto Moses. 4. From the wilderness, and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the Great Sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your border.

In the matter of study, it is the Jewish custom to make a fresh beginning immediately after a conclusion has been reached. Having completed this day the annual cycle of Torah readings, we proceed at once to recite the first section of Genesis; and the Haftorah takes us to that chapter of the prophetic books which comes directly after the Pentateuch. There is, too, a close connection in subject matter. The Torah concludes with the death of Moses; the Haftorah tells of God's charge to his successor, Joshua.

GOD'S CHARGE TO JOSHUA

1-9. JOSHUA APPOINTED MOSES' SUCCESSOR

1. the death of Moses. According to tradition, he died on the seventh of Adar, the twelfth month of the Jewish year.

the servant of the LORD. This is the highest title man is able to achieve. Moses is so designated in several passages (cf. Exod. xiv, 31; Num. xii, 7, etc.). Kimchi observes: This title was conferred upon those who dedicated all their actions, even those of a worldly nature, to the service of God. Abraham, David and the prophets were also called His servants.

Moses' minister. Cf. Exod. xxiv, 13; Num. xi, 28. Immediately after the exodus we find him acting as Moses' lieutenant and apparently the military leader of the people (Exod. xvii, 9). He was Moses' obvious successor, and was so designated during his lifetime (Num. xxvii, 18; Deut. i, 38). It is interesting to observe that Moses was not succeeded by one of his sons: they did not deserve it, and leadership is not hereditary, although the priesthood was.

* Additional Haftorah as referred to on title page.

2. is dead. He died in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor, facing Jericho, on the east side of the Jordan (Deut. xxxiv, 1, 6). From there the crossing had to be made. Since he is dead, now therefore arise, go over this Jordan. It having been decreed that he was not to enter the land, the crossing had to be deferred until after his death.

all this people. The new generation, which had been less than 20 years old at the time of the exodus.

3. every place, etc. A reaffirmation of the promise in Deut. xi, 24.

that the sole of your foot shall tread upon. A figure of speech meaning that He would give them the strength to conquer (Kimchi). In actual fact, the land had to be won by hard fighting.

4. the wilderness. Of Zin (Kadesh) at the south-east corner of Canaan.

this Lebanon. This fixed the northern boundary. It is a mountain range, so called from its snow-capped peaks (Hebrew laban, 'white'). From where the people stood it was visible in the distance; hence this Lebanon.

the river Euphrates. The ideal and furthestmost eastern boundary. It was reached in the days of Solomon (1 Kings v, 1).

all the land of the Hittites. The Hittites are the only tribe mentioned, as the most powerful and therefore the representative of all the seven tribes. The territory which they occupied in Canaan was only a small portion of a great empire.

the Great Sea. The Mediterranean, the western boundary.

shall be your border. In the future. So vast a territory far exceeded their needs at the time. This verse is a repetition of the promises made to Abraham (Gen. xv, 18) and Moses (Exod. xxiii, 31; Deut. xi, 24).

5. There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life; as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

6. Be strong and of good courage; for thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land which I swore unto their fathers to give them. 7. Only be strong and very courageous, to observe to do according to all the law, which Moses My servant commanded thee; turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest have good success whithersoever thou goest. 8. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy ways prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success. 9. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed; for the LORD thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest. ¶ 10. Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, saying: 11. 'Pass through the midst of the camp, and command the people, saying: Prepare you victuals; for within three days ye are to fail thee. The root-rafah means 'to be weak,' and the verb may be rendered here: 'I will not weaken thee,' or 'allow thee to become weak.' Elijah of Wilna comments: I will not fail thee in the war, nor forsake thee after the war.

5. as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. Both were charged with a tremendous task, for which Divine aid was imperative. Each received the assurance of this help at the outset of his labours (cf. Exod. iii, 12) and subsequently (cf. iii, 7). Moses had given the same assurance to Joshua personally and to the people collectively (Deut. xxxi, 6-8).

6. be strong and of good courage. Do not think that My promises mean that the land will fall into your hands like ripe fruit. A strenuous campaign will be necessary, which will demand all your strength and fortitude.

7. very courageous. The exhortation here is stronger and more urgent than in the preceding verse. To remain faithful to God's moral law would require even greater strength of character and steadfastness of purpose than the military operations of conquest.

to observe, etc. Israel's possession of the land will depend on his observance of God's law.

that thou mayest have good success (taskil). Better as R.V. margin, 'deal wisely,' connected with sechel, 'understanding.'

8. shall not depart out of thy mouth. R. Samuel b. Nachmani said in R. Jonathan's name: This is neither a duty nor a command, but a blessing. The Holy One, blessed be He, saw that he treasured the Torah exceedingly . . . wherefore He assured him: Joshua, since thou lovest the Torah so dearly, This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, i.e. thou wilt never forget it (Men. 99b).

thou shalt meditate therein day and night. The warrior must also be a student of God's word if the lofty character of his task is to be preserved. Otherwise the campaign would lack moral sanction and degenerate into naked aggression.

thou shalt make thy ways prosperous. This indicates that success depended upon himself. He could ensure it by faithful adherence to the Torah (Kimchi).

9. have not I commanded thee? On an earlier occasion recorded in Deut. xxxi, 23.

10-11. THE OFFICERS GIVEN ORDERS

11. command the people . . . within three days. Ralbag argues that the order was not given then, but after the two spies had set out, since they spent their first night in Jericho and then hid three nights in the hill-country. When they returned, the people stayed one night where they were and the next night by the Jordan, and only on the following day did they cross over.

pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land, which the LORD your God giveth you to possess it.' ¶ 12. And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh, spoke Joshua, saying: 13. 'Remember the word which Moses the servant of the LORD commanded you, saying: The LORD your God giveth you rest, and will give you this land. 14. Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, shall abide in the land which Moses gave you beyond the Jordan; but ye shall pass over before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valour, and shall help them; 15. until the LORD have given your brethren rest, as unto you, and they also have possessed the land which the LORD your God giveth them; then ye shall return unto the land of your possession, and possess it, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave you beyond the Jordan toward the sunrising.' ¶ 16. And they answered Joshua, saying: 'All that thou hast commanded us we will do, and whithersoever thou sendest us we will go. 17. According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee; only the LORD thy God be with thee, as He was with Moses. 18. Who-soever he be that shall rebel against thy commandment, and shall not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death; only be strong and of good courage.'

beyond the Jordan. Actually it was the same side of the Jordan where they were, since they had not yet passed over. But it is written from the standpoint of western Palestine, which was always in the consciousness of Biblical writers as the territory of their home (cf. Deut. i, 1). In v, 1, it is used of western Palestine, but there westward is added. An exception occurs in ix, 1.

all the mighty men of valour. Some must have been left to guard the women and children. Perhaps the defeat of Sihon and Og, in whose land these two and a half tribes settled, was so complete (cf. Num. xxi, 21 ff) that now the old men and those under 20 sufficed for protection.

17. according as we hearkened unto Moses in all things. In spite of the people's frequent murmurings against Moses and Aaron, on the whole their authority had been unquestioned. There were, nevertheless, exceptions, as in the revolt of Korah and his associates (Num. xvi).

18. he shall be put to death. A harsh decree, but necessary in the critical circumstances.

Zechariah was one of the exiles who returned from Babylon when Cyrus promulgated his decree of Restoration in the year 537. He began his prophecies about 17 years afterwards. Disastrous seasons and the hostility of neighbours had discouraged the people, and all operations in connection with rebuilding the Temple had long ceased.

At this juncture the Prophet Zechariah appears, rouses the people from their despondency and assures them of the Divine assistance in their work of rebuilding the Temple and of national rehabilitation. 'Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the LORD of hosts' is his message. These words of Zechariah may be said to proclaim the lesson of all Jewish history; it is certainly the Prophetic teaching of the Maccabean Festival, with which his name is linked in the Synagogue service. Even a brief résumé of Maccabean events (such as is given at the end of the second Haftorah for Chanukah, p. 995-6) will show the appropriateness of these chapters for the anniversary of the re-dedication of the Temple after its defilement by the Syrians.

14. I will dwell in the midst of thee. Through the visible symbol of the restored Temple.

17. be silent. All hostile efforts—now on the part of the Samaritans and other opponents, and later any human opposition to God's ultimate purpose—shall fail.

CHAPTER III

Zechariah's messages are chiefly conveyed by means of visions. The object of these visions, so dramatically described in the remainder of the Haftorah, is to banish the disturbing fears which were depressing the people.

1. Joshua. The first high priest after the Restoration. He was prominently associated with Zerubbabel, the then Governor of Judah, in the erection of the Second Temple. Zerubbabel was the grandson of Jehoiachin, the last independent king of Judah.

Satan. One who opposes with false accusations. Satan accuses Joshua and the people of sinfulness, and that they are, therefore, unworthy to rebuild the Temple. Perhaps a similar feeling, arising out of their disappointments, depressed the people. But Satan is rebuked; and the returned exiles assured that their fears are groundless.

2. a brand plucked out of the fire. Something precious (in this case, the Returned Remnant of Israel) snatched from destruction.

3. filthy garments. Symbolizing the iniquities of the people that retard the completeness of the Redemption.

that stood before him, saying: 'Take the filthy garments from off him.' And unto him he said: 'Behold, I cause thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with robes.' 5. And I said: 'Let them set a fair mitre upon his head.' So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments; and the angel of the LORD stood by. 6. And the angel of the LORD forewarned Joshua, saying: 7. 'Thus saith the LORD of hosts: If thou wilt walk in My ways, and if thou wilt keep My charge, and wilt also judge My house, and wilt also keep My courts, then I will give thee free access among these that stand by. 8. Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou and thy fellows that sit before thee; for they are men that are a sign; for, behold, I will bring forth My servant the Shoot. 9. For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone are seven facets; behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts: And I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. 10. In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig-tree.'

The same commentator quotes the interesting opinion of his father that in the number 'seven' we may see a reference to the seven great leaders of the period, to whom the Jewish rebirth was due: Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zerubbabel, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi.

CAP. IV. ד

1. And the angel that spoke with me returned, and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep. 2. And he said unto me: 'What seest thou?' And I said: 'I have seen, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and its seven lamps thereon; there are seven pipes, yea, seven, to the lamps, which are upon the top thereof; 3. and two olive-trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.' 4. And I answered and spoke to the angel that spoke with me, saying: 'What are these, my lord?' 5. Then the angel that spoke with me answered and said unto me: 'Knowest thou not what these are?' And I said: 'No, my lord.' 6. Then he answered and spoke unto me, saying: 'This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying: Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the LORD of hosts. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain before Zerubbabel? thou shalt become a plain; and he shall bring forth the top stone with shoutings of Grace, grace, unto it.'

In the plain of the Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay ground between Succoth and Zarethan. 47. And Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many; the weight of the brass could not be found out. 48. And Solomon made all the vessels that were in the house of the LORD: the golden altar, and the table whereupon the showbread was, of gold; 49. and the candlesticks, five on the right side, and five on the left, before the Appropriately to Chanukah, the Festival of the Re-dedication of the Second Temple, this section contains a description of the appurtenances for the First Temple; also (v. 48-50) of the golden utensils for the interior of the House made under Solomon's supervision, and the consecrated gifts bequeathed by his father David (v. 50).

It was richly decorated, and was supported on the backs of twelve brazen oxen, three looking towards each of the cardinal points of the compass. See v. 23-26 of this chapter.

47. The amount of brass used was so great that no attempt was made to keep an account of it.

48. the golden altar. The altar of incense.

49. the flowers. The flower-like ornaments of the candlesticks.

To appreciate the significance of the Temple in the life of ancient Israel, we must continue reading the next chapter of the First Book of Sanctuary, of pure gold; and the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs, of gold; 50. and the cups, and the snuffers, and the basins, and the pans, and the fire-pans, of pure gold; and the hinges, both for the doors of the inner house, the most holy place, and for the doors of the house, that is, of the temple, of gold.

Kings, Solomon's Prayer of Dedication (set aside as the Haftorah for the first and eighth days of Tabernacles); or, better still, during Chanukah, the story of the Re-dedication of the Temple as told in the First Book of Maccabees. There is nothing finer in the whole history of heroism, or more soul-stirring in the annals of religion, than the account of this handful of Jewish warriors who were 'prepared to live or die nobly' in order that the light of revealed truth and righteousness be not extinguished in a heathen world. The following is a selection from the first four chapters of 1 Maccabees:—

'And King Antiochus wrote to his whole kingdom, that all should be one people, and that each should forsake his own laws. And he sent letters unto Jerusalem and the cities of Judah that they should profane the Sabbaths and feasts, pollute the sanctuary, and build altars and temples and shrines for idols; and whosoever shall not do according to the word of the King, he shall die. And he appointed overseers over all the people, and he commanded the cities of Judah to sacrifice, city by city. And they did evil things in the land; and they made Israel to hide themselves in every place of refuge which they had. And they rent in pieces the Books of the Law which they found, and set them on fire. And whosoever was found with any Book of the Covenant, and if any consented to the Law, the king's sentence delivered him to death.

'And in those days rose up Mattathias, a priest from Jerusalem; and he dwelt at Modin. And he had five sons, John, Simon, Judah (who was called Maccabæus), Eleazar, Jonathan. And he saw the blasphemies that were committed in Judah and in Jerusalem, and Mattathias and his sons rent their clothes, and put on sackcloth, and mourned exceedingly.

'And the king's officers, that were enforcing the apostasy, came into the city Modin. And many of Israel came unto them, and Mattathias and his sons were gathered together. And the king's officers spake to Mattathias, saying, "Thou art a ruler and an honourable and great man in this city, and strengthened with sons and brethren; now therefore come thou first and do the commandment of the king, as all nations have done, and the men of Judah, and they that remain in Jerusalem; so shalt thou and thy house be in the number of the king's friends, and thou and thy children shall be honoured with silver and gold, and many rewards." And Mattathias answered and said with a loud voice, "Though all the nations that are under the king's dominion obey him, and fall away every one from the religion of their fathers, yet will I and my sons and my brethren walk in the covenant of our fathers." And Mattathias cried out in the city with a loud voice, saying, "Whosoever is zealous for the Law, and maintaineth the Covenant, let him follow me."

'Then were gathered together unto them every one that offered himself willingly for the Law. And all they that fled from the evils were added to them, and became a stay unto them. And they mustered a host, and pulled down the altars; and they pursued after the sons of pride, neither suffered they the sinner to triumph.'

'And the days of Mattathias drew near that he should die, and his son Judah rose up in his stead. And all his brethren helped him, and they fought with gladness the battle of Israel. King Antiochus sent forty thousand footmen, and seven thousand horse, to go into the land of Judaea, and to destroy it. And Judah, who was called Maccabæus, said, "Victory in battle standeth not in the multitude of a host, but strength is from Heaven. They come unto us in fulness of insolence and lawlessness, to destroy us and our wives and children: but we fight for our lives and our Law. It is better for us to die in battle, than to look upon the evils of our nation and the Sanctuary. Nevertheless, as may be the will in Heaven, so shall He do." And they that were with Judah joined battle, and the heathens were discomfited when they saw the boldness of them that were with Judah, and how they were ready either to live or die nobly. And Judah and his brethren said, "Behold, our enemies are discomfited, let us go up to cleanse the Sanctuary, and to dedicate it afresh." And they built a new altar after the fashion of the former; and they built the Sanctuary and the inner parts of the House. And they made the holy vessels new, and they brought the candlestick, and the altar, and the table, into the Temple. On the five and twentieth day of the ninth month, which is the month Kislev, at what time and on what day the heathens had profaned it, even on that day was it dedicated afresh. And all the people fell upon their faces, and worshipped and gave praise unto Heaven.'

The historical background of the Haftorah is of deep interest. In its opening sentences, it gives us the concluding scenes of the only revolution in the history of the kingdom of Judah during the 347 years of its existence. And that revolution was directed against a foreign princess who had attempted to exterminate the native dynasty of the House of David.

Athaliah, daughter of Ahab, king of Israel, had married Jehoram, king of Judah, and had used her influence to foster the worship of Baal in Judah. On the death of her husband, she was the queen-mother—a position which carried great power with it. But when her son died at the hands of Jehu, she would have had to yield her position to her son's widow; and, therefore, this true daughter of Jezebel proceeded to murder all her grandchildren, and to ascend the throne of Judah herself. Only one little grandson was saved, the infant Jehoash, or Joash, who was concealed by an aunt, married to Jehoiada the High Priest. For six years Athaliah, that inhuman woman, usurped the throne in Jerusalem. In the seventh year, the High Priest Jehoiada brought forward young Joash from his hiding place, and the royal bodyguard and the representatives of the nation greeted the legitimate ruler with wild enthusiasm. He was crowned in the Temple, and Athaliah met the retribution she deserved.

renewal of the covenant was a fitting sequel to the end of the unholy reign of Athaliah, and her Phœnician idolatry.

Jehoiada. True type of High Priest and religious leader, whose advice and guidance during his life-time were followed by king Jehoash with blessed results to the nation.

18. all the people of the land. This cannot mean a mob of country-folk; for how could such a mob have become entrenched within the Temple citadel, without the knowledge of a vigorous ruler like Athaliah? Neither can it mean the city rabble; otherwise v. 20 ('and the city was quiet') would be meaningless. Besides, the city rabble would be spoken of as anshey ha-ir. All difficulties disappear if we follow Justice Sulzberger's explanation (see p. 80) of am ha-aretz as the National Council. Jehoiada had won over the members of that body as well as the military chiefs, before he attempted the overthrow of Athaliah. The Am ha-aretz made and unmade kings; see II Kings xxi, 24; xxiii, 30. In the light of the above, the beginning of the verse should read, And the whole National Council went to the house of Baal, etc.

and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of the LORD, and came by the way of the gate of the guard unto the king's house. And he sat on the throne of the kings. 20. So all the people of the land rejoiced, and the city was quiet; and they slew Athaliah with the sword at the king's house.

CHAPTER XII¹

In the seventh year of Jehu began Jehoash to reign; and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem; and his mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-Sheba. 3. And Jehoash did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD all his days wherein Jehoiada the priest instructed him. 4. Howbeit the high places were not taken away; the people still sacrificed and offered in the high places. ¶ 5. And Jehoash said to the priests: 'All the money of the hallowed things that is brought into the house of the LORD, in current money, the money of the persons for whom each man is rated, all the money that it cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD, 6. let the priests take it to them, every man from him that bestoweth it upon him; and they shall repair the breaches of the house, whereso-people of the land. As in the preceding verse; Jehoiada and the National Council, accompanied by the soldiery, brought the King to the Palace and there enthroned him.

20. the city was quiet. The National Council rejoiced over the success of their revolution, and, when the proceedings became known, the bulk of the population remained quiet. Evidently Athaliah, the foreign murderess, was not beloved in Jerusalem.

5-17. REPAIR OF THE TEMPLE

The Additional Portion for Sabbath Shekalim, Exod. xxx, 11-16, is a reminder of the half-shekel given by each individual to the services of the Tabernacle. Similarly, in the Haftorah the people bring their offerings in money to repair the breaches in the Temple. Although the Temple is no more, this special Sabbath continues to stress the thought that each member of the community is under the obligation to give his measure of support to the stability of the Tabernacle and the perpetuation of his Religion.

ever any breach shall be found.' 7. But it was so, that in the three and twentieth year of king Jehoash the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house. 8. Then king Jehoash called for Jehoiada the priest, and for the other priests, and said unto them: 'Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore take no longer money from them that bestow it upon you, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.' 9. And the priests consented that they should take no longer money from the people, neither repair the breaches of the house. ¶ 10. And Jehoiada the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD; and the priests that kept the threshold put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD. 11. And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe and the high priest came up, and they put up in bags and counted the money that was found in the house of the LORD. 12. And they gave the money that was weighed out into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD; and they paid it out to the carpenters and the builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD, 13. and to the masons and the hewers of stone, and for buying timber and hewn stone to repair the breaches of the house of the LORD, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it. 14. But there were not made for the house of the LORD cups of silver, snuffers, basins, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money

7-9. The arrangement did not work well. Not unnaturally. The priests were deflected from their rightful work, and sent out as tax-collectors to gather in the money; see II Chron. xxiv, 5; 'And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them: Go out unto the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter.'

8. why repair ye not. The priests were waiting until a sufficient sum had accumulated to take the repairs in hand. The King had unworthy suspicions of them, and introduced a new system (Kimchi).

9. the priests consented. They were pleased to be relieved of a responsibility which should not have been imposed on them (Ralbag).

12. that did the work. The headmen, or the master workmen, responsible for the work.

14. but there were not made . . . cups of silver. At the time when the repairs were in hand, and when it did not seem that there would be sufficient money for the renewal of the sacred vessels. Subsequently, when the repairs were finished, there was found to be a surplus, which, according to II Chron. xxiv, 14, was used for supplying new vessels for the Temple service (Kimchi).

that was brought into the house of the LORD; 15. for they gave that to them that did the work, and repaired therewith the house of the LORD. 16. Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to give to them that did the work; for they dealt faithfully. 17. The forfeit money, and the sin money, was not brought into the house of the LORD; it was the priests'.

CHAPTER XV

CAP. XV. טו

1. And Samuel said unto Saul: 'The LORD sent me to anoint thee to be king over His people, over Israel; now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the

The Additional Reading recalls how Amalek ruthlessly attacked the defenceless and the weak of the Israelites in the wilderness, 'and he feared not God.' The Amalekites showed their implacable enmity not only at Rephidim; they also opposed Israel's entrance into the Holy Land. It was an hereditary hatred; they were the allies of the Midianites when these harried the Israelites in the days of the Judges. The feud between the tribes of Israel and this untamable race of savages was thus of long duration. The command for exterminating them, with which the Haftorah opens, may have been given in consequence of their raids having become more numerous and sanguinary under their present king; v. 33. It was clear to Samuel that the struggle with these ancient and ever-hostile opponents was a matter of life and death to Israel.

The moral difficulty in connection with this command is very real. It seems to be in violent contrast to the Divine law which forbids vengeance, private vengeance. However, the truest mercy sometimes lies in the dispensation of sternest justice, and Israel here was the instrument of Divine Retribution.

Sabbath Zachor precedes the Festival of Purim, the story of which is recorded in the Book of Esther. Haman, the arch-enemy of the Jews, was deemed to be a descendant of the Amalekite king in the Haftorah. Sabbath Zachor reminds us of their inhumanity. Its charge to the generations in Israel is to blot out from the human heart the cruel Amalek spirit.

1. to be king over His people. Not thy (Saul's) people. God's people, to be ruled according to the Divine Word and Will.

LORD. 12. Thus saith the LORD of hosts: I remember that which Amalek did to Israel, how he set himself against him in the way, when he came up out of Egypt. 3. Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.' ¶ 4. And Saul summoned the people, and numbered them in Telaim, two hundred thousand footmen, and ten thousand men of Judah. 5. And Saul came to the city of Amalek, and lay in wait in the valley. 6. And Saul said unto the Kenites: 'Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them; for ye showed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt.' So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites. 7. And Saul smote the Amalekites, from Havilah as thou goest to Shur, that is in front of Egypt. 8. And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword. 9. But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, even the young of the second birth, and the lambs, and all that was good and would not utterly destroy them; but everything that was of no account and feeble, that they destroyed utterly. ¶ 10. Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, saying: 11. 'It repenteth Me that I have set up Saul to be king; for he is turned back from following Me, and hath not performed My commandments.' And it grieved Samuel; and he cried unto the LORD all night. 12. And Samuel rose early

3. utterly destroy. lit. 'ban' or 'devote'. They were not to be taken as spoil. The Israelites were to derive no material profit from this punitive war.

4. in Telaim. Probably Telem (Josh. xv, 24), a place in southern Judah.

6. the Kenites. A tribe to which Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, belonged. Some of them dwelt among the Amalekites, South of Judah.

7. Havilah. The Eastern boundary of the district in northern Arabia inhabited by the Amalekites.

Shur. The western part of the desert, bordering on Egypt.

8. all the people. i.e. all that fell into his hands. Some bands survived and carried on guerilla warfare against the Israelites; but from this time they ceased to be formidable.

9. spared Agag. Saul did so, perhaps from a fellow-feeling with a king; cf. 1 Kings xx. 32. the best of the sheep. Apparently to derive material profit from a campaign that was to be undertaken only to serve higher ends.

11. it repenteth Me. An expression signifying an apparent change in the Divine attitude towards people, brought about by a change in their character and conduct.

it grieved Samuel. For Saul, concerning whom he had held such high hopes.

to meet Saul in the morning; and it was told Samuel, saying: 'Saul came to Carmel, and, behold, he is setting him up a monument, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.' 13. And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul said unto him: 'Blessed be thou of the LORD; I have performed the commandment of the LORD.' 14. And Samuel said: 'What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?' 15. And Saul said: 'They have brought them from the Amalekites; for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.' 16. Then Samuel said unto Saul: 'Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night.' And he said unto him: 'Say on.' ¶ 17. And Samuel said: 'Though thou be little in thine own sight, art thou not head of the tribes of Israel? And the LORD anointed thee king over Israel; 18. and the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said: Go and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed. 19. Wherefore then didst thou not hearken to the voice of the LORD, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst that which was evil in the sight of the LORD?' 20. And Saul said unto Samuel: 'Yea, I have hearkened to the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. 21. But the people took the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the devoted things, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.' 22. And Samuel said:

'Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices,
As in hearkening to the voice of the LORD?
Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice,
And to hearken than the fat of rams.
23. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft,
And stubbornness is as idolatry and teraphim.

15. they have brought them from the Amalekites. Saul appears to lay the blame upon the people, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God. Saul thought that this would justify his action.

17. though thou be little in thine own sight. If he heeded the voice of his army in an act of disobedience, he was not fit to lead.

20. I have hearkened . . . and have brought Agag. He had destroyed the Amalekites; and the people had brought the spoil not for themselves, but for sacrifice.

22. delight in burnt offerings. Samuel's reply is couched in the rhythmical form of parallelism, the characteristic of Heb. poetry. In a few immortal words he summarizes the ethical teaching of the Hebrew prophets and asserts in clearest terms the superiority of moral to ritual worship.

23. teraphim. Idolatrous images. Deliberate disobedience towards God is compared to witchcraft, because both bow to an authority other than Divine; in the one case, to the individual will or passion; and in the other, to the idol. The comparison is especially appropriate here, as Saul has been zealous in abolishing witchcraft in Israel. Samuel accuses him of being as guilty as those he had himself condemned.

king.' 24. And Saul said unto Samuel: 'I have sinned; for I have transgressed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words; because I feared the people, and hearkened to their voice. 25. Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my sin, and return with me, that I may worship the LORD.' 26. And Samuel said unto Saul: 'I will not return with thee; for thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.' 27. And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his robe, and it rent. 28. And Samuel said unto him: 'The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou. 29. And also the Glory of Israel will not lie nor repent; for He is not a man, that He should repent.' 30. Then he said: 'I have sinned; yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and return with me, that I may worship the LORD thy God.' 31. So Samuel returned after Saul; and Saul worshipped the LORD. ¶ 32. Then said Samuel: 'Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites.' And Agag came unto him in chains. And Agag said: 'Surely the bitterness of death is at hand.' 33. And Samuel said: As thy sword hath made women childless, So shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal. ¶ 34. Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his house to Gibeath-shaul.

24. feared the people. Saul now admits the true reason of his lapse. He did not lead, though king, but was led.

29. the Glory of Israel. He who is the Source of their strength and confidence.

He is not a man, that He should repent. He is not changeable like man, but permanent in His purpose. He desires the good of Israel, and it is for their good that Saul should be deprived of sovereignty. There is no contradiction here to the expression in v. 11. It is because God is unchangeable in His purposes that 'change of attitude in men from good to evil seems to develop a corresponding change of attitude towards them in God' (Sime).

30. honour me now. A touching and natural request. Saul had been sufficiently humiliated; and, as he was still king, it was necessary that his authority should be upheld before the people.

31. so Samuel returned after Saul. He had vindicated himself as representative of God's Will, and now allowed Saul to precede him.

the bitterness of death is at hand. He had lost kingdom and liberty.

33. childless. He had practised the old Amalekite method of murdering the weak and defenceless, on the borders of Judah. Samuel, who in more than one way was the last of the Judges, seized a sword and with his own hand struck the murderer dead. It was national vengeance, not vengeance taken by Samuel in his own cause.

34. then Samuel went to Ramah. He saw Saul no more. He loved and grieved for Saul, and mourned for the failure of a career that had seemed so promising. 'He had begun his reign as a knightly hero in the splendour of manly strength, good fortune and victory; he died harassed, embittered, deranged, giving himself the death blow, avoided and forsaken by every one—by his trusted seer and counsellor, by his greatest warrior, and, finally, by the last of his faithful followers' (Kittel).

CAP. XXXVI. לו

16. Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying: 17. 'Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their way and by their doings; their way before Me was as the uncleanness of a woman in her impurity. 18. Wherefore I poured out My fury upon them for the blood which they had shed upon the land, and because they had defiled it with their idols; 19. and I scattered them among the nations, and they were dispersed through the countries; according to their way and according to their doings I judged them. 20. And when they came unto the nations, whither they came, they profaned My holy name; in that men said of them: These are the people of the LORD, and are gone forth out of His land. 21. But I had pity for My holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the nations, whither they came. 22. Therefore say unto the house of Israel: Thus saith the Lord God: I do not this for your sake, O house of Israel, but for My holy name, which ye have profaned among the nations, whither

The Additional Reading lays down the regulations for bodily purification. The object of these laws, our Sages say, was to impress on the Israelites the need of moral purification after the apostasy in connection with the Golden Calf.

Moral purification is likewise the theme of the Haftorah taken from the Book of Ezekiel. How Israel is to emerge from the grave of the Exile, renew its life on its own soil, and open an era of undefiled service of God—such is the teaching of the Haftorah. God had justly sent Israel into captivity, says the Prophet; its disasters were inevitable, seeing that God is a God of Holiness and Right. But the heathens had misunderstood this punishment, taking it as a sign of God's inability to save His people (Rashi, Kimchi). In this way, Israel had occasioned the profanation of God's Name. To vindicate His own honour, God will restore them; not because Israel deserved restoration, but because God's Glory demanded it. This Restoration will, however, be accompanied by moral renewal; on the one hand, God will implant 'a new heart and a new spirit' in the nation; and, on the other hand, Israel's soul will be swept by sincere Repentance that will cause it to be ashamed of its evil past. When the sinful nation has thus been purified, and the desolate land re-peopled, then the heathen will know that the whole is God's doing.

16-18. The uncleanness, religious and moral, of their ways was the real cause of the suffering of the people and their banishment.

17. their doings. Their idolatry.

18. blood which they had shed. The Prophet probably has in mind the abominable rite of child-sacrifice, which they copied from the heathens surrounding them.

20. profaned My holy name. Doubly so; by their own wrong-doing and by forcing God to punish them.

are gone forth out of His land. 'He was not able to protect His people!' was the taunt of the heathen, which constituted a monstrous chillul hashem, a profanation and degradation of the idea of God.

22-24. To vindicate His own honour, God will restore them, 'for so only can His sole God-head, which the ruin of His people had caused to be questioned, be generally acknowledged in the world; He can restore Israel, for of His own free grace He forgives their sins and transforms their hard heart.'

22. I do not this for your sake. Because Israel was His own people, He must strictly punish Israel for its sins; cf. Amos iii, 2 (p. 153). His Name was inseparably connected with Israel. To that fact the nation owed its preservation.

ye came. 23. And I will sanctify My great name, which hath been profaned among the nations, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the nations shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. 24. For I will take you from among the nations, and gather you out of all the countries, and will bring you into your own land. 25. And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your uncleannesses, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. 26. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. 27. And I will put My spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep Mine ordinances, and do them. 28. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be My people, and I will be your God. 29. And I will save you from all your uncleannesses; and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you. 30. And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye may receive no more the reproach of famine among the nations. 31. Then shall ye remember your evil ways, and your doings that were not good; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations. 32. Not for your sake do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you; be ashamed and confounded for your ways, O house of Israel. ¶ 33. Thus saith the Lord God: In the day that I cleanse you from all your iniquities, I will cause the cities to be inhabited, and the waste places shall be

23. when I shall be sanctified in you. Or, 'when I show myself holy in you.' Israel is the subject through which God will show Himself to be the Omnipotent and Holy God to the nations. 'The great act of reinstatement would make the heathen honour God's majesty, as the sufferings of Israel made them despise it' (Lofthouse).

25. I will sprinkle clean water. Figurative for moral purification and inward spiritual renewal. uncleannesses. Of idolatry, whose worship involved both ritual and moral uncleanness.

26. a new heart. Obedient, submissive, and desiring the good. 'Heart' is the Heb. term for the whole inward being.

a new spirit. Steadfast, and predisposed to revere God.

the stony heart. Hard and rebellious.

heart of flesh. Tender, sensitive to Divine admonition and influence, and capable of being moulded thereby.

27. to walk in My statutes. The spirit of God will appear both as an inward impulse to fulfil God's Will, and as a power to do it.

31. then shall ye remember your evil ways. The Divine mercies described in the previous verses will 'heap coals of fire on their head'. They will bring vividly to their memory the former national sins, and the consequent justice of their exile. A deep and sincere repentance will be the result.

32. not for your sake. 'It is doubtless meant as consolation to the people when the Prophet declares that their deliverance does not depend on their deserts' (Toy).

be ashamed. Self-loathing for its past misdeeds would be a sign of possessing the 'new heart and new spirit'.

33-35. The land will enjoy prosperity, the builded. 34. And the land that was desolate shall be tilled, whereas it was a desolation in the sight of all that passed by. 35. And they shall say: This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are fortified and inhabited. 36. Then the nations that are left round about you shall know that I the LORD have builded the ruined places, and planted that which was desolate; I the LORD have spoken it, and I will do it.¹ ¶ 37. Thus saith the Lord GOD: I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock. 38. As the flock for sacrifice, as the flock of Jerusalem in her appointed seasons, so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

מִזָּה. CAP. XLV.

16. All the people of the land shall give this offering for the prince in Israel. 17. And it shall be the prince's part to give the burnt-offerings, and the meal-offerings, and the drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all the appointed seasons of the house of Israel; he shall prepare the sin-offering, and the meal-offering, and the burnt-offering, and the peace-offerings, to make atonement for the house of Israel.

For the life and message of Ezekiel see p. 178, and the Introductory Note to the Haftorahs of Tetzaveh and Parah, pp. 350 and 999.

The Additional Reading describes the paschal sacrifice on the first Passover in Egypt, as well as the rules and preparation of the perennial celebration of that Festival. The Haftorah, likewise, touches upon the Passover sacrifices in the course of the Prophet's description of the Restored Temple.

The last portion of the Book of Ezekiel (chaps. XL-XLVIII) is a description of the New Jerusalem that is to arise when the Exile is over. 'The Prophet, transported in thought to the Jerusalem to come, reconstructs the Temple, describes its proportions and forms, organizes the future priesthood, the new cult, lays out the geographical plan of the reorganized kingdom, and divides it among the tribes that have come back from the four corners of exile. This plan of the constitution of the

And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering, and put it upon the door-posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court. 20. And so thou shalt do on the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple; so shall ye make atonement for the house. 21. In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover; a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten. 22. And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin-offering. 23. And the seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering to the LORD, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a he-goat daily for a sin-offering. 24. And he shall prepare a meal-offering, future is half ideal, half allegorical' (Darmesteter). In the New Jerusalem, the Temple becomes both spiritually and materially the centre of the whole nation and its life; and the name of the City is for the future to be The LORD is there. 'Ezekiel realized that great things on earth are only produced by union. He, therefore, regarded it as the aim and task of his prophetic and pastoral mission to educate individuals, not only to be religious, but to be members of a community' (Cornill). That such a community be a holy community and serve ideal ends was, however, dependent on the people being prevented from again lapsing into their former sins. Hence the new constitution for the nation in chaps. XL-XLVIII. Thereby the new Temple would be saved from the repetition of its profanations, and Israel rendered worthy of the God Who would make His dwelling in their midst. In this earliest of literary Utopias, the king's power is strictly limited. As wars are no more, his is no longer any military leadership; and the Prince of the nation is little else than its representative in the Temple. A rich reservation of land is assigned to him, which he tills like every other Israelite. The priests and Levites receive a definite portion of land as the material foundation of their existence.

16. offering. i.e. the dues that were to be given to the Temple; see v. 13-15. The National Council, on behalf of the people, were to hand the dues to the Prince; he would thus possess a common stock from which the priests could draw.

17. to give the burnt-offerings. From the contributions specified in the preceding verses, the Prince, as the head of the nation, would be held responsible for the supply of sacrifices at the appointed seasons.

he shall prepare the sin-offering. i.e. provide the offering.

18-20. To ensure the purity of the Sanctuary, which may have been endangered by error or ignorance, Passover and Tabernacles were, according to Ezekiel's vision, to be preceded on the first of the month by a day of expiation or atonement. The ritual therewith is so novel that, on the one hand, some Rabbis held that it could only refer to the Third Temple, in the days to come; and, on the other hand, there were attempts to exclude the Book of Ezekiel from the Canon of Scripture.

20. so thou shalt do on the seventh day. According to XLIII, 25 (Haftorah Tetzaveh), the consecration of the altar was to last seven days. When that was completed, atonement could be made for the unintentional errors committed during the services of consecration (Kimchi).

erreth. Unwittingly.

him that is simple. One who has trespassed in ignorance of the law.

21-25. The Festival sacrifices. These differ in many particulars from those in Leviticus. One Rabbi declares that this Chapter will only properly be explained 'when Elijah appears'.

22. shall the prince prepare for himself. Shall provide it from his own resources.

24. ephah. About 1½ bushels.

hin. About 1½ gallons.

an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and a hin of oil to an ephah. 25. In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, in the feast, shall he do the like the seven days; to the sin-offering as well as the burnt-offering, and the meal-offering as well as the oil.

CHAPTER XLVI

1. Thus saith the Lord God: The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath day it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened. 2. And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of the gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate; then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening. 3. Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of that gate before the LORD in the sabbaths and in the new moons. 4. And the burnt-offering that the prince shall offer unto the LORD shall be in the sabbath day six lambs without blemish and a ram without blemish; 5. and the meal-offering shall be an ephah for the ram, and the meal-offering for the lambs as he is able to give, and a hin of oil to an ephah. 6. And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish; and six lambs, and a ram; they shall be without blemish; 7. and he shall prepare a meal-offering, an ephah for the bullock, and an ephah for the ram, and for the lambs according as his means suffice, and a hin of oil to an ephah. 8. And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of the gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof. 9. But when the people of the land shall come before the LORD in the appointed seasons, he that entereth by the way of the north

25. in the feast. The Feast of Tabernacles, the harvest festival.

CHAPTER XLVI

1-15. The rights of the Prince in the Sanctuary are strictly prescribed.

2. shall stand by the post of the gate. The Prince had no right of entry within it. He stood at the threshold of the eastern gate, opposite the altar, watching his sacrifice.

3. people of the land. Heb. am ha-aretz, the National Council. They have almost the same privilege as the Prince. They worship at the door of the same gate.

8. shall go forth. The Prince is to leave the inner gate as he entered it; he is not to pass through the Inner Court. The procedure of the Prince is thus minutely ordered that it may be understood that, though certain privileges are accorded his rank, he has no authority within the sacred precincts.

9. in the appointed feasts. The three Pilgrim Festivals of the year (Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles), when all were to appear at the Temple in Jerusalem. Ezekiel lays down the regulations to prevent overcrowding. The members of the National Council, like every worshipper, were to pass reverently as near the Holy of Holies as was allowed, but pass on. Public worship was not to degenerate into a public spectacle.

gate to worship shall go forth by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate; he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth straight before him. 10. And the prince, when they go in, shall go in the midst of them; and when they go forth, they shall go forth together. 11. And in the feasts and in the appointed seasons the meal-offering shall be an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs as he is able to give, and a hin of oil to an ephah. ¶ 12. And when the prince shall prepare a freewill-offering, a burnt-offering or peace-offerings as a freewill-offering unto the LORD, one shall open for him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, as he doth on the sabbath day; then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate. ¶ 13. And thou shalt prepare a lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering unto the LORD daily; morning by morning shalt thou prepare it. 14. And thou shalt prepare a meal-offering with it morning by morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of a hin of oil, to moisten the fine flour; a meal-offering unto the LORD continually by a perpetual ordinance. 15. Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meal-offering, and the oil, morning by morning, for a continual burnt-offering.¹ ¶ 16. Thus saith the Lord God: If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, it is his inheritance, it shall belong to his sons; it is their possession by inheritance. 17. But if he give of his inheritance a gift to one of his servants, it shall be his to the year of liberty; then it shall return to the prince; but as for his inheritance, it shall be for his sons. 18. Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance, to thrust them wrongfully out of their possession; he shall give inheritance to his sons out of his own possession; that My people be not scattered every man from his possession.'

10. the prince . . . shall go in the midst of them. Of the am ha-aretz, the National Council. Those who take the words 'people of the land' literally explain that on the Festival days, when the people would be there in great numbers, the Prince was to mingle freely with them. In no other way does a ruler do himself greater honour (Altschul).

16-18. THE PRINCE'S ESTATE

16. give a gift. The Prince was at liberty to give part of his estate inalienably to his own sons.

18. shall not take of the people's inheritance. The Prince is to be subject to property-laws, like any other citizen. He is prohibited from appropriating, under any pretext whatsoever, land of the common people. The story of Naboth's vineyard was never again to be enacted in Israel. The Prophet thus ends his Book with the double ideal of Holiness in Worship, and Justice to Fellow-man.

CAP. III. ג

4. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem

Be pleasant unto the LORD,
As in the days of old,
And as in ancient years.

5. And I will come near to you to judgment;

And I will be a swift witness Against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers,

And against false swearers;

And against those that oppress the hireling in his wages,

The widow, and the fatherless,

And that turn aside the stranger from his right,

And fear not Me,

Saith the LORD of hosts.

6. For I the LORD change not;

For a characterization of the times and message of Malachi see p. 102.

The Haftorah ends with the announcement of the reappearance of Elijah the Prophet. Passover, as the Festival of Redemption in the past, was always associated with the Redemption of the Future (פסח לעתיד), when mankind would be delivered from all oppression, physical and spiritual. Elijah was traditionally regarded as the advance messenger who would appear at Passover-time and announce the dawn of that Messianic era.

Malachi preaches to a despondent generation, when spiritual lassitude possessed both high and low, and doubt paralyzed the souls of men. Sordidness, callousness and moral disintegration met him at every turn: and at the same time men asked, Where is God? Malachi answers the challenge by announcing the speedy advent of a great Judgment Day.

4. be pleasant unto the LORD. When, as stated in the previous verse, they are offered 'in righteousness'.

6. I the LORD change not . . . are not consumed. I change not in My nature, being ever the same both in loving good and hating evil, as in the purpose for which you are selected as My people. Therefore, My judgment is but to purify you for the fulfilment of your destiny (Kimchi).

It is the home divided against itself, the estrangement of the youth from the elders, that especially fills the Prophet with pain and horror as something unnatural—a curse which, if unremoved, must blight the land. 2. At that time the LORD said unto Joshua : 'Make thee knives of flint, and circumcise again the children of Israel the second time.' 3. And Joshua made him knives of flint, and circumcised the children of Israel at ¹Gibeath-ha-araloth. 4. And this is the cause why Joshua did circumcise: all the people that came forth out of Egypt, that were males, even all the men of war, died in the wilderness by the way, after they came forth out of Egypt. 5. For all the people that came out were circumcised; but all the people that were born in the wilderness by the way as they came forth out of Egypt, had not been circumcised. 6. For the children of Israel walked forty years in the wilderness, till all the nation, even the men of war that came forth out of Egypt, were consumed, because they hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD; unto whom the LORD swore that He would not let them see the land which the LORD swore unto their fathers that He would give us, a land flowing with milk and honey. 7. And He raised up their children in their stead;

On both the first days of Passover, the Haftorahs refer to outstanding celebrations of the Festival in Biblical history. This day there is recalled the historic Passover which the Israelites observed at Gilgal after they had crossed the Jordan, the very first celebration of the Festival in the Holy Land.

CHAPTER V

2-9. CIRCUMCISION OF THE ISRAELITES

2. knives of flint. Robinson cites the survival of stone instruments into the Iron Age, due to religious conservatism, found amongst the Egyptians for use in circumcision (cf. Exod. iv, 25).

the second time. According to tradition, they were collectively circumcised before their departure from Egypt (see on v. 9). The present occasion would be the second collective circumcision. It is therefore clear that the passage has no bearing upon the institution of the rite; on the contrary, it was then recognized as an ancient practice.

cumcised, Joshua told them, could possess the land; for God said to Abraham: I will establish My covenant between Me and thee and thy seed after thee . . . And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee . . . all the land of Canaan . . . This is My covenant . . . every male among you shall be circumcised (Gen. xvii, 7-10) (Rashi).

died in the wilderness. In accordance with God's decree (Num. xiv, 28 ff).

5. had not been circumcised. The reason for this is not given. The Rabbis suggest that the fatigue of travelling in the wilderness made it inadvisable. Alternatively, they were circumcised, but not properly.

6. honey. The juice of fruits, and particularly date-honey may be meant. But Keil observes: 'Milk and honey are products of a land rich in grass and flowers. Both articles are abundantly produced in Canaan, even in a state of devastation. Milk, eaten partly sweet and partly curdled, that of cows as well as of goats and sheep (Deut. xxxii, 14), was prominent in the diet of the ancient Hebrews, as in that of the Orientals of the present day. The land yielded great quantities of honey, especially that from wild bees . . .'

them did Joshua circumcise; for they were uncircumcised, because they had not been circumcised by the way. 8. And it came to pass, when all the nation were circumcised, every one of them, that they abode in their places in the camp, till they were whole. ¶9. And the LORD said unto Joshua: 'This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you.' Wherefore the name of that place was called Gilgal, unto this day. ¶10. And the children of Israel encamped in Gilgal; and they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the month at even in the plains of Jericho. 11. And they did eat of the produce of the land on the morrow after the passover, unleavened cakes and parched corn, in the selfsame day. 12. And the manna ceased on the morrow, after they had eaten of the produce of the land; neither had the children of Israel manna any more; but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.

9. the reproach of Egypt. Where they did not practise circumcision until about to depart. Possibly the Egyptians had forbidden it to them, since they reserved the rite for the priests and the aristocracy. Others suggest that the omission of the practice in the wilderness signified God's rejection of that generation, since circumcision was the sign of the covenant between Him and Israel (Gen. xvii, 10 f). The Egyptians may have taunted them with this. The present circumcision, therefore, signifying their restoration to His favour and the renewal of the covenant, removed the stigma together with the Egyptians' taunt. Urquhart (V, p. 347) explains that the reproach (i.e. shame, disgrace) of Egypt was their low social status there, viz. that of slaves; the renewal of the covenant indicated that now they would be free and masters in their own country instead of being bondmen in a foreign land. Ehrlich suggests as the meaning of the phrase 'the disgrace (of being uncircumcised) since the days of Egypt.'

Gilgal. This is an instance of popular etymology, gilgal probably meaning 'circle.' Nevertheless, since galgal means 'wheel,' gilgal may suggest the idea of 'rolling.'

on the fourteenth day. As prescribed by the Torah (Exod. xii, 6).

11. the produce of the land. Since the manna ceased to fall, as stated in the next verse. The Rabbis held that the new harvest is meant, the Israelites first having brought the wave-offering of the 'sheaf' (omer), in accordance with Lev. xxiii, 10-14, the morrow after the passover here being identical with the morrow after the sabbath there.

unleavened cakes. Cf. Exod. xii, 18 ff.

parched corn. Cf. Lev. xxiii, 14. Ears of grain, roasted at the fire, are still eaten as a substitute for bread in the East.

12. the manna ceased on the morrow. No longer would their food come down to them from heaven. In their own land they must toil for their daily bread.

13-15. APPEARANCE OF THE CAPTAIN OF THE LORD'S HOST

An armed man appears before Joshua, describing himself as the captain of the host of the LORD, who impresses upon him the sanctity of the place whereon he stands. The brief encounter is introduced abruptly, without any introduction, but its purport is clear: the campaign is about to begin, and again Joshua is admonished that his task has a sacred purpose, and is not simply another of the many sordid instances of conquest and plunder which fill the pages of history. He must approach it with awe and reverence, seeing himself as agent to fulfil God's design. 'This incident is a novel illustration of the truth that, in the great causes of God upon the earth, the leaders, however supreme and solitary they seem, are themselves led. There is a Rock higher than they; their shoulders, however broad, have not to bear alone the awful burden of responsibility. The sense of supernatural conduct and protection, the consequent reverence and humility, which inform the spirit of all Israel's history, have nowhere in the Old Testament received a more beautiful expression than in this early fragment' (G. A. Smith in Hasting's Dictionary of the Bible, ii, p. 788). Ralbag holds that the incident was not actual, but a prophetic vision.

¶13. And it came to pass, when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and, behold, there stood a man over against him with his sword drawn in his hand; and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him: 'Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?' 14. And he said: 'Nay, but I am captain of the host of the LORD; I am now come.' And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and bowed down, and said unto him: 'What saith my lord unto his servant?' 15. And the captain of the LORD's host said unto Joshua: 'Put off thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy.' And Joshua did so.

And the king went up to the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets; and all the people, both small and great; and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant which was found in the house of the LORD. 3. And the king stood on the platform, and made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep His commandments, and His testimonies, and His statutes, with all his heart, and all his soul, to confirm the words of his covenant that were written in this book; and all the people stood to the covenant. ¶4. And the king commanded Hilkiah the high priest, and the priests of the second order, and the keepers of the door, to bring forth out of the temple of the LORD all the vessels that were made for Baal, and for the Asherah, and for all the host of heaven; and he burned them without Jerusalem in the fields of Kidron, and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el. 5. And he put

The passage has been chosen for its account of the great Passover celebrated after King Josiah's Reformation (vs. 21-23) In the eighteenth year of Josiah's reign (621 B.C.E.), during the course of repairs to the Temple structure, a scroll of the Torah was discovered. Its contents were apparently unknown to the High Priest Hilkiah and to the king, suggesting that, as a result of King Manasseh's policy of deliberate apostasy, thoroughly applied throughout a reign of 55 years, knowledge of the Torah had virtually disappeared from Judah. Josiah was 'stirred to the depths of his being by the message of the book', and proceeded vigorously to cleanse his kingdom of idolatrous abuses and obscenities. Part of the account of his reforms prefaces the description of his celebration of the Passover in this Haftorah.

For a full discussion of the discovery of the Book and the resultant Reformation, see Additional Note G, pp. 937 ff.

And he brought out the Asherah from the house of the LORD, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burned it at the brook Kidron, and stamped it small to powder, and cast the powder thereof upon the graves of the common people. 7. And he broke down the houses of the sodomites, that were in the house of the LORD, where the women wove coverings for the Asherah. 8. And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the priests had made offerings, from Geba to Beer-sheba; and he broke down the high places of the gates that were at the entrance of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand as he entered the gate of the city. 9. Nevertheless the priests of the high places came not up to the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, but

CAP. XXXVII. לו

1. The hand of the LORD was upon me, and the LORD carried me out in a spirit, and set me down in the midst of the valley, and it was full of bones; 2. and He caused me to pass by them round about, and, behold, there were very many in the open valley; and, lo, they were very dry. 3. And He said unto me: 'Son of man, can these bones live?' And I answered: 'O Lord God, Thou knowest.' 4. Then He said unto me: 'Prophecy over these bones, and say unto them: O ye dry bones, hear the word of the LORD: 5. Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones: Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live. 6. And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.' 7. So I prophesied as I was commanded; and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a commotion, and the bones came together, bone to its bone. 8. And I beheld, and, lo, there were sinews upon them, and

THE PARABLE OF THE DRY BONES

The prophet finds himself in a valley full of scattered dry bones. Under the vivifying effect of the spirit of God the bones knit together and are covered with sinews, flesh and skin. Ultimately the breath of life is infused into them and they stand up a great host. It matters little whether we have here a prophetic vision or an account of an actual happening: both interpretations find their advocates in the Talmud (Sanhedrin 92b). What is important is that to Ezekiel and his contemporaries, and to all generations of Jews since their day, the vision of the Dry Bones reinforced in a marvellously vivid manner the prophetic promise of Israel's rebirth and regeneration as a nation. No more inspiring message could have been communicated to the despairing exiles to revive their national will to live. Both the fact that Passover, recalling past deliverances, looks forward to future redemption, and an old tradition that the resurrection of the dead will take place during this Festival, determined the choice of this passage as today's Haftorah.

2. in the open valley. lit. 'upon the face of the valley.'

they were very dry. i.e. the flesh had gone completely, depicting how forlorn was the hope of the nation's revival.

3. Thou knowest. It is beyond human power to make the bones live. Only God, if He so will, can do it.

5. I will cause breath to enter into you. After the bones have been covered with sinews, flesh and skin, God will put breath into them, as stated in the next verse. Apparently, the final stage in the process of giving life to the bones is mentioned first to bring out the purpose of the scene.

6. sinews . . . flesh . . . skin . . . put breath. Perhaps the intention is that the physical and political rehabilitation of the people will be completed by their spiritual revitalization.

7. a noise . . . a commotion. The noise (lit. 'sound') grew into a commotion by the coming together of the bones to form human frames.

flesh came up, and skin covered them above; but there was no breath in them. 9. Then said He unto me: 'Prophecy unto the breath, prophecy, son of man, and say to the breath: Thus saith the Lord God: Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.' 10. So I prophesied as He commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great host. 11. Then He said unto me: 'Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel; behold, they say: Our bones are dried up, and our hope is lost; we are clean cut off. 12. Therefore prophecy, and say unto them: Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, O My people; and I will bring you into the land of Israel. 13. And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves, and caused you to come up out of your graves, O My people. 14. And I will put My spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I will place you in your own land; and ye shall know that I the LORD have spoken, and performed it, saith the LORD.'

9. come from the four winds, O breath. The breath of life which had departed from the bodies is thought of as having been dispersed in all directions, and is summoned to return from wherever it may be. Or, as Davidson comments: 'The wind from the four corners of the heavens is but a symbol of the universal life-giving spirit of God.'

11. these bones are the whole house of Israel. The interpretation of the vision. These dried bones are a representation of the entire people of Israel, both the Northern and Southern Kingdoms, destroyed and desolate, bereft of vitality. behold, they say. The subject is the survivors of the two Kingdoms, scattered and in exile. They have lost the semblance of nationhood, as fleshless bones can no longer be regarded as human beings.

12. I will open your graves. Figuratively the graves are the foreign countries where they are languishing in captivity.

13. ye shall know that I am the LORD, etc. When the miracle of Israel's national revival is performed, the people's faith in God will be firmly established.

14. I will put My spirit in you. The Hebrew word here translated spirit is the word translated breath in verses 5 and 6. Israel's restoration could not be achieved by human power, but only by the spirit of God.

1. And David spoke unto the LORD the words of this song in the day that the LORD delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul;

My shield, and my horn of salvation, my high tower, and my refuge;
My saviour, Thou savest me from violence.

And I am saved from mine enemies.

The floods of Belial assailed me.
6. The cords of Sheol surrounded me;
The snares of Death confronted me.
7. In my distress I called upon the LORD,
Yea, I called unto my God;
And out of His temple He heard my voice,
And my cry did enter into His ears.

v. 8. ויתנשע קרי

Part of the Torah reading for this day is the Shirah, the song of triumph which Moses and the children of Israel sang after their miraculous deliverance at the Red Sea, an event which tradition dates as having happened on the seventh day after the Exodus from Egypt. Not only is David's song 'in the day that the Lord delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies' an obvious parallel to the Shirah, but also some of its imagery seems to have been evoked by the miracle of the waters of the Red Sea (v. 16).

This song probably belongs to the period when David's victories over his enemies at home and abroad were still recent, rather than to the later overclouded years of his reign. The hymn has been embodied in the Psalter (Ps. XVIII).

A HYMN OF THANKSGIVING

1. all his enemies . . . Saul. Saul, too, was an enemy; but there was an obvious difference between the hostility of rival nations and the persecution to which he had been subjected by Saul.

2-4. INTRODUCTORY EXPRESSION OF TRUST IN GOD

2. rock . . . fortress. The imagery is common in the Bible, but is particularly appropriate here as recalling the wild fastness in which David found refuge when pursued by Saul.

* Additional Haftorah as referred to on title page.

3. my rock. The Hebrew avoids repetition by the use of sela in v. 2 and tsur in v. 3.

my refuge. lit. 'my place of retreat.' This, and the remaining words of the sentence, are wanting in Ps. XVIII.

4. praised, I cry, is the LORD. i.e. I proclaim God to be the One worthy to be praised. R.V., however, has 'I will call upon the LORD, who is worthy to be praised,' which fits better with the following line.

5-7. HIS PERIL

5. Belial. lit. 'worthlessness.' The word is most commonly found in the phrase sons of Belial, i.e. 'worthless, base fellows.' But it has the derived meaning of 'ruin, or destruction' (i.e. physical mischief), and the parallelism suggests that this is the sense in which it is used here.

7. His temple. i.e. heaven (cf. Ps. XI, 4).

8-16. DIVINE INTERVENTION

This highly figurative passage should be considered as an attempt to describe graphically and vividly the tremendous grandeur and fearful power of God's intervention in the affairs of men, rather than as an account of the actual form in which Divine help was given to David.

8. Then the earth did shake and quake,
The foundations of heaven did tremble;
They were shaken, because He was wroth.

9. Smoke arose up in His nostrils,
And fire out of His mouth did devour;
Coals flamed forth from Him.

10. He bowed the heavens also, and came down;
And thick darkness was under His feet.

11. And He rode upon a cherub, and did fly;
Yea, He was seen upon the wings of the wind.

12. And He made darkness pavilions round about Him,
Gathering of waters, thick clouds of the skies.

13. At the brightness before Him
Coals of fire flamed forth.

14. The LORD thundered from heaven,
And the Most High gave forth His voice.

15. And He sent out arrows, and scattered them;
Lightning, and discomfited them.

The foundations of the world were laid
bare,

v. 15. ויהם קרי

8. the foundations of heaven. The mountains on which heaven seemed to rest.

9. smoke . . . fire . . . coals. The figures, which are derived from the phenomena of a volcanic eruption, display a bold use of poetic licence in so describing God's activity.

10. came down. God is said to 'come down' when He manifests His power in the world (cf. Isa. LXIII, 19).

thick darkness. In which the Presence is concealed from human eyes (cf. Exod. xx, 18).

11. cherub. 'A winged creature symbolic of the powers of nature ministering to God. Cherubim were said to guard the entrance to the Garden of Eden (Gen. iii, 24), overshadow the mercy-seat of the Ark of the Covenant (Exod. xxv, 18), and constitute the Divine throne (II Kings xix, 15). It is in this last respect that the term is employed here. God descends to earth upon His throne of judgment' (Cohen). The language is again boldly figurative, the poet did not intend that pictorial shape should be given in the mind's eye to this figure, any more than to that of the wings of the wind which follows.

He was seen. Hebrew, vayyera; in Psalms vayyede (He did swoop down), a word which better suits the context.

12. gathering of waters, thick clouds. The words are in apposition to darkness in the first clause, the sense being that the thick, dark, water-laden clouds were like a pavilion enshrouding God's Presence.

13. at the brightness, etc. Perhaps more lit., 'out of the brightness,' as if the lightning flashes (the coals of fire) were emanations from the radiant Presence of God.

14. His voice. For thunder as the voice of God, cf. Ps. xxix, 3.

15. arrows. Lightnings (cf. Ps. LXXVII, 18 f). scattered them. The object is David's enemies (v. 4).

discomfited. The Hebrew word expresses the confusion of a sudden panic.

16. the channels of the sea. The bed of the ocean was discovered as the waters were swept aside. The imagery seems suggested by the miracle of the waters of the Red Sea.

the rebuke of the LORD. The upheavals of nature which accompanied God's reproof of the guilty.

17-21. GOD'S DELIVERANCE

17. He sent from on high. Better, 'He stretched forth (His hand) from on high,' as in Ps. CXLIV, 7.

many waters. The floods of calamity (v. 5) which were engulfing him.

8. He delivered me from mine enemy most strong,
From them that hated me, for they were too mighty for me.
19. They confronted me in the day of my calamity;
But the LORD was a stay unto me.
20. He brought me forth also into a large place;
He delivered me, because He delighted in me.
21. The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness;
According to the cleanness of my hands hath He recompensed me.
22. For I have kept the ways of the LORD,
And have not wickedly departed from my God.
23. For all His ordinances were before me;
And as for His statutes, I did not depart from them.
24. And I was single-hearted toward Him,
And I kept myself from mine iniquity.
25. Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness, According to my cleanness in His eyes.

With the upright man Thou dost show Thyself upright;
27. With the pure Thou dost show Thyself pure;

18. mine enemy. The singular may be used as a collective; or perhaps Saul is meant.

for they were too mighty for me. It seemed that without God's help they would overwhelm me.

19. the day of my calamity. The day that might have proved calamitous for me, had it not been for Divine assistance.

20. a large place. Metaphorically for 'deliverance,' as the opposite word straits is used for 'peril' (cf. Ps. cxviii, 5).

21. rewarded me according to my righteousness. To the modern ear the claim has a self-righteous ring. But the Psalmist, believing that God's dealings with men were determined by their conduct (vs. 26 ff), found in the Divine mercies towards himself clear evidences of his own righteousness.

the cleanness of my hands. i.e. the purity of my actions.

22-25. DAVID'S INTEGRITY

When this protestation of innocence is contrasted with the agonized consciousness of sin of Ps. LI, it becomes evident that these words could not have been composed after the crime against Uriah, for which David there seeks expiation.

22. wickedly departed from. lit. 'acted wickedly (and thereby departed from).'

23. before me. Constantly before my mind as a rule of life.

24. single-hearted. The word expresses 'the sincerity of undivided devotion' (Kirkpatrick).

I kept myself from mine iniquity. i.e. I kept watch over myself that I might not transgress.

26-28. GOD'S DEALINGS WITH MAN

26. with the merciful. God's attitude towards men is regulated by men's attitude towards God. the upright man. lit. 'the upright hero,' the man who is strong in maintaining his integrity.

27. crooked . . . subtle. The same Hebrew roots are rendered crooked and perverse in Deut. xxxii, 5.

show Thyself subtle. 'If a man is at cross-purposes with righteousness, he will find that Providence will, sooner or later, cross him' (Davidson).

28. And the afflicted people Thou dost save;
But Thine eyes are upon the haughty, that Thou mayest humble them.

29. For Thou art my lamp, O LORD;
And the LORD doth lighten my darkness.

30. For by Thee I run upon a troop;
By my God do I scale a wall.

31. As for God, His way is perfect;
The word of the LORD is tried;
He is a shield unto all them that take refuge in Him.

32. For who is God, save the LORD?
And who is a Rock, save our God?

33. The God who is my strong fortress,
And who letteth my way go forth straight;

34. Who maketh my feet like hinds',
And setteth me upon my high places;

35. Who traineth my hands for war,
So that mine arms do bend a bow of brass.

36. Thou hast also given me Thy shield of salvation;
And Thy condescension hath made me great.

but Thine eyes, etc. In Psalms, but the haughty eyes Thou dost humble. 'Haughty eyes are an abomination to God (Prov. vi, 17). The vice of pride is frequently denounced in the Scriptures as evidence of a mentality which scorns all consideration for a neighbour's rights when these conflict with self-interest' (Cohen).

29-31. HIS EXPERIENCE OF GOD

29. Thou art my lamp. In Psalms, Thou dost light my lamp. The conclusion of the verse shows that the metaphor is used here in the sense that God is the light of hope and salvation, which dispels the gloom of anxiety and despair.

30. by Thee. With Thine aid.

I run upon a troop. Perhaps an allusion to his successful pursuit of the predatory troop of Amalekites (I Sam. xxx, 8).

I scale a wall. If the allusion is to a specific event in David's life, it probably refers to the capture of the stronghold of Zion (2 Sam. v, 6 ff), which was effected with such surprising ease that he seemed to have leapt over the walls.

31. the word of the LORD is tried. As metal is refined of dross, so experience proves that God's word will be fulfilled.

unto all them that take refuge in Him. Those whose faith impels them to take refuge in God will find Him a sure protection.

32-37. HIS INDEBTEDNESS TO GOD

32. who is God? 'The question does not imply a belief in the existence of other deities, but aims at stressing the reality of Israel's God, His ability to help and save, as against the inertness of the objects worshipped by the heathen peoples' (Cohen).

33. letteth my way go forth straight. Straight is literally 'perfect.' God removed every obstacle which blocked the path of his life.

34. like hinds'. The simile expresses swiftness, agility and sure-footedness, great assets in ancient warfare.

setteth me upon my high places. The metaphor of the hind, effortlessly surmounting the mountain tops, is continued. David's high places were the mountain strongholds which he occupied.

35. bend a bow of brass. The ability to use this weapon, which is mentioned again in Job xx, 24, may have required unusual strength or special skill. The word traineth seems to support the latter explanation.

36. Thy shield of salvation. Or, 'the shield of Thy salvation,' i.e. Thy protection.

Thy condescension. The Hebrew reads anothcha, 'Thy answering,' i.e. Thy answers to my prayers for help. The rendering Thy condescension relates this word to the reading in Psalms, anothcha, lit. 'Thy humility.' 'A strange quality to ascribe to God, but it points to His readiness to descend ten them through, that they cannot arise;

Yea, they are fallen under my feet.

40. For Thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle;
Thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me.

41. Thou hast also made mine enemies turn their backs unto me;
Yea, them that hate me, that I might cut them off.

Even unto the LORD, but He answered them not.

I did stamp them as the mire of the streets,

42. unto the LORD. In their extremity, the heathens would look in prayer to the God of Israel, whose power had been manifested in their defeat.

44. the contentions of my people. The date of the Psalm (see on v. 22) precludes the possibility that the reference is to the rebellions which marked the last years of David's reign; it must be instead to that long war between the house of Saul and the house of David (iii, 1) in the opening years of his rule.

Thou hast kept me. His power and influence were acknowledged by the nations which surrounded him.

a people whom I have not known. Perhaps better, 'peoples whom I have not known,' treating the singular as a collective noun. The statement would then be a general one, that nations with whom previously he had had no dealings now recognized his overlordship.

45. the sons of the stranger. Foreign peoples. dwindle away before me. Better, 'come cringing to me.'

as soon as they hear of me, etc. The mere report of David's prowess is enough to make them submit, as in the case of Toi king of Hamath (viii, 9 f).

49. bringeth me forth. The sense is expressed in Ps. xviii by the word delivereth.

the violent man. Some commentators have seen in this an allusion to Saul. But the transition from the general to the particular would be abrupt, and it is better to understand the words to mean men of violence in general.

50. among the nations. His subjection of foreign peoples would enable him to proclaim among them his indebtedness to God for his victories.

51. a tower of salvation. Hebrew migdol. The kethib has magdil, as in Ps. xviii, i.e. great salvation giveth He. Both readings are found in the Hebrew Grace after meals (Prayer Book, ed. Singer, p. 285). 'In order to use both verses, one was assigned for week-days, the other for Sabbaths' (Abrahams, Companion to the Prayer Book).

בְּאֶרֶץ יִפּוֹל:

v. 32. בת קרי

Intimately bound up with the Jewish Messianic hope is the thought of פסח לעתיד, the Passover of the future. It will be a new redemption and a new Exodus, this time an exodus of the Jewish people from the lands of their dispersion and an ingathering into the Holy Land. 'The Lord will set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of His people, that shall remain from Assyria and from Egypt, etc.' (xi, 11). It has even been maintained that the last two days of Passover (in Israel the last day) are observed as full Yom Tov to celebrate in anticipation the Passover of the future; and two long liturgical poems contrasting פסח מצרים with פסח לעתיד are introduced into the מערבות on these days. It was natural, therefore, that the greatest and most famous of all the Messianic prophecies (Isaiah xi), with its allusion to the redemption from Egypt (v. 11, 15, 16), should be chosen as the theme of the Haftorah for the last day; with the happy result, as well, that the Bible readings on the great Festival of Deliverance conclude with a forward-looking message of wonderful hope and optimism.

32–34. These are the last verses of a prophecy describing the devastating advance of the Assyrian army on Jerusalem through her northern approaches. The army will halt outside Jerusalem in preparation for the final assault, but will meet with sudden annihilation. The prophecy had its fulfilment in the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem in 701 B.C.E., but the date of the prophecy may be any time between 717, when Sargon captured Carchemish, and 701.

32. Nob. Described as the city of the priests in i Sam. xxii, 19. It cannot be identified, though it was obviously a place near Jerusalem. It has been suggested that it may have been situated on Mount Scopus, to the north of the city, on which the old buildings of the Hebrew University now stand.

33 f. The Assyrian army's destruction at the very moment when it believed itself to be knocking at the gates of victory. The metaphor is that of a forest being cut down by the axe of the woodman.

33. with terror. Other translations of the rare Hebrew word are 'with terrible might' and 'with a crash.'

34. with iron. In Deut. xix, 5, the word denotes the metal part of an axe.

Lebanon. The proud status of Assyria is likened to the majestic cedars on the Lebanon mount.

a mighty one. God's angel (cf. xxxvii, 36).

CHAPTER XI

THE MESSIANIC AGE

This prophecy has been variously ascribed by scholars to the reign of Ahaz and to the last years of Isaiah's life, and is distinct from that which precedes it. But the destruction of hostile heathen forces became so integral a part of the Messianic doctrine that the last verses of Chapter x were felt to be an apposite introduction to the Haftorah. There is, moreover, the contrast between the devastated Assyrian forest and the fresh shoot which the stock of Jesse will produce.

CHAPTER XI

CAP. XI. יא

1. And there shall come forth a shoot out of the stock of Jesse,
And a twig shall grow forth out of his roots.
2. And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him,
The spirit of wisdom and understanding,
The spirit of counsel and might,
The spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD;
3. And his delight shall be in the fear of the LORD;
And he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes,
Neither decide after the hearing of his ears;
4. But with righteousness shall he judge the poor,
And decide with equity for the meek of the land;
And he shall smite the land with the rod of his mouth,
And with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.
5. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins,
And faithfulness the girdle of his reins.
6. And the wolf shall dwell with the lamb,
And the leopard shall lie down with the kid;
And the calf and the young lion and the fatling together;
And a little child shall lead them.
7. And the cow and the bear shall feed;
Their young ones shall lie down together;
And the lion shall eat straw like the ox.
8. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, render the earth (so A.V., R.V.) interpreting the sphere of the ideal ruler as universal.

5. girdle. A symbol of strength. He will derive his power and influence from the sources of righteousness and faith.

6-8. Universal peace and harmony among men will also be extended to the animal world. The wild beasts will not prey on the weak and domesticated animals, nor will man and beast stand in fear of each other.

6. a little child shall lead them. The superiority of the human race, represented by a young child, with its potentialities for universal good, will be acknowledged by the submission of the animal kingdom.

9. The first part of the verse may have as its antecedent the animals mentioned in the preceding three verses, or the subject may be indefinite and the meaning be 'none shall hurt,' etc.

My holy mountain. Zion, or all the Land of Israel.

10. And it shall come to pass in that day,
That the root of Jesse, that standeth for an ensign of the peoples, Unto him shall the nations seek;
And his resting-place shall be glorious.

11. And it shall come to pass in that day,
That the Lord will set His hand again the second time
To recover the remnant of His people,
That shall remain from Assyria, and from Egypt,
And from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam,
And from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12. And He will set up an ensign for the nations,
And will assemble the dispersed of Israel,
And gather together the scattered of Judah
From the four corners of the earth.

13. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart,
And they that harass Judah shall be cut off;
Ephraim shall not envy Judah,
And Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

14. And they shall fly down upon the shoulder of the Philistines on the west; Together shall they spoil the children of the east;
They shall put forth their hand upon Edom and Moab;
And the children of Ammon shall obey
them.

10-16. The return of the exiles.

10. This verse seems to be detached from the following, forming by itself a complete thought.

an ensign. A signal for rallying the people.

tribute, or, according to others, seeking religious guidance and instruction.

from Egypt.

Pathros. In Upper Egypt.

Cush. i.e. Ethiopia. Pathros and Cush were among the dependencies of Egypt.

Elam. Susiana, north-east of the Persian Gulf.

Shinar. Babylonia (cf. Gen. x, 10).

Hamath. The modern Hama, half-way between Carchemish and Damascus on the River Orontes. The last three places were dependencies of Assyria.

islands of the sea. The Mediterranean coast-lands.

12. an ensign for the nations. A signal for the aforementioned nations to yield up the Israelite exiles in their midst, or for the exiles to see and gather round it.

they that harass Judah. The parallelism requires, and the second part of the verse confirms, the translation: 'the adversaries (of Ephraim) in Judah,' a rendering which is rather forced, but may be grammatically justified.

1. And in that day thou shalt say:
'I will give thanks unto Thee, O LORD;
For though Thou wast angry with me,
Thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortest me.
2. Behold, God is my salvation;
I will trust, and will not be afraid;
For GOD the LORD is my strength and song;
And He is become my salvation.'
3. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water
Out of the wells of salvation.
4. And in that day shall ye say:
'Give thanks unto the LORD, proclaim His name,
Declare His doings among the peoples,
Make mention that His name is exalted.
5. Sing unto the LORD; for He hath done gloriously;
This is made known in all the earth.

CHAPTER XII

When the exiles are restored and reunited, they shall sing these songs of thanksgiving to God.

1-2. The first hymn. The first persons singular refer to the community, which is figuratively represented as an individual.

1. in that day. Of deliverance and return to Zion.

thou shalt say. The prophet addresses the community.

2. The second section of the verse is almost a repetition of Exod. xv, 2. Verses 2 and 3 form the beginning of the Habdalah recited at the termination of the Sabbath.

3. draw . . . wells of salvation. This verse is introductory to the second song of thanksgiving. The metaphor, which would have a special appeal to a people dependent on wells for life, should be interpreted spiritually in the light of Jer. ii, 13, where God is described as the fountain of living waters. God will be 'the source from which the people will exultantly draw' (Whitehouse).

CHAPTER I

CAP. I. 8

1. Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river Chebar, that the heavens were opened,

וַיְהִי בַּשְּׁלִישִׁים שָׁנָה בְּרַבִּיעִי בַּחֹמֶשֶׁה לַחֹדֶשׁ וַאֲנִי בְּתוֹךְ-
הַנָּהָל עַל-נְהַר כְּבָר נִפְתְּחוּ הַשָּׁמַיִם וַאֲרָאָה מֵרָאִית

The great theophany (appearance of God) at Sinai was the subject-matter of this morning's reading from the Torah. The Haftorah describes another remarkable vision of God, that which appeared to Ezekiel at the commencement of his prophetic ministry. It is the vision of the Divine Throne-Chariot, a strange and mysterious apparition which, in the attempt to understand and interpret it, gave rise to a system of esoteric thought known in Rabbinic literature as Ma'aseh Merkabah, and round which Jewish mysticism, from its beginning down to the later study of the Kabbalah, centred. It was, however, a study reserved for men of the highest degree of mental and moral perfection, it being rightly feared that, undertaken by lesser men, it could lead to mental and emotional imbalance; and the Mishna (Chagiga II, 1) forbids the exposition of the Merkabah even to a single listener unless he be wise and of independent insight. Therefore the commentary which follows will make no attempt to probe the mystic depths of the vision and will be limited to clarifying the picture which Ezekiel draws.

Ezekiel, who was among the Judeans taken into Babylonian captivity in the year 597 B.C.E., was the first prophet to live and prophesy in exile. His orations were addressed both to the people who were still left in Judea and to his fellow-captives in Babylon, and the vision of the Divine Chariot (Merkabah) was a fitting introduction to his prophetic career. The main feature of the Merkabah drawn by the four-faced living creatures was its mobility, and this explains the wheels in Ezekiel's vision. No wheels were seen by Isaiah in his vision of the Divine Throne (Isa. VI) or by any other prophet. In the vision of the departing Merkabah Ezekiel read the impending departure of the Divine Presence from the Temple in Jerusalem and the fall of Judea.

This, however, was not the first omen of the approaching disaster. Thirty years earlier (see on I, 1), the Book of the Law had been found in the Temple unfolded, according to tradition, at the passage: The LORD will bring thee, and thy king whom thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation that thou hast not known. (Deut. xxviii, 36). The words were understood as a prediction of the fall of the Northern Kingdom and Judea. The affinity between the two occurrences—the vision of the departing Merkabah and the discovery of the Book of the Law—is obvious. Hence the prophet links the two by dating the former from the latter.

1-3. DATE AND PLACE OF THE VISION

1. in the thirtieth year. The vision of the Merkabah came to Ezekiel in the thirtieth year of the last Jubilee which occurred in the Land of Israel before the Babylonian exile. In that Jubilee year the Book of the Law was found in the Temple—an event interpreted as the first signal of the coming disaster (cf. II Kings xxii, 8-20). The vision of the departing Merkabah thirty years later was dated from the first omen (so the Targum) as giving the signal added confirmation.

in the fourth month. viz. Tammuz, an ominous month, since in it the first breaches in Jerusalem's walls were made (Kimchi).

the captives. lit. 'the captivity.' Lofthouse concludes from this term and the use of among that the exiles had by then formed themselves into a community.

the River Chebar. Some Rabbis identify Chebar with the Euphrates (Ber. R. xvi, 3). 'This was probably the artificial watercourse which started from the Euphrates above Babylon . . . The Sumerians called it the Euphrates of Nippur (Purat Nippur); the Babylonians and Jews, the great river (naru kabari, nehar kebar). Recent excavations at Nippur have discovered abundant evidence of Jewish settlements in the neighbourhood, from the fifteenth century B.C.E., and perhaps earlier, down to the seventh century C.E.' (Cooke).

the heavens were opened. On the date mentioned Ezekiel experienced the vision which began with the opening of the heavens, comparable with the drawing of the stage curtain.

and I saw visions of God. 2. In the fifth day of the month, which was the fifth year of king Jehioachin's captivity, 3. the word of the LORD came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar; and the hand of the LORD was there upon him. ¶4. And I looked, and, behold, a stormy wind came out of the north, a great cloud, with a fire flashing up, so that a brightness was round about it; and out of the midst thereof as the colour of electrum, out of the midst of the fire. 5. And out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance: they had the likeness of a man. 6. And every one of them had four faces, and every one of them had four wings. 7. And their feet were straight feet; and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot; and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass. 8. And they had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and as for the faces and wings of them four, 9. their wings were joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward.

visions of God. The Hebrew may signify 'Divine visions,' i.e. concerning God or devised by Him.

2. in the fifth day. Verses 2 f are in parenthesis. the fifth year . . . captivity. i.e. in 593 or 592. The vision occurred at a most appropriate time, because in that year a plot against the Babylonian invader was being planned by patriots in Jerusalem and some exiles in Babylon. Ezekiel, like Jeremiah, saw in this movement a rebellion against God's judgment and therefore a threat to the national existence. During the critical years which preceded the fall of Jerusalem, his addresses were in the nature of exhortations against this dangerous policy and a prediction of the final fall of Jerusalem.

3. the word of the LORD. The reference is to the message in chapter II which follows the vision of the Merkabah.

the hand of the LORD. The spirit of prophecy overwhelmed the prophet like the grasp of a mighty hand (Rashi).

4-14. THE FOUR LIVING CREATURES

4. a brightness was round about it. The black cloud was lit up by the fire.

electrum. The Hebrew chashmal 'denotes some kind of bright metal; it is a foreign word, and most likely identical with Akkadian esmaru, polished bronze, and the Egyptian chesmen (?), bronze' (Cooke).

out of the midst of the fire. Explanatory of out of the midst thereof.

5. out of the midst thereof. Referring to the fire in the preceding verse.

they had the likeness of a man. The bodies of the living creatures stood upright and were shaped like the human body, but some of the faces, as stated below, resembled those of various animals. The point that Ezekiel makes is that, despite their abnormal appearance, the supporters of the Merkabah were essentially human in form.

6. every one had four faces. Each of the four living creatures had the face of a man in front, of a lion on the right side, of an ox on the left side, and of an eagle behind.

7. straight feet. Feet is here employed in the wider sense of 'legs.' By straight is meant that they had no joints. These were not necessary, since the throne-bearers did not have to lie down or turn round (Rashi). No mention is made of the number of the feet.

a calf's foot. i.e. rounded, for turning smoothly in every direction (Lofthouse).

they sparkled. Descriptive of the feet, not the living creatures as a whole (cf. Dan. x, 6).

8. as for the faces and wings of them four. The faces and wings of the four living creatures were alike (Targum).

9. their wings were joined one to another. Two of the four wings of each creature were spread above the face and were joined on both sides to the wings of its neighbour, so that each face was hidden by the wings (Rashi).

10. As for the likeness of their faces, they had the face of a man; and they four had the face of a lion on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four had also the face of an eagle. 11. Thus were their faces; and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies. 12. And they went every one straight forward; whither the spirit was to go, they went; they turned not when they went. 13. As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like coals of fire, burning like the appearance of torches; it flashed up and down among the living creatures; and there was brightness to the fire, and out of the fire went forth lightning. 14. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning. ¶15. Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel at the bottom hard by the living creatures, at the four faces thereof. 16. The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl; and they four had one likeness; and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel within a wheel. 17. When they went, they went toward their four sides; they turned not when they went. 18. As for their rings, they were high and they were dreadful; and they four had their rings full of eyes round about. 19. And when the having a face on each side, it had no need to turn round when it desired to alter its course; the face towards the intended course moved forward in that direction.

11. and two covered their bodies. Two of the four wings attached to each creature were not stretched upward, but covered its body. With this description of the wings should be compared what Isaiah saw in his vision (vi, 2).

12. they went every one straight forward. Wherever they proceeded, they always moved forward, since each creature had a face in the appropriate direction (see on v. 9).

whither the spirit was to go, they went. The spirit is the Divine Will, which guided the movements of the creatures.

13. like coals of fire. A similar account of God's manifestation is given in Ps. xviii, 9.

there was brightness to the fire. This abnormal fire was brighter than natural fire (Rashi).

14. ran and returned. The creatures were not stationary, but galloped to and fro with the speed of lightning. The Hebrew word for lightning here is bazak, another form of barak, the letters z and r in Hebrew interchanging.

15-21. THE FOUR WHEELS

15. at the four faces thereof. To each four-faced creature there was one wheel.

16. the colour of a beryl. lit. 'eye of Tarshish,' i.e. Tartessus in Spain. The stone was a species of chrysolite, perhaps the topaz.

as it were a wheel within a wheel. One wheel was fixed into another crosswise, so that in whatever direction the creature turned the wheel revolved that way.

17. they went toward their four sides. The wheels, too, were turned to the four squares formed by the creatures. This explains the reason for having a wheel within a wheel as stated in the preceding verse.

18. their rings. i.e. the felloes of the wheels. they were high . . . dreadful. lit. 'and height was to them and fear to them.' Ehrlich sees a play of words on gobah (height) and gab (ring), and interprets the former as 'power of raising itself,' as mentioned in the next verse. dreadful. i.e. of awe-inspiring aspect.

had their rings full of eyes round about. The rings had eyes on each side, which directed the wheels on the route they were to go. 'The eye is the expression of life and intelligence (x, 12)' (Davidson).

living creatures went, the wheels went hard by them; and when the living creatures were lifted up from the bottom, the wheels were lifted up. 20 Whithersoever the spirit was to go, as the spirit was to go thither, so they went; and the wheels were lifted up beside them; for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 21. When those went, these went, and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up beside them; for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. ¶22. And over the heads of the living creatures there was the likeness of a firmament, like the colour of the terrible ice, stretched forth over their heads above. 23. And under the firmament were their wings conformable the one to the other; this one of them had two which covered, and that one of them had two which covered, their bodies. 24. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings like the noise of great waters, like the voice of the Almighty, a noise of tumult like the noise of a host; when they stood, they let down their wings. 25. For, when there was a voice above the firmament that was over their heads, as they stood, they let down their wings. ¶26. And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone; and upon the likeness of the throne was a likeness as the appearance of a man

19. The verse indicates that the wheel had no capacity for independent movement; it only moved with the creature.

20. as the spirit was to go thither, so they went. The creatures required no directing as to which route to take, because the Will of God was known to them and the will of the creatures was known to the wheels. Both creatures and wheels moved as intended by the Divine Presence in the Merkabah (Rashi).

the living creature. The singular is used in the collective sense as in x, 20; or 'Ezekiel would naturally see only one at a time with any clearness' (Lofthouse).

21. when those went, these went. When the creatures moved the wheels moved with them. The repetition emphasizes the co-ordination between the creatures and the wheels.

22-28. THE DIVINE MANIFESTATION

22. the likeness of a firmament. Over the heads of the creatures appeared a kind of flooring upon which rested the throne of the glory of the Lord (v. 26).

like the colour of the terrible ice. It was terrible by reason of its glittering brightness (Kimchi). The intention is possibly to suggest that the pale-bluish tint of the manifestation of God was the like of a paved work of sapphire stone, and the like of the very heaven for clearness (Exod. xxiv, 10).

23. which covered. lit. 'which covered them, viz. their bodies.' The phrase is repeated to make it clear that the description applies to each one of the creatures alike.

24. like the voice of the Almighty. Who spoke with a mighty voice on Mount Sinai (cf. Deut. v, 19). Others explain the phrase as identical with the voice of the LORD (Ps. xxix, 3 ff), symbolic of thunder.

host. lit. 'camp' of soldiers (cf. Joel ii, 5).

25. when there was a voice . . . they let down their wings. This supplements the preceding verse: the creatures stood still and lowered their wings when the voice of God addressed to His prophets was heard above the firmament (Targum).

26. a sapphire stone. Cf. Exod. xxiv, 10, quoted in the note on v. 22.

a likeness as the appearance of a man. Anthropomorphism is employed here by the prophet to portray the Divine Presence departing from the Temple in the Merkabah like an earthly king in his chariot setting out on a journey. That

And I saw as the colour of electrum, as the appearance of fire round about enclosing it, from the appearance of his loins and upward; and from the appearance of his loins and downward I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and there was brightness round about him. 28. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the LORD. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spoke.

his loins and upward. i.e. 'had the figure been really human' (Lofthouse).

about him. Relating to the appearance of a man (v. 26).

28. as the appearance of the bow. Just as the colours of the rainbow are not real but merely the effect of sunlight, so the likeness of the glory of the Lord as visualized by the prophet was only the reflection of the Divine Light (Malbim).

I heard a voice of one that spoke. Lofthouse well remarks that 'the reticence at the end of the verse is specially noteworthy after the fullness of the preceding details.'

CHAPTER III

12. a spirit lifted me up. In his vision the prophet felt himself lifted up and carried away to the main colony of his fellow-captives.

I heard behind me the voice of a great rushing. The loud sound of a rushing noise heard by the prophet was that of the Merkabah, which was present in the vision, but withdrew as Ezekiel left on his mission (Malbim). 'The prophet had been in the presence of the theophany (1) during all that has hitherto been narrated (II, 1-III, 12), and thus when he was lifted up and carried away it seemed to him that he left the theophany behind him' (Davidson).

Blessed be the glory of the LORD from His place. These words of praise are presumably uttered by the celestial beings and heard by the prophet as he turns away from the scene. Though the Merkabah is moving away—a foreboding of the departure of God's Presence from the Temple—the glory of the LORD yet remains in the place from which it is departing, since His place is universal (cf. Isa. vi, 3). Alternatively, as Malbim explains, His place may signify Jerusalem, which continues to be the abode of the Divine glory.

1. A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet.
Upon Shigionoth.
2. O LORD, I have heard the report of Thee, and am afraid;
O LORD, revive Thy work in the midst of
the years,
In the midst of the years make it known;
In wrath remember compassion.
3. God cometh from Teman,
And the Holy One from mount Paran.

His glory covereth the heavens,

CAP. III. א

א 2 תַּפְלָה לְהַבְקִיךָ הַנְּבִיא עַל שִׁינֹתָ: יְהוָה שָׁמַעְתִּי שְׁמִיעָה
יִרְאֵתִי יְהוָה פָּעִלְךָ בְּקֶרֶב שָׁנִים תִּיָּדוּ בְּקֶרֶב שָׁנִים
3 תוֹדִיעַ בְּרָמּוֹ רַחֵם תִּזְכּוֹר: אֱלֹהִים מִתֵּימָן יָבֹא וְקָדוֹשׁ
מִתֵּרֶפְאֵהֶן סֵלָה כִּסֵּה שָׁמַיִם הוֹדוּ וְתִהְיוּ מְלֵאָה

Nothing is known of Habakkuk outside the book which bears his name. Legend tried to repair the omission, but these traditions are too conjectural to serve as reliable guides. The evidence of the book itself, and particularly the description of the Babylonian advance in Chapter I, suggests that Habakkuk prophesied towards the close of the seventh century B.C.E.

Chapter III is an ode, in which the prophet, begging God to intervene on His people's behalf, visualizes his petition as granted in a graphic picture of the march of God and His retinue to overthrow the enemy. Driver has described it as 'a lyric ode which, for sublimity of poetic conception and splendour of diction, ranks with the finest which Hebrew poetry has produced.' As in the case of the Haftorah for the First Day, this is a description of a theophany—this time a future manifestation of God. For this reason, and also because the language in places recalls the revelation at Sinai, it has been chosen as the prophetic reading for the anniversary of מתן תורה

It should be noted that the 'Habakkuk Commentary' discovered among the Dead Sea scrolls in 1947 deals only with the first two chapters of the book.

In some Congregations the hymn יציב פתגם is chanted after the first verse of the Haftorah.

20. but the LORD. The preceding verses had taunted those who placed their confidence in the dumb stone of idols. The prophet now contrasts the omnipotence of God with the impotence of the idol.

keep silence. The silence of hushed expectancy of God's intervention. The verse is the link with the next chapter.

CHAPTER III

1. SUPERScription

a prayer. Actually, only v. 2 is a petition, and the rest of the chapter gives a vivid description of a theophany, in which God appears as a warrior armed with the accoutrements of battle and with an entourage of powerful followers. Its theme is the infinite might of God, which provides assurance that His Will must prevail. Applied to the context of the Book, it signifies the certain doom of tyrannical Babylon.

Shigionoth. Cf. the superscription of Ps. vii. The term has been defined as 'a dithyrambic poem in ecstatic wandering rhythms.'

2. THE PROPHET'S SUPPLICATION

I have heard. He speaks in the name of the people, as is evident in v. 14. Recalling the acts of God in the redemption of Israel from Egypt, they were afraid, even as were their ancestors who experienced them (Exod. xiv, 31).

The ancient hills do bow;
His goings are as of old.

The curtains of the land of Midian do salvation is coming. Teman is north-west of Edom. From Teman, God will proceed northwards to the Land of Israel.

Paran. West of Edom, between the Sinai Peninsula and Kadesh-barnea, along the Gulf of Akaba. The route is reminiscent of the Revelation described in Deut. xxxiii, 2.

Selah. A term found elsewhere only in the Psalms. It is now understood to be a musical direction.

glory . . . praise. Heaven and earth reflect His glory, as He comes to judge the earth. The thunderstorm, the quaking of the earth, the shuddering of the mountains are testimonies to His Omnipotence and Majesty.

6. to tremble. His mere glance is sufficient to make the nations 'leap' (so lit.) in terror.

do bow. As they are about to sink down in the earthquake.

His goings are as of old. God pursues the same course as in ancient times at the exodus. Wade suggests as a possible translation: 'They (the mountain ridges) are everlasting pathways for Him.'

7. Cushan. A neighbour of Midian in the Sinai Peninsula. As happened at the redemption of Israel from Egypt, neighbouring peoples were overwhelmed with terror.

curtains. i.e. the tent-hangings in which the inhabitants lived.

8. against the rivers. To outward appearance it would seem that the Divine wrath is directed against the rivers and sea which dry up at His manifestation. In fact, of course, that is the setting of His judgment upon the nations.

horses . . . chariots. i.e. the storm-clouds in which God is represented as 'riding' (cf. Isa. xix, 1; Ps. civ, 3).

9. Thy bow . . . bare. The bow is bared of its cover when it is put to use. The simile is of the flashing thunderbolts which God hurls upon the earth to herald His coming.

sworn are the rods of the word. The three words, shebuoth mattoth omer, remain an unsolved enigma. Dr. H. St. John Thackeray ingeniously conjectured that they are not part of the text, but a marginal note that in the system of reading the Pentateuch in the course of three years, this chapter was the haftorah (prophetical lesson) on the Festival of Shabuoth, as well as the Sedrah Mattoth and Emor. As part of the text, other translations are: 'the oaths which Thou spakest to the tribes' (Jerome), which Pusey accepts and explains as 'the oath, the word or promise of God, to His people was that they should be saved from their enemies'; 'chastisements sworn according to promise'; 'sevens of chastisements are the decree,' 'seven' signifying what is complete; 'chastisements sworn according to promise (or decree).' This last rendering seems to fit the context best, and may be an allusion to Deut. xxxii, 40 ff.

Thou dost cleave. The torrential downpour which accompanies the lightning-flashes has the effect of cutting channels in the earth and filling them with water.

10. The mountains have seen Thee, and they tremble;
The tempest of waters floweth over;
The deep uttereth its voice,
And lifteth up its hands on high.
11. The sun and moon stand still in their habitation;
At the light of Thine arrows as they go,
At the shining of Thy glittering spear.
12. Thou marchest through the earth in indignation,
Thou threshest the nations in anger.
13. Thou art come forth for the deliverance of Thy people,
For the deliverance of Thine anointed;
Thou woundest the head out of the house of the wicked,
Uncovering the foundation even unto the neck. Selah
14. Thou hast stricken through with his own rods the head of his rulers,
That come as a whirlwind to scatter me;
Whose rejoicing is as to devour the poor secretly.
15. Thou hast trodden the sea with Thy horses,
The foaming of mighty waters.
16. When I heard, mine inward parts trembled,

11. the sun and moon stand still. Eclipsed by the dazzling majesty of God, the light of the sun and moon has the appearance of having been withdrawn. The Targum sees in the verse an allusion to the standing still of the sun and moon in Gibeon (Josh. x, 12 f).

at the light, etc. Better with Wade: 'Thine arrows go abroad, for brightness the lightning of Thy spear.' Although the heavenly luminaries give no light, the earth is illumined by Divine radiance (cf. v. 4).

12. threshest the nations. As the ox treads the corn to separate the grain from the chaff, so God marches through the earth to punish the sinful peoples and bring salvation to Israel.

13. Thine anointed. The parallelism shows that Israel is intended, 'the kingdom of priests' (cf. Ps. XXVIII, 8).

Thou woundest . . . wicked. The enemy is likened to a house from which the top has been struck away (cf. Amos ix, 1).

even unto the neck. Having used the word head, the prophet continues his figurative language, and the phrase signifies the top of the building after its roof has been removed. The house will be completely demolished, so that the foundations are exposed.

that I should wait, etc. A difficult clause, best explained by Driver as follows: 'that I should rest (waiting calmly) for the day of trouble (i.e. the day of judgment described in vs. 3-15, which, though it may end in Israel's deliverance, is nevertheless fraught with terror for those who witness it), when it cometh up against the people (viz. the Chaldeans) who troop (cf. Gen. xlix, 19) upon us.' The day of judgment is personified and spoken of as coming like an armed invader.

17. though the fig-tree shall not blossom. The prophet thinks of possible consequences of a serious nature to the Land of Israel which will accompany the overthrow of the enemy: failure of the crops, resulting in famine, and loss of cattle. How these direful effects will be caused is not stated, but probably the prophet has in mind the devastation of warfare.

18. yet I will rejoice. In spite of the severe hardships, the prophet, speaking for the people, will rejoice in God, confident that they are only temporary and will be followed by His blessing.

with my string-music. Or, 'on my stringed instruments.' In the Temple, the service was of antiphonal character, being led by the priests, who were answered by the Levites with musical instruments. The affirmation of faith which concludes the Book has been woven into the national characteristics of the Jewish people and is largely responsible for their survival.

CHAPTER LV

CAP. LV נה

6. Seek ye the LORD while He may be found, Call ye upon Him while He is near;

7. Let the wicked forsake his way,
And the man of iniquity his thoughts;
And let him return unto the LORD, and He will have compassion upon him,
And to our God, for He will abundantly pardon.

8. For My thoughts are not your thoughts, Neither are your ways My ways, saith the LORD.

9. For as the heavens are higher than the earth,
So are My ways higher than your ways,
And My thoughts than your thoughts.

10. For as the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven,
And returneth not thither,
Except it water the earth,
And make it bring forth and bud,
And give seed to the sower and bread to the eater;

11. So shall My word be that goeth forth out of My mouth:
It shall not return unto Me void,
Except it accomplish that which I please,
And make the thing whereto I sent it prosper.

12. For ye shall go out with joy,
And be led forth with peace;

the mountains . . . hands. The people in their joyful mood will feel all Nature joining them in exultation (cf. Ps. xcvi, 8). Others read in the words a description of the transformation that will take place in Nature (cf. v. 13). The bare mountains and desolate hills will be clothed with luxuriant vegetation, and all the trees of the field will produce rich fruits.

This Haftorah, which is read at the Afternoon Service on all Fast Days with the exception of Yom Kippur, opens with a call for repentance and continues with a promise of salvation, both fitting themes for days of self-affliction. The Haftorah is recited by him who is called third to the reading of the Law.

6 f. A call to repentance.

6. while He may be found . . . while He is near. In the 'acceptable time,' in the 'day of salvation,' when the sinner humbles himself, forsakes his evil ways and returns to the Lord
(cf. the following verse).

7. forsake his way . . . his thoughts. Penitence to be effective must be complete, in thought as well as in deed.

* Additional Haftorah as referred to on title page.

13. Instead of the thorn shall come up the cypress,
And instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle;
And it shall be to the LORD for a memorial,
For an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

CHAPTER LVI

1. Thus saith the LORD:
Keep ye justice, and do righteousness;
For My salvation is near to come,
And My favour to be revealed.
2. Happy is the man that doeth this,
And the son of man that holdeth fast by it:
That keepeth the sabbath from profaning it,
And keepeth his hand from doing any evil.
3. Neither let the alien,
That hath joined himself to the LORD, speak, saying:
'The LORD will surely separate me from His people';
Neither let the eunuch say:
'Behold, I am a dry tree.'
4. For thus saith the LORD
Concerning the eunuchs that keep My sabbaths,
And choose the things that please Me,
And hold fast by My covenant:
5. Even unto them will I give in My house
And within My walls a monument and a memorial

13. The transformation of Nature, evident on the road from Babylon to Zion, will remain an everlasting memorial to the marvellous deeds God had wrought for His people.

a memorial. Of His power and greatness. The Rabbis regarded the thorn and the brier as representing the wicked, and the cypress and the myrtle as symbolizing the righteous. In the new Jerusalem the former will be replaced by the latter; the ungodly will perish and the righteous flourish.

CHAPTER LVI

1-8. The reward in store for all who keep justice, righteousness and observance of the Sabbath, irrespective of whether they are Israelites, eunuchs, foreigners or proselytes.

1 f. A call to justice, righteousness and Sabbath observance.

1. near to come . . . revealed. To those who act justly and practise righteousness.

CAP. VIII ח

13. I will utterly consume them, saith the LORD ;
There are no grapes on the vine,
Nor figs on the fig-tree,
And the leaf is faded ;
And I gave them that which they transgress.
14. 'Why do we sit still ?

And let us be cut off there ;

And given us water of gall to drink,
Because we have sinned against the LORD.

As befits this day of mourning for the destruction of the Temple and the overthrow of the Jewish State, the Haftorah is a collection of some of Jeremiah's gloomiest prophecies of doom, completely unrelieved by words of comfort or promise. Invasion, siege and famine, defeat, devastation and exile, death and lament are his themes, together with a scathing denunciation of that breakdown in the moral life of the nation which for him was a complete explanation of its political eclipse. Jeremiah lived to see the destruction of Judea and Jerusalem which he had so clearly foreseen; and it is as fitting that his book should be chosen to provide the prophetic reading for the Ninth of Ab as that his Lamentations should be the Megillah for the day.

The Haftorah, with the exception of the last two verses, is sung with the same elegiac intonation which is used for Lamentations. It is recited by him who is called third to the reading of the Law.

13. and I gave them, etc. Better, 'that which I gave them (viz. the Torah) they transgress' (so Rashi). Kimchi renders: 'and what I gave them (viz. the produce of their fields) shall pass away from them (to the enemy).' This is adopted by A.V. and R.V. and is preferable.

* Additional Haftorah as referred to on title page.

15. We looked for peace, but no good came;
And for a time of healing, and behold terror !

16. The snorting of his horses is heard from Dan;

At the sound of the neighing of his strong ones

The whole land trembleth ;

For they are come, and have devoured the land and all that is in it,

The city and those that dwell therein.

17. For, behold, I will send serpents, basilisks, among you,

Which will not be charmed ;

And they shall bite you, saith the LORD.

18. Though I would take comfort against sorrow,

My heart is faint within me.

19. Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people

From a land far off :

'Is not the LORD in Zion ?

Is not her King in her ?'—

'Why have they provoked Me with their graven images,

And with strange vanities ?'—

20. 'The harvest is past, the summer is ended,

And we are not saved.'

21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I seized with anguish ;

14. why do we sit still? So will the inhabitants of the countryside speak when the enemy attacks, with the probable meaning that in the fortified cities they will at least be able to sell their lives dearly. Metzudath David explains: '(The people will say), "Why . . . cities," to which the prophet rejoins, "And there (too) we will be cut off"—punishment cannot be escaped, for though destruction will come ostensibly from the enemy, in fact it is the LORD our God (Who) hath cut us off.' which will not be charmed. No charm will avail against them; so will the enemy also be implacable.

18–23. LAMENT OVER THE PEOPLE'S PLIGHT

18. though I would take comfort. lit. 'my source of brightness in,' i.e. 'Oh that I could find a gleam of brightness in (this time) of anguish!'

exiles: in captivity they acknowledge the might of God, and ask wonderingly why Zion has been so degraded.

why have they . . . vanities? God's reply.

20. The verse is possibly a proverbial saying: time rushes by and yet we are not saved. R.V. margin agrees with Kimchi: 'The harvest is past, and the ingathering of summer fruits is ended.' One naturally looks forward to these seasons as providing essential food-supplies; but they have passed without leaving provision for the future.

21. for the hurt . . . seized with anguish. A more literal translation would be: 'For the shattering of the daughter of my people have I been shattered (in heart).' It should be noted that although Jeremiah incessantly rebuked and upbraided the people and foretold the inevitable catastrophe, he fully identifies himself with them in their trials.

I am black. i.e. in mourning.

22. is there no balm in Gilead? Metaphorical for, are there no prophets and righteous men among them to heal their spiritual sickness? The phrase has become proverbial. Gilead was famous for its balm from early times (cf. Gen. xxxvii, 25).

1. Oh that I were in the wilderness,
In a lodging-place of wayfaring men,
That I might leave my people,
And go from them !
For they are all adulterers,
An assembly of treacherous men.

And they are grown mighty in the land, but

For they proceed from evil to evil,
And Me they know not,

And trust ye not in any brother;
For every brother acteth subtly,
And every neighbour goeth about with slanders.
4. And they deceive every one his neighbour,
And truth they speak not;
They have taught their tongue to speak lies,
They weary themselves to commit iniquity.

oh that my head were waters. Would that my head were turned into liquid which I could use as a source of tears!

CHAPTER IX

1-8. THE NATION'S CORRUPTION

1. wilderness . . . lodging-place. Though desolate and dreary, these are still better than the city with its vices, which the prophet proceeds to enumerate.

an assembly of treacherous men. The Hebrew word atsereth may signify any 'assembly,' as here. It is more usually the term for a gathering for some religious purpose, e.g. to celebrate a festival. Malbim accordingly explains: even when they assemble to pray they are treacherous.

2. their tongue, their bow of falsehood. R.V. is better: 'and they bend their tongue (as it were) their bow for falsehood.' As the archer bends his bow to aim, so do they make their tongue ready to shoot (and kill) with the arrows of falsehood.

but not for truth. They have sought and obtained power, but not to promote law and justice in the land.

and Me they know not. All sin is eventually traced back to wilful ignorance of God (cf. Judg.

ii, 10; Hos. iv, 1). Possibly know is used in the sense of 'have regard to' (cf. Ps. i, 6).

3. With this verse, cf. Mic. viii, 5 f. 'The mutual distrust, which had already in the time of Hezekiah broken up families and divided the nearest friends, and made a man's worst enemy those of his own household, had now reached the highest degree of intensity' (Stanley).

acteth subtly. With guile; the Hebrew akob yaakob is doubtless an allusion to Gen. xxvii, 36.

4. they have taught their tongue to speak lies. Man is naturally truthful and upright, and must school himself to falsehood before it comes easily to him. See the Hebrew prayer beginning, 'O my God, the soul which Thou gavest me is pure, Authorized Daily Prayer Book, p. 5. Ehrlich and others explain the verb taught in the sense of 'accustomed.'

they weary themselves to commit iniquity. It is so much easier to live uprightly and obedient to God's will, but they labour and toil in order to sin!

5. thy habitation. Addressed to the people as a whole.

through deceit. Knowledge of God, Who is holy and recoils from everything unjust and impure, cannot be reconciled with a life of deceit; therefore they deliberately reject knowledge of Him.

6. Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts:
Behold, I will smelt them, and try them;
For how else should I do,
Because of the daughter of My people?

7. Their tongue is a sharpened arrow,
It speaketh deceit;
One speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth,
But in his heart he layeth wait for him.

8. Shall I not punish them for these things?
Saith the LORD;
Shall not My soul be avenged
On such a nation as this?

9. For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing,
And for the pastures of the wilderness a lamentation,
Because they are burned up, so that none passeth through,
And they hear not the voice of the cattle;
Both the fowl of the heavens and the beast
Are fled, and gone.

10. And I will make Jerusalem heaps,
A lair of jackals;
And I will make the cities of Judah a desolation,
Without an inhabitant.

11. Who is the wise man, that he may understand this?
And who is he to whom the mouth of the LORD hath spoken, that he may declare
it?
Wherefore is the land perished
And laid waste like a wilderness, so that none passeth through?

6. I will smelt them. As the silver is purified from its dross by smelting, so I will purify the nation by making them pass through the crucible of suffering.

try. i.e. test, to find out whether the dross has been removed.

for how else . . . My people? I have no other choice, says God. I cannot leave them in their sin, for they were intended to be a holy people; nor can I utterly destroy them, for they are My people: hence I must purge them by tribulation (Kimchi).

7. a sharpened arrow. The kethib, shochet, means 'a slaying arrow.' The kere, shacut, signifies 'beaten (with a hammer)'; cf. beaten gold (1 Kings x, 16).

8. shall not My soul be avenged? This is an anthropomorphism: just retribution for sins which, as it were, affront God's purity and holiness is spoken of as Divine 'vengeance.'

9-15. THE COMING PUNISHMENT

A detailed description of the destruction and desolation which will overtake Judea, and the cause of the catastrophe: the abandonment of God's service for idolatry.

the fowl of the heavens. Even they have fled. The verbs in the verse are prophetic perfects.

10. Jerusalem . . . the cities of Judah. Desolation will also overtake the cities, and jackals will haunt the ruins of the buildings.

a lair of jackals. A favourite simile of Jeremiah.

11. who is the wise man, etc. Considering the frequency with which Jeremiah reiterated his message that idolatry must lead to just such a destruction as is here described, the question is probably rhetorical and expresses his fervent prayer: would they were wise enough to understand the cause of their downfall, and acknowledge the truth of God's warning! Possibly, too, his words are a tilt against the false prophets who sought the reasons for the nation's disasters and their remedies in anything but the truth.

12. which I set before them. Originally at Sinai and subsequently in the exhortations of the prophets.

therein. viz. in My law.

13. But have walked after the stubbornness of their own heart,
And after the Baalim, which their fathers taught them.

14. Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel:
Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood,
And give them water of gall to drink.

15. I will scatter them also among the nations,
Whom neither they nor their fathers have known;
And I will send the sword after them,
Till I have consumed them.

16. Thus saith the LORD of hosts:
Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come;
And send for the wise women, that they may come;

17. And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us,
That our eyes may run down with tears,
And our eyelids gush out with waters.

18. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion:

'How are we undone!
We are greatly confounded, because we have forsaken the land,
Because our dwellings have cast us out.'

19. Yea, hear the word of the LORD, O ye women,
And let your ear receive the word of His mouth,
And teach your daughters wailing,
And every one her neighbour lamentation:

13. their fathers taught them. Sin begets sin; the present generation was suffering, partly at least, through the evil heritage they had received from former generations. It is in this sense that Exod. xx, 5, must be understood: the iniquity of the fathers leads the following generations to sin, and this naturally brings its punishment.

14. wormwood . . . water of gall. Metaphorical for the bitterness of affliction.

15. till I have consumed them. i.e. most of them (Kimchi). Like his fellow prophets, Jeremiah believed that Israel would never be wholly destroyed.

16-21. WAILING AND LAMENT

16. the mourning women. Professional mourners; they were generally women who followed the bier of a dead person and lamented his death in elegiac measures. 'This custom continues to the present day in Judea, that women

v. 23. למדנהאי ומשפט

21. Speak: Thus saith the LORD. 'The very abruptness of this break gives it force and point' (Streane).

which none gathereth. Either through fear of leaving his hiding place (Metzudath David), or because of the multitude of the slain and the fewness of the survivors.

22-23. KNOWLEDGE OF GOD IS NEEDED ABOVE ALL

Neither wisdom, strength nor wealth is a ground for pride. One may justly be proud only of knowing and understanding that the Lord is the God of love, justice and righteousness, and that these are His prime demands upon His creatures.

22. the wise man. Without the knowledge of God human wisdom is futile. The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom (Ps. cxl, 10; cf. Prov. ix, 10).

might. The only might of which man may truly boast is the moral strength to withstand temptation. 'Who is mighty? He who subdues his passions' (Aboth).

riches. Wealth cannot deliver a man from his fate, and material riches are inferior to spiritual treasures.

23. knoweth Me. 'Having acquired this knowledge, he will then be determined always to seek lovingkindness, judgment and righteousness and thus to imitate the ways of God' (Maimonides).

mercy. Or, 'lovingkindness' (A.V., R.V., Hebrew chesed). This precedes justice and righteousness. Elsewhere in Scripture it even precedes "truth." 'Truth, justice and righteousness must all be spoken and acted in lovingkindness; otherwise, they cease to be truth, justice and righteousness' (Hertz).

BLESSINGS BEFORE AND AFTER THE HAFTORAH

ברכות ההפטרה

Before reading the Lesson from the Prophets, the following is said by the Maftir :—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast chosen good prophets, and hast found pleasure in their words which were spoken in truth.

Blessed art thou, O Lord, who hast chosen the Law, and Moses thy servant, and Israel thy people, and prophets of truth and righteousness.

[Sephardim conclude each Haftorah with the words :—

Our Redeemer! The Lord of Hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.]

After the Lesson from the Prophets, the Maftir says the following :—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, Rock of all worlds, righteous through all generations, O faithful God, who sayest and doest, who speakest and fulfillest, all whose words are truth and righteousness. Faithful art thou, O Lord our God, and faithful are thy words, and not one of thy words shall return void, for thou art a faithful and merciful God and King. Blessed art thou, O Lord, God, who art faithful in all thy words.

Have mercy upon Zion, for it is the home of our life, and save her that is grieved in spirit speedily, even in our days. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who makest Zion joyful through her children.

Gladden us, O Lord our God, with Elijah the prophet, thy servant, and with the kingdom of the house of David, thine anointed. Soon may he come and rejoice our hearts. Suffer not a stranger to sit upon his throne, nor let others any longer inherit his glory; for by thy holy name thou didst swear unto him, that his light should not be quenched for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the Shield of David.

For the Law, for the divine service, for the prophets, and for this Sabbath day, which thou, O Lord our God, hast given us for holiness and for rest, for honour and for glory,—for all these we thank and bless thee, O Lord our God, blessed be thy name by the mouth of every living being continually and for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest the Sabbath.

CHAPTER XX

1. And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2. Moreover, thou shalt say to the children of Israel: ¶ Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death; the people of the land shall stone him with stones. 3. I also will set My face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people, because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile My sanctuary.

rightless. Thus, the Romans had originally one word, 'hostis' for both stranger and enemy. According to Germanic Law the stranger was 'rechtsunfähig'. See on xxiv, 22.

thou shalt love him as thyself. Do to him what you would wish others to do unto you, if you were a stranger in a strange land. See Additional Note, 'Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbour As Thyself,' p. 563.

35. in judgment. Not an unnecessary repetition of the same phrase in v. 15. God abhors unrighteousness, i.e. dishonesty, in business. 'For all that do such things are an abomination unto the LORD' (Deut. xxv, 16).

36. ephah. The standard dry measure; somewhat larger than a bushel.

hin. A measure for liquids; a sixth of the ephah, about 1½-1¾ gallons.

brought you out. God had delivered the Israelites from a land where they had suffered from injustice; let them not practise injustice in their dealings with one another.

37. I am the LORD. Thus this remarkable series of precepts ends on the exalted note with which it opened; v. 2.

CHAPTER XX. PENALTIES FOR UNLAWFUL MARRIAGES, MOLECH WORSHIP AND NECROMANCY

This chapter is a natural pendant to xviii and xix, and enumerates the acts that would debase Israel's life, and altogether destroy its ideal of Holiness. In an organized society, it is essential to institute penalties for the violation of enactments that are vital to its existence. Ruthless measures were indispensable against the abominable vices and hideous practices which Israel was in danger of transplanting into its own life from its Canaanite and Egyptian neighbours. Flaming jealousy for Israel's mission of Holiness, and gigantic energy on the part of its ethical guides and religious teachers, could alone have overcome the bestialities of heathendom.

Unsparring condemnation of the crimes did not, however, invariably lead to the unsparring punishment of everyone suspected of them. In Jewish Law, the presumption of innocence is given to the accused, and capital punishment requires two eye-witnesses to the premeditated commission of the crime. This alone rendered actual conviction in such cases a rare thing.

1-5. PENALTIES FOR MOLECH WORSHIP

stone him. Stoning goes back to hoary Semitic antiquity, and was prescribed for crimes that demanded punishments with a deterrent effect upon the people. In later ages, the original method was modified to render it more humane. The Talmud tells that, in capital offences, delinquents were drugged in order to deaden the senses before execution.

3. set My face. See xvii, 10.

will cut him off. This verse refers to the case of a man who performs the atrocity in private, so
